Survival: Third World Organization

By EARL BROWN
Black Affairs Staff

The major theme exonerated from the recent Third World Organization Affair was survival. Traditionally students have been complemented by their organization, CCEBS and BCP are examples of this relationship. Yet in view of our historical struggles, we have problems. Similar to the great Poverty Program, we have suffered from cutbacks, and lack of interest. In order to avoid extinction, groups are asking for your support.

Analyzing the struggles that have appeared in the past, there were less than fifty Black students at UMass in 1967. This is not taking into consideration the entire 3rd World Community. At the same time, the only organizations that developed were the Steering Committee, Afro Am Society, Drum, Harambee and CCEBS. In a period of five years, the Black student population had climbed to approximately 600. The CCEBS program had increased their effort to allow other Third World Students in the program. The current W.E.B. DuBois Dept. (known as the Afro Am Dept.) was in its first year of operation. The Bilingual Program (BCP) was started to meet the needs of Latino students. The initial effort generated in the late 60's also led toward groups as BMCP, and Nummo News. Groups operating prior to 1973, were complemented by the Black Science Society, Black Social Science, Eco Latino, John Adam Third World Room, Coolidge Upper Third World Room, Central Third World Center, Sylvan Third World Center, and Grassroots (presently Nummo Newspaper). Thus, the big question we have to ask in 1977, can we continue the struggle?

The struggles did not occur without the pains of physical and mental stress from many brothers and sisters. The creation of the W.E.B. DuBois Center came about in 1972, because Black students took over New Africa House (formally Mills House) to bring Black culture into existence. In fact, no organization has come into existence without some type of fight. The Collegian had to be taken over twice in the 70's to establish Nummo and Black Affairs. In bringing our situation to the present, the Latino community in the Spring semester had three heated confrontations with the Student Senate in keeping their culture alive. Yet aside from the general struggles two principle problems remain. The first relates to cutbacks. This area has severely hampered the progress of many organizations. In many cases some programs have been deleted from groups' budgets. Another problem associated with budget cuts, is the fact that certain Student Government Association groups control certain monies. This community has been slow in tapping the resources available to us. Secondly, the biggest problem facing all groups is participation by their constituents. These groups are functioning, but it is not at 100 per cent capacity. Are students interested in a secondary education, or are they satisfied with the traditional education experience?

In summation, Dick Gregory said "you students have a big job ahead of you." In relating this to the Third World Students at UMass (and the five College area), have a personal vedette. We will survive culturally (which include educational, politically-organizationally, and socially), or we will gradually phrase out of the picture. Remember what happened to the brother who started Watergate. This could happen to the rest of us.

Just Because
Who told you that you have to love me
Just because we met in parking lot of many cars
Just because we ran through the empty spaces where cars were absent
Just because
I fantasized you as a God and me as a Goddess running from world to world
Just because at the break of day
I found my yesterday sitting on a shelf in the back of my mind and can't tell if we were a dream
Just because I have shouted my love for you to every heavenly star and they shouted love back to me
Just because
I wished you to be a star
so I could then shout my love for you
Just because
I live for you to love me
Wish that you would not
Just because
You have told yourself

The Revolutionary Student Brigade presents,

National speaking tour

The Revolutionary Student Brigade presents a National Speaking Tour this Tuesday (Oct. 4) on the UMass campus. All representatives of the press are invited to a press conference at 5:00 p.m. in room 413A of the Student Union. The speakers will be:

Al Canfora — wounded on May 4, 1970 at Kent State University and a leader in the struggle to move the gym today.

Ed Whitfield — Black student leader involved in 1969 takeover of administration building at Cornell University demanding a Black Studies Department.

Cliff Cornfield — national member of the Revolutionary Student Brigade, on why we need a young communist organization to lead youth in the struggle for a new world.

They will be available for interviews to answer any questions.

What were the 60's all about? What was behind the anti-war and Black Liberation struggles? What are the lessons from those movements that we need to point the way forward today?

What are the struggles facing youth and all the American people in 1977?

The tour will deal with all these questions — and why the next important step for youth who want to see a change in this country is the convention being held at Kent State this October 22. Why we need a young communist organization for youth to once again stand in the forefront of the fight for a new world.

Robert Chambliss moved for protection

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. [UPI] — A man charged in the 1963 church bombing that claimed the lives of four young black girls has been moved to an isolated section of the county jail as a precautionary measure.

"We didn't have any harassment yet, but there was a slight incident while he was talking to his attorney," said Lionel Bragan, chief correctional officer. "Someone yelled something at him.

"But we haven't had any serious incidents. We just don't let anyone in long enough or let him out long enough to have one."

Robert Chambliss, 73, has been in the jail since late Monday when he was arrested on four counts of first-degree murder for the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church.

Tuesday afternoon, when Chambliss was escorted to an interview with his lawyer, black prisoners in the jail's gym learned he was in a nearby room and jeered.

Chambliss showers alone and his meals are taken to his cell, while other prisoners eat with prisoners on their blocks.

"That's not good jail policy," Bragan said, "but it's the best way in this case. We haven't had any problem and I don't want any."

Chambliss' eighth-floor cell is in an area normally reserved for women.

Swedes warm to Andrew Young

America's UN Ambassador, Andrew Young, who accused the Swedes of being "racists" a few months ago, has been invited to Sweden next month for what promises to be one of the warmest overseas receptions he has ever received.

It turns out that Mr. Young's comment that the Swedes treat blacks as badly as they are treated in the New York borough of Queens offended a lot more people in Queens than it did in Sweden.

While Queens rose in outrage, the Swedes kept the whole thing in perspective. They realized that Mr. Young's comments came when he was being pressed by a reporter, and both the Swedish press and government played down Mr. Young's remark that the Swedes are "terribly racist."

As a Swedish diplomat explains it, many Swedes have a warm place in their hearts for Martin Luther King, with whom Mr. Young was closely associated during the civil-rights struggle in the South.

"It sounds funny, but the comment about racism actually helped him in a way in Sweden," the diplomat continued. "It put him on the map ... and, of course, what he said turned out to be true."

The diplomat was referring to an incident which occurred a few days after Mr. Young made his controversial remark. In the city of Sodertalje, south of Stockholm, a number of immigrants from Turkey were assaulted by a Swedish youth gang claiming that the foreign immigrants were taking jobs away from them.

DACCA, Bangladesh: Military officials question two hostages released from a hijacked jet yesterday. Carloe Wells Karabian (R) told reporters she thought she was being taken out to be shot. (UPI)

Five hostages freed from Japanese plane

DACCA, Bangladesh [AP] – A band of masked hijackers holding a Japanese jetliner full of hostages freed five passengers, ordered breakfast and seemed ready for a third day's siege today after the Japanese government asked for more time to meet their demands.

Counting the five hijackers, 151 persons were reported still on the plane.

One of those released early yesterday, former Hollywood actress Carole Wells Karabian, said the terrorists were armed with guns and grenades and had been "terribly rough" at first but then relaxed somewhat after negotiations began.

She said the hostages were denied food for the first 24 hours and were not even allowed to go to the toilet.

Those still on the plane besides the hijackers were 14 crew members and 132 passengers, including 10 other Americans.

A spokesman for the Japanese cabinet said the government was trying to round up one of the hijackers' ransom demands in New York – 60,000 U.S. $100 bills, a total of $6 million.

The other demand was for the release from Japanese jails of nine prisoners, "comrades", most of them known terrorists. The spokesman said the government was canvassing the prisoners, but two reportedly refused to accept the offer of freedom.

After a cabinet meeting last night, the spokesman said the demands could not possibly be met before this afternoon.

The hijackers, identified as members of the ultraleftist Japanese Red Army, have threatened to begin killing their hostages one by one, starting with California banker John Gabriel, unless the ransom money and the prisoners are delivered.

They had set a deadline of midnight 2 p.m. EDT yesterday, but late yesterday a spokesman for Japan Air Lines – JAL – spokesman said the gunmen asked that breakfast be delivered to the plane Friday morning.

Asked whether this meant they were extending the deadline, the spokesman replied, "You might as well take it that way."

Earlier yesterday, the gunmen had finally relented and ordered that food and toilet tissue be brought to the-DC8.

The JAL plane, commandeered Wednesday morning on the Bombay-Bangkok leg of a flight from Paris to Tokyo, sat in the stifling heat and humidity of Dacca's international airport.

House members endorse neutron bomb research

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The House yesterday overwhelmingly endorsed research into a neutron weapon that kills people but does not destroy property.

The decision came on a 297-109 defeat of an amendment that would have banned such research by the Energy Research and Development Administration.

The House went on to pass the ERDA bill, 330-78, and sent it to the Senate. President Carter asked for the research authority, stating he would decide after further study whether to propose development of the weapon.

Democrats who stood together in opposition to such past armament controversies as the B-1 bomber split on the neutron issue with 176 voting against the amendment authored by Rep. Thedore Weiss, D-N.Y. Republicans were in nearly solid opposition to Weiss, with only 10 voting in his favor.

The weapon can be developed as a warhead on an artillery shell or carried as a bomb.

Armed Services Committee members Reps. Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., and Bob Carr, D-Mich., who stood with Weiss in the fight earlier this year in which the B-1 bomber was killed, defended the weapon as not only a deterrent against a Russian land attack in Europe but also as less destructive than a nuclear bomb.

New group helps women in business

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] – The new U.S. Small Business Administration director in New England thinks women need help to succeed in business. He doesn't like to say why, but will admit it's because male busines people are biased against them.

"I like to think it's becoming less true, I have a responsibility to see it become less true," Stanley Weinberg said. "I want to reorganize our priorities to give women that extra bit of help they need to overcome the attitudes of the business community."

The SBA should "help drive a wedge into the thinking of the businessman" so women can move into business and help create jobs and stimulate the economy, he said. Weinberg added he will "make special efforts to find the needs of women interested in going into business and to meet those needs."

The SBA is a federal agency established to work with the small business community. It provides low business development loans, management counseling services and low interest disaster relief loans to small businesses.

Weinberg was in Maine to address the New England Governor's Conference in Rockport. He warned the governors and the people of New England are going to be hearing "lot more about women and business.

"We have a lot of work to do to reshape our programs and priorities," he said. "But, we are committed to this because we believe we have to get out and help women start business, and help women already in business do better."

"It may sound simplistic, but the first thing we have to do is let women know that our loan programs apply to them equally, and that they can make it in business on their own," he said. "The SBA has got to do a better job communicating with women.

"I am searching out opportunities to address women's problems and find out what they think their problems are, and what they think we should be doing," Weinberg said.

Vance meets with Fahmi

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] – Secretary of State Cyrus Vance yesterday met Egyptian foreign minister Ismail Fahmi in an effort to revive sagging hopes for a Middle East peace conference. Fahmi said afterwards he was "optimistic".

Fahmi, who had made a biting attack on Israel Wednesday in the U.N. General Assembly, said, "This meeting reflects the seriousness with which the United States is working to convene a Geneva conference."

"I'm optimistic for this reason, and hope we are moving toward a conference this year," Fahmi said.

Hodding Carter III, Vance's spokesman, said the talks indicated that "all parties are interested in having a Geneva conference and this is the time to go. We are trying to see if a consensus can be developed.

Asked to characterize the current state of Vance's efforts, he said, "It may be interesting, but we do not think it is useful to stick a thermometer in every half hour to see what the temperature is."

Vance was trying to defuse the explosive rhetoric of speeches in the U.N. General Assembly which has surrounded the negotiations.

News in Brief

Legionnaire disease hits New Hampshire

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — New Hampshire has recorded its first suspected case of Legionnaires disease, state Public Health Director Maynard Mires said yesterday.

Mires said blood and tissue samples from a woman patient have been sent to the national Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

People should "not make a big thing out of this," he said, because officials are "not afraid there will be any outbreak" of the disease in New Hampshire.

Mires would not name the patient or where she was hospitalized but did say she has been treated and is doing well. He said the samples were sent out at the request of the woman's doctor.

It will take about seven weeks to receive a reply from the CIC which would "help us determine what she had," Mires said.

With seven confirmed cases of the disease in Vermont, he said he expects additional requests for testing from doctors and hospitals.

The state is sending information to all hospitals and medical referees detailing now to collect suspected cultures of the disease for testing, the health director said.

Abortion bill to affect federal pays

WASHINGTON [AP] — The congressional impasse over abortion will not cut off federal welfare benefits for the nation's poor, officials said yesterday.

But it may mean a reduced paycheck for thousands of federal bureaucrats unless the dispute is resolved by Oct. 18.

The controversy over federal funding of abortions for poor women is tied to legislation providing $60.2 billion for the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare.

The current funding authorization for the two departments expires today, and approval of operating money for next year has been delayed in Congress by the abortion dispute.

Members of a House and Senate conference committee were meeting yesterday to seek a compromise on the abortion issue. Their eventual recommendation must win approval by the full House and Senate before the legislation can be sent to the President for his signature.

Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., said he expected members of the committee to "scream at each other for a while" before reaching an agreement.

The committee has been deadlocked for three months on the issue.

The Senate maintains that the government should pay for abortions in cases of rape, incest or where "medically necessary," a phrase detractors say is vague enough to allow abortions under almost any circumstances.

The House insists that the government should fund abortions only when a woman's life would be jeopardized by a full-term pregnancy.

Each side has rejected the other's position. The House voted Tuesday against accepting the Senate proposal.

Meanwhile, officials at various government agencies and the congressional appropriations committees said yesterday spending on welfare programs can proceed in anticipation of future funding.

As a result, persons will continue receiving government checks from programs such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Supplemental Security Income for the aged, blind and disabled.

Psychoanalyst says women more mature

Her Say News Service —

Dr. Theodore Rubin, a renowned male psychoanalyst, has agreed with what many women have been saying all along ... that women are "more highly evolved and developed, and much more mature" than men.

Rubin says a man's world today is "one in which competition and self-glorification are vitally important ... " He adds that war is almost a natural extension of this man's world and is perhaps "the final and most ridiculous, primitive, anti-human, masculine game."

The psychoanalyst, writing in this October's issue of Ladies' Home Journal, says women in society have become "the safeguarders of the gentler and more mature human feelings," and have a broader outlook on life than men.

Maddox recovers after heart attack

MARIETTA, Ga. [UPI] — Former Georgia Gov. Lester G. Maddox — stricken with a heart attack but in "high" spirits — was expected to be removed from the Urban Medical Center's intensive care unit today.

"His spirits are high," spokesman Donna Stone said yesterday.

She said Maddox' condition was still listed as "guarded" but she believed it would be upgraded when he is taken out of the intensive care unit, which she expected today. "But that's up to his physicians," she said.

Economy shows signs that growth targets reached

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The economy is showing signs of resurgence after a lackluster summer performance, giving the administration a "degree of comfort" that its growth targets can be reached, Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal said yesterday.

Blumenthal's comments were prompted by a Commerce Department report which said its Index of Leading Indicators, designed to forecast future economic trends, increased by 0.8 per cent in August — a healthy gain.

Department analysts also revised the index for July to a 0.2 per cent gain, instead of the originally announced 0.2 per cent decline.

"It is encouraging to us that things seem to be picking up after the summer lull and moving in the right direction," Blumenthal told a news conference.

"There's a certain degree of comfort about the likelihood that the economy will be moving forward on the track that we had envisioned for it."

Blumenthal said the administration is sticking to its prediction that real growth in the economy will reach about 6 per cent for all of 1977 and 5.3 per cent for next year.

The report said the 0.8 per cent increase in the indicators for August pushed the index to 131.3 on a 1967 base of 100. Six of the 10 indicators available for August increased, three declined and one, the layoff rate, was unchanged.

The index went into a minor tailspin during May and June, and when the preliminary July figures showed another slight dip, some private economists were suggesting a new recession might be on the horizon.

S.U. launch space station

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Soviet Union yesterday fired a space station into orbit, prompting speculation that the Russians planned a new manned space flight to coincide with the 20th anniversary of the first Sputnik next week.

The new space station, Salyut 6, replaces the Salyut 5 station which fell out of orbit and burned up on re-entry August 8 after less than 14 months in space.

Lauching of the new Salyut fueled speculation that the Soviets may be preparing another manned orbital flight in connection with the 20th anniversary of the Soviet space program Oct. 4 or Nov. 7 celebrations of the 60th anniversary of the Russian revolution.

The Soviets have not had a man in space since February when cosmonauts Vikto Gorbatko and Furi Glazkov hooked up with Salyut 5 for an 18-day scientific mission.

The official Soviet news agency Tass reported that Salyut 6 was orbiting the earth every 89.1 minutes at an orbital inclination of 51.6 degrees at distances ranging between 136.08 miles and 170.8 miles above the earth.

The station has been launched for the purpose of conducting scientific and technical research and experiments and for checking on the design of onboard systems and quipment of orbital stations," Tass said.

The news agency said the Salyut 6 mission and the processing of inflight information was under control of the spaceflight center near Moscow.

"According to telemetric information the stations on-board systems are functioning normally," the Soviet agency reported.

Western observers have predicted that the next Soviet space spectacular could involve the linkup of two Salyut stations in space to form a large orbital laboratory.

The Soviet space endurance record was set in 1975 when a pair of cosmonauts spent 63 days aboard Salyut 4.

Visits to the space stations since then have been considerably shorter — a 49-day mission in August of last year, an abortive two-day mission last October, and the 18-day mission of Gorbatko and Glazkov in February.

Panama defense planned

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter said yesterday if rioting breaks out in Panama because the Senate rejects the Panama Canal treaty, he is committed to defending the waterway even "if it takes 100,000 troops," according to a California congressman.

In a separate meeting, Carter also told the chief executives of major movie companies he believes the United States can defend the canal "against any military action."

And both the President and Attorney General Griffin Bell said the House would have a chance to consider the treaty but, despite conservative contentions, the Senate had the sole power to ratify.

Carter met with House Republicans in a closed White House meeting, and Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., said later the President warned if the Senate turns down the treaty there is a distinct possibility rioting and sabotage may erupt in the Canal Zone.

"But I will tell you," Dornan quoted the President as saying, "I will defend the Panama Canal. I can defend it. Some people say it will take 100,000 men to defend it. Well, I've got the troops and I will use them, if it takes 100,000."

"However, will you in the Congress back up a sustained action in the Canal Zone?" Carter continued, according to Dornan. "That is the serious question over the possibility of a conflict there."

A presidential aide said the congressman had "broken a long-time rule" by quoting the President directly and denied Carter had talked about possible disturbances.

Dornan said the President also called Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos "a dictator...an enlightened dictator who has concern for his people."

Seeking support for the treaty, Carter told the film industry leaders: "It's very important I have your support on matters crucial to this country." He said the treaties are "an unpopular item but I believe if they are accepted it will be a great step forward economically and militarily."

The President stressed he believed the canal could be operated on a cooperative basis with Panama and added "I think we can defend it against any military action."

Bell testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the canal treaties do not require ratification by the House — a frequent argument raised by conservative foes of the treaties.

Bell said the text of the Constitution and historical precedent show "a treaty disposing of the territory and property belonging to the United States can be self executing" once ratified by the Senate.

Ronald Reagan and other treaty critics argue the Constitution requires the House to vote on any measure that involves disposing of federal property.

Dissident Episcopalians oppose female priests

Her Say News Service —

In the wake of last year's ordination of the first Episcopal women priests, some 23 Episcopal parishes have fled the fold and voted to establish a new, "pure" church in America.

The dissident Episcopalians, calling themselves the Anglican Church, held a meeting in St. Louis last week to elect a bishop and establish policy.

The separatists, at the end of a three-day conference, announced a program which included barring women from their priesthood, outlawing divorce and extramarital sex, and avoiding membership in the more liberal National Council of Churches.

Conference participants did not discuss and create the new program; it was announced to them.

In Texas, Dr. Ginger Jarman of Autsin's United Campus Ministry, has announced a secession in the other direction.

Jarman, along with other women, has announced a series of "sister celebrations." These are non-sexist worship sessions designed to attract christian women who feel uncomfortable attending church services where "father love" and "brother love" are emphasized and women are left out.

Jarman says women who are religious can't "wait for a new generation of scholars and liturgists to publish new translations and worship materals." Instead, they frequently give up religion altogether.

She says the "sister celebrations" want to make it clear that the Almighty is not only the "God of the patriarchs," but also the "God of the matriarchs."

Suspects plead innocent to heroin possession charges

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — Two men pleaded innocent in Springfield District Court vesterdav on charges of possessing the highly toxic white heroin that has been sold in the city for the past two weeks.

Benijno Rodriguez, 27, of Springfield, pleaded innocent to possession with intent to sell the drug and was ordered held in lieu of $500 bail pending an Oct. 6 trial, a court spokeswoman said.

Armand Labounty, 24, of Chicopee, pleaded innocent to a count of possession of the drug and was released on his own recognizance pending a Nov. 14 trial.

Police said both men were arrested in Springfield's North End late Wednesday. Capt. Robert Meffen said Labounty was picked up after police allegedly saw a sale of the dope. Rodriguez was arrested on a warrant issued after heroin was allegedly sold to an undercover narcotics agent last week.

Crackdown on drug smuggling

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A federal task force is being formed to fight drug smuggling along the New England coast and will be operational within 30 days, Sen. William D. Hathaway, D-Maine, said yesterday.

Hathaway said he was informed of the new effort by the director of the White House Office on Drug Abuse Policy, Dr. Peter G. Bourne.

Bourne asked that the task force be organized after meeting last week with Hathaway, who told him of reports of increased drug trafficking and smuggling in Maine.

The task force is being organized by the New England director of the Drug Enforcement Administration, Edward Cass, and Bourne said in a letter to Hathaway it "Is expected to have a significant impact in suppressing the illicit drug traffic in Maine, Rhode Island and Massachusetts with particular emphasis on Maine."

It will be made up of personnel from DEA, U.S. Customs, the U.S. Coast Guard and the Internal Revenue Service, Bourne said.

Carter calls Senate timid on energy issue

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter accused the Senate Thursday of timidity in facing energy issues, but said he thinks senators will stop opposing his energy plan "once they realize the consequences of an absence of courageous action."

Carter, noting the Senate is facing "tremendous pressure" from lobby groups, urged Americans to let their senators know "what their duties are" in the energy policy field.

"I think the Senate realizes this is the major legislative product that we expect this year," he said. "And for us to devote a full year of work and come out with an inconsequential or inadequate energy program is something I don't believe the Senate will face. They have their own reputations to protect."

The President said even if the Senate rejects key parts of the White House energy plan, however, the House is likely to "be very adamant" in conference committee sessions in demanding a measure acceptable to the administration. He called the House-Senate conference "in effect a third branch of government."

Carter compared Senate opposition to his energy plan — both in committee sessions, where key fuel taxes have been rejected, and on the floor where there has been a 10-day filibuster over natural gas regulation — to early opposition in the House, which ultimately left most of the White House plan intact.

"There were times several weeks ago when we were quite disappointed at the progress that had been made in the House," he told a news conference.

"As the members of the House of Representatives began to realize the enormity of the consequences of their timid action ... the House acted responsibly after giving us a disappointing time for a few weeks. I think the Senate is now in that posture.

"I think as senators hear the voice of the American people — as they realize the consequences of an absence of courageous action — I think they will move to adopt the major parts of the program."

Carter said natural gas price deregulation — the issue that has held up the Senate for almost two weeks — is unacceptable because it would give producers a $70 billion windfall in the coming decade with little increase in production.

Carter aid sees danger in restricting foreign trade

NEW YORK [AP] — One of President Carter's top advisers on the international economy warns of a "siege mentality" he sees developing here and abroad against foreign imports.

Richard N. Cooper, under-secretary of state for economic affairs, said yesterday that "it is the responsibility of leading governments, foremost the United States, to warn what the dangers are" of restricting foreign trade.

Otherwise, he said, "The net result will be less employment and lower income."

In a question period, Cooper was asked about ruinous foreign competition to the New England shoe and textile industries. He replied, in part, "It is incumbent on the government to provide assistance to distressed industries."

Cooper, an official also in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, insisted that "imports are anti-inflationary" in a talk entitled "U.S. International Economic Policy" delivered to 90 luncheon guests of the Policy Forum Inc. from the business and academic worlds.

"We need a much more buoyant economy," Cooper said as he outlined a five-part Carter administration strategy which includes:

— "Keep demand increasing for goods and services at a rate that will not re-ignite inflation."

— Pledges by the leading industrial countries not to restrict foreign trade.

— Conserving energy and developing alternate sources.

Watch your language

"I met these two 'chicks' at a party last night...."

"How many 'girls' live on your floor?"

"Say, 'boy', just what do you think you're doing?"

Our language can be degrading in blatant or subtle ways.

Long ago we decided that, unless used in friendship or by a much older person, to call a male over 18 "boy" was a put-down.

Middle-aged and older women sometimes refer to themselves as girls. This phenomenon, and its counterpart in males, illustrates the premium we put on youth. Have we become so afraid of age that we try to delude ourselves with this kind of mental-verbal trick?

There's a middle ground for the ages between when one is a boy and a man. It's "guys", a term that's also occasionally applied to groups of women. There is, however, no real middle term for girls-women. Do females become women after going through puberty? We are at an in-between age where each of our possible labels may sometimes apply.

Terms like "chick" and "broad", when applied to girls and women, are wrong not only because of obvious inaccuracies but because connotations often associated with those labels can't be generalized.

Politically and physically, "women" is correct, even for females in high school, referred to as "young women". But emotionally we may not be ready to call ourselves women. Does "women"hood imply a shift into full-fledged adulthood?

What difference does it make? As with "boy", calling a woman "girl" is degrading. There are certain characteristics, not only physical ones, that go along with being a woman-more maturity, responsibility, wisdom in having experienced that much more, and, with all those things, greater pride and awareness in one's self. To address anyone as if younger than they actually are is a subtle put-down.

It's not just men who make the mistakes. We should all be more conscious of the emotional consequences of our language, both in speaking and in writing, because it perpetuates false ideas. Physical maturation being what it is, there will always be ambivalence surrounding the labels "girl-woman" and "boy-man". We can try for more accuracy.

It's important that we train ourselves to include females in our male-dominated

fifi ball

speech patterns. When speaking hypothetically we often talk about a "he" or "some guy" doing something. It's hard to override the myths that exist deep in our language patterns. We should be writing 's-he", not just "he" (or "she") when we're not talking about an individual whose sex we know.

Instead of saying things like "mankind" or "man" when referring to the human race, we should say "people" or "humankind" to include everyone.

Words that designate positions; like chairman, salesman, policeman, selectman, should be chairperson, salesperson, police officer, selectperson.

Because the media isn't the first to reflect social changes, we may find these habits even harder to break because of their perpetuation we receive through other sources.

These terms will sound awkward and silly at first, but as they become habit, that embarrassment will drop away and we'll be addressing ourselves more accurately and equitably.

Our language, because we use it so frequently, determines how we think, even what concepts we are able to grasp.

Though you, on the surface, may agree with what the Woman's Movement stands for, if you don't incorporate little philosophies like these into your daily, personal lives, you continue to subscribe to the outdated, inequitable system.

Searching for answers

By DREW CRANE

College students are at that crucial stage in life somewhere between youthful independence with its zeal for change and complacent adulthood with its tacit acceptance of the status quo. During youth there is an idealism which flourishes in the maturing mind prompting a quest for the greatness that seems possible yet is very difficult to attain.

The struggle of clearly perceiving a problem and effectuating a solution often overwhelms many individuals. When facing the problems that have plagued mankind for centuries each generation feels that they are somehow closer to the solutions yet forced to struggle even harder under an ever increasing burden of acquienscence by the majority. Those few who survive and transcend into adulthood assume the responsibility of carrying the world ahead on their shoulders. They are the youthful revolutionaries, the radicals, the idealists whose dream of a better future for themselves (and as a consequence, the rest of mankind) provides the impetus to progress and the stimulus to the stagnant mind of the mediocre.

These leaders of mankind in every purposeful endeavor project a magnificent radiance of self confidence. They know precisely and completely who, what and why they are. Their ego — their self-esteem — is their source of personal energy and the motor of the world. To the extent that they are guided by a rational philosophy they project a sense of life (their deepest view of existence and their relationship to existence) which conveys an unbreached commitment to objective reality and an undiluted sense of the value of existence. They view life as great and beautiful and are convinced that the universe is open to the efficacy of their thought and effort. They know that they can effect a change for the better nd they do it.

But there are also those leaders who act without a rational philosophy as their guide and cause far more harm than good. Their motives are laudable but their methods and results force a social regression far worse than the public lassitude. They attack the externalities of a problem instead of the source and the change advocated often ironically burdens further their zealous efforts.

The advocacy of violent political and social revolution is an attempt to force the human mind to change. It has never worked and never will. The body may falter but the human spirit is immortal.

In order to effect any change you have to begin in the realm of ideas. For only through an appeal to reason can there be a permanent change for the better. The attempt to transform ideas which have endured for centuries will be difficult and require several generations to accomplish. But peaceful transition, no matter what the relative time span, is unquestionably better than the violent slaughter advocated by many revolutionaries today.

Only when you have begun to question the essential base of your own thoughts can you begin to understand your interaction with others and ultimately work within society to change for the better. And this requires a continuance of the spirit of youthful independence; the quest for what should and ought to be rather than mindless resignation to that which is.

'A glorious procession of ignorance'

By HABIB ELIAS MOUALLEM

> The people are the slaves of life, and it is slavery which fills their days with misery and distress, and floods their nights with tears and despair.
> —Gilbran Khalil Gilbran

Slavery is moving over all places in a glorious procession of ignorance. The artisan slaves for the employer, women slave for men, the poor slave for the rich, man slaves for fear, hatred, anger, jealousy, selfishness, pride, hypocrisy, racism, bondage, parents' past, cowardice, etc... Why give one's self up to false conceptions founded on delusions? The universe is not an accident with no purpse! Why wear garments of restriction and passivity and retire on beds of obedience? Slavery is continuous and contagious.

We should not make UMass a marketplace for apathy. The question one would ask — what would I leave for the world of bodies, which is not soul-less, and for the universe, and the docks of turning sand and wind. What shall we tell the death-master if we go by? He will not be excited if we go to him with a bagful of non-life! We have to tell him a joke, play him a tune, play a game with him; for death also wants to learn.

So let's believe we are responsible, let us feel responsible towards whatever we are doing, whatever situation, no matter how absurd. Let's leave our masks home and take a stand which resembles us resembles our face, fate, and go on. Let's exercise our love more to live more happily. Let's give more and ask more from life. Let's pay more attention to the music dormant in every one of us. Let's stand naked in the sun, so that her warm rays would kiss our lives and bless our existence. Everybody is together, though our efforts are not combined. So why not give a hand to each other through cooperation, persistence, patience and forgiveness.

Oh my fellow students, education does not come without struggle. As I see it, academic education is not more than a collection of information, most of which is forgotten later on. Attention! Here and now is the place to start unfolding our infinite potential to create and live life in its full meaning. Here and now people.... attention! My friends of the wind, let's unite and work together for more integrity. Let's combine our energies with a spirit of sacrifice, feeling that readiness to give and to help ventilate and dust each other's room from all stinking residues of a predominant negative habit of thinking. There is good in the world nd it is up to those who wake up to help other beings through the chain that binds their tormented souls to agony and misery.

Funding isn't wasted

To the Editor:

In Reply to Stephen N. Mathieu:

To make things easy I'll just go down your article [Commentary, Sept. 7] and critique it segment by segment. In the beginning of the article you state the nature of the student activities tax fund, SATF, and correctly assert that it should be used for all students. Your explanation and perception of the inequities you cite are however fictitious and misrepresentative.

You speak of certain groups [R.S.O.] that are meant to serve the entire campus, e.g. the Collegian, WMUA and the Transit Service. I agree that these are campus wide services that many people use but what you must understand is that these are only one type of community and student service that the Senate funds. Personal and human services are completely different and have to be looked at in a different light. You speak of groups that you consider private or special interest such as the "Every Woman's Center." You claim to feel ostracized because you're not invited to join and participate in this group. I guess YOU don't acknowledge the needs or desires that women may have as social beings that can't or aren't satisfied by male company, and vica versa. Organizations segregated by sex for socialization and support have existed since the creation of societies and I can't see how their existence here at UMass can be seen as either new or detrimental.

Your next erroneous statement involves Resources Judaica: you express concern in the area of religion. If you would read the Constitution of Resources and the Senate Budget Rationale you would know that Resources was funded entirely because of it's cultural emphasis and cultural education program.

After that comment you move on to "Third World" groups [What ever that is!]. You tell me it includes CCEBS, WBLK, Black Scientists, BMCP. Afro-American Society, Asian-American Students Assoc., Ahora and BCP. The fact that you can attack ALL of these distinctly different organizations under one absurd accusation shows not only your ignorance but your unwillingness to investigate the truth. All of these budgets come under rigorous scrutiny every year and are carefully reevaluated. Your presence at a 3 a.m. Budget Committee meeting will be appreciated.

You callously mention the names of these groups yet you conveniently neglect to explain the nature of their existence and rationale for funding. Just to brief you on a couple of these groups, WBLK is not an all black station any more than WMUA is an all white station, WBLK is an alternative station similar to WSYL and the station in Southwest. What made you assume that it was all black? Did you check it out? Of course not, its easier to take cheap shots from the Collegian editorial page than to involve yourself in some of these programs and activities!

CCEBS [Committee for the Collegiate Eduction of Black Students] receives probably less than 15-20 per cent of its total budget from student money — the remainder is obtained from other sources [something you later condemn them for not doing]. You ask why poor white students aren't helped by CCEBS, but in fact they are! CCEBS is for white students also and offers a wide variety of activities, tutorials, and programs for all disadvantaged students. Many member of CCEBS are there to help others [like Belchertown, and Red Cross]. Your point about WMUA being an Equal Opportunity Employer was totally irrelavant to the topic, and when you question the sincerity of one's commitment because it's a quest for social awareness [an unsubstantiated accusation] I wonder exactly what SPECIAL INTEREST you represent. How do you determine wht constitutes a legitimate and bonafide "All American" RSO group?

Just a few more questions. How could you, of sound mind and body, attempt to draw correlations between a private organization formed by citizens of a town along ethnic lines and a SATF service RSO 'group? How do you catagorize some groups as handout seekers and some as legitimate?

I strongly feel that students, all students, should and for the most part do benefit directly or indirectly from the SATF. If you honestly believe that money is wasted on funding the groups that you criticized I'll have to believe that my SATF was wasted in the space used for your commentary.

Cross-burning parallels KKK activities

The Ku Klux Klan, or more specifically, its spiritual influence, has arrived in the Pioneer Valley.

Last Saturday evening a makeshift wooden cross was planted outside the Merrill B. Lounge at Hampshire College, where members of the Third World community had gathered for a party, and set on fire.

The buring cross, the long-time terrorist symbol of the KKK, was simply a prank, according to Peter Gluckler, public relations director at Hampshire College, and "the burning itself was not a staged act of racial statement...." Then again, Mr. Gluckler is entitled to be blind. He's the public relations director.

Labeling the cross-burning a "prank" is equivalent to laughing off a written threat of bodily harm delivered to your doorstep.

In echoing the words of Hampshire College President Adelle Smith Simmons, the symbol of the burning cross "represents the worst aspects of racism that continue to exist in our society."

And in view of racial incidents perpetrated on the UMass campus in the past, I am convinced that Saturday's episode at Hampshire College could just as easily have happened outside the New Africa House as the Merrill B. Lounge.

The burning of the cross, whether sincere or an actual joke, sadly re-awakens memories of the Ku Klux Klan, a "social" organization very much alive today in these United States. While the Klan as a physical body represents no direct threat to the Valley, its idealogy has apparently penetrated our midst.

Today's Klan isn't a whole lot different from the Klan of 1900. Although originally formed to frighten carpetbaggers out of the South during reconstruction and stem the seemingly increasing invasion of Catholics and Semites, the KKK gained notoriety as a white supremacy group as soon as the blacks were given the right to vote.

kevin knobloch

The Klan admitted only native-born white gentile non-catholics and called themselves "100 per cent American," apparently neglecting the fact that their ancestors had crossed the Atlantic from Scotland and Ireland not too many years before. In this case, being a true American meant being white and Protestant and the Klan dedicated itself to the notion of Aryan supremacy which European dictators were to take up just prior to the Second World War. The Klan participated in racial intimidation, with violence and terror as their weapons and waged war against the non-Americans. Their activities included lynching, church burning, murder and branding human hides with acid. True American pursuits, indeed.

Ironically enough, the Klan's original constitution included a declaration that it would guide itself by the ideals of chivalry, mercy, humanity and patriotism.

The parallel between the Klan's beliefs and those of Adolf Hitler are frighteningly close. The Klan's plans to carefully weed all "non-Americans" from its society is mirrored by Hiter's belief of Aryan supremacy.

Hitler's dreams of the perfect race, apparently, did not cease to exist with him. The Klan flourishes today, the most recent aboveground activity taking place over the weekend in Montgomery, Alabama, where the hooded Klansmen have added several more relevant issues to their cause.

The Klan's new image is deeply rooted in negative action. Masquerading the Klan's emphasis on racial strife by offering legal services to blacks who wish to reject desegregation school busing (said the Imperial Wizard, Robert M. "Bobby" Shelton), the Klan plans court and demonstration action to stop school bussing, to denounce Alabama's work release program for prisoners (which allows convicts to take outside jobs before release from prison) and to protest the ratification of the Panama Canal Treaty.

While recognizing the Klan's constitutional rights to free speech and assembly, I can hardly condone or appreciate their cause. And the open terrorist methods, such as the one that took place at Hampshire College Saturday, as well as the long history of racial intimidation that can be credited to this "educational" valley, are of the same breed.

An attempted definition

Much has been written recently about Allan Bakke, the white male who is suing the University of California because, he claims, he was denied admission to medical school due to the existence of a quota system which allows non-whites to be admitted under different standards than whites.

The central concept involved in the controversy seems to be something called "reverse discrimination" or the idea that two wrongs don't make a right. But thus far no one has been able to define reverse discrimination adequately, and consequently the whole debate has travelled in circles, or, at best, ellipses. In an effort to get the debate going in at least spirals, I have contacted several eminent authorities on discrimination and asked them to air their views and perhaps clarify the situation.

bob melia

"Reverse discrimination," said George Wallace, "is when I have to sit next to blacks in both lunch counters and buses. Two wrongs don't make a right."

"Isn't that just plain discrimination?" I asked of him.

"Don't be ridiculous, boy," he snapped. "I wish there was plane discrimination in this country. I don't like them in the air any more than on the ground."

I thanked the Governor for his time, but being more interested in school admissions than modes of transportation, I called Lester Maddox. Surely, I thought, if anyone could shed some light on discrimination in academia it would be the man who took an axe-handle in hand and vowed that separate was more important than equal.

But Lester was no more helpful than George. "Reverse discrimination is every bit as American as discrimination and apple pie. If it wasn't I'd have passed out axe-heads, not axe-handles. Reverse discrimination and discrimination are both just means to the same end. And in my opinion, the meaner the better."

If Wallace and Maddox thought that reverse discrimination is no different than discrimination, Governor Dukakis thought the problem was only a figment of our imagination.

"There can be no reverse discrimination unless there first exists discrimination," Dukakis explained. "And at the school I went to, although it was one of the most elite and whitest schools in the country, discrimination didn't exist. We'd admit anyone who had the money; it just so happened that only whites had the money."

I asked the Governor if he could explain why no blacks could afford to go to elite private schools. "It's obvious," he replied. "They never worked hard to get rich, like I did. All they do is sit around and collect welfare. But I intend to get them off welfare and on workfare. At $2 an hour they should be able to save enough money to go to school in just 37 years and nine months. Unless, of course, they also want to eat."

It wasn't until I got hold of Bert Lance that I found someone willing to defend the concept of reverse discrimination. "We bankers do it every day. I discriminatingly lend my bank's money to another bank in the hope that its president will reverse the cash flow and make me a sizeable unsecured personal loan. Two wrongs don't make a right, but they do make a profit. So you can see that reverse discrimination and discrimination are inseparable. If you eliminate one you eliminate the other, and I find them both too profitable to dispense with."

I thought it only fitting to let President Carter have the last word. "I don't like the term 'reverse discrimination' at all," the President said. "Let's use 'racial purity' instead. I think you'll admit that racially pure medical schools have a certain charm; a charm which is important to protect. So although I would never prevent a black student from moving into a white medical school, neither would I encourage it.

"My solution," the President continued, "would be to provide federally subsidized, low-income medical schools. We could build the first one at Grambling, and I would personally ensure that although it might be separate from California medical schools, it would nonetheless be equal in every respect."

If these acknowledged authorities on discrimination can't agree on the meaning of reverse discrimination, I don't think the Supreme Court can possibly get to the root of the problem. But a solution to the Bakke case is possible, if only the court will use the same brilliant logic it employed on the abortion issue.

In the first and second trimesters of the school year, the Court should rule that the University of California can admit students by different standards. But in the third trimester, the student must stand or fall on his or her own merit. At this stage, reverse discrimination would only be allowed if the life of the applicant's mother is in danger.

This is the only fair and sensible decision the Court could make, for it would, in the best tradition of the American judiciary, leave everyone equally dissatisfied.

But the true beauty of having the Supreme Court make the decision is that if it should ever decide that its decision is discriminatory, well — it can always reverse itself.

Springfield recycles aluminum

In addition to aluminum beverage cans, Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company pays 17 cents a pound for clean household scrap aluminum items such as aluminum siding, door and window frames and lawn furniture tubing. These items must be free from all non-aluminum materials except paint and broken into three foot lengths.

If there is any doubt as to whether a material is all aluminum, a sample should be taken to the mobile unit and inspected by Reynolds personnel.

The mobile unit will be at Eastfield Mall, every Tuesday in October from 10:30 a.m. to noon.

For information on aluminum recycling call (toll-free) 1-800-243-6000.

Hydroelectric power instead of nuclear

BOSTON [UPI] — New Englanders could save $1 billion by using hydroelectric power instead of nuclear reactors and fossil fuels, a Massachusetts legislator said Thursday.

Rep. Richard Roche, D-Springfield, said a study conducted by his staff showed Massachusetts has the potential to produce one thousand megawatts of hydroelectric power — the same as a large nuclear power plant.

And the state, he said, already has several existing dams which could be converted to generate hydroelectric power cheaply.

"The major obstacle to developing more of our waterpower remains a psychological one; many people feel it's simply a romantic notion from a bygone era and are unwilling to invest in it," Roche said. He said he will file legislation to simplify state licensing processes and work aith the congressional delegation to do the same on a federal level.

More cases of Legionnaires disease

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — Two more cases of Legionnaires' disease were confirmed Thursday in Vermont as investigators continued to study hospitals in 19 states where the mysterious illness has shown up.

Since July, seven cases have been confirmed in Vermont and an eighth case has been termed "highly probably" by officials of the Center for Disease Control working in the state.

CDC said three of the seven patients may have had the disease before they were admitted to the Medical Center, the state's largest hospital.

Three of the seven have also died from the disease. Nationwide, fourteen persons have died from the illness since a July 1976 outbreak at an American Legion Convention in Philadelphia killed 29.

According to CDC officials in Atlanta, the disease is caused by a bacterium which can be diagnosed and treated with antibiotics. No one is sure how the pneumonia — like disease spreads, and there is no evidence to show the illness can be transmitted from person to person.

Doctors said the two latest Vermont patients have recovered from the disease but remain hospitalized for other medical problems. One patient apparently had the disease prior to hospitalization and the other contracted the infection at the Medical Center, CDC officials said.

The CDC said the patients had been watched since early September when it was first thought they might have the disease.

"Further confirmation of patients under observation since early September may be forthcoming," a spokesman said.

Medical authorities are also examing "a group of selected patients and Medical Center employees in an attempt to arrive at a more accurate estimate of incidents in the community," the CDC said.

Politics for cover story of 'Nutshell'

Campus politics is the cover story for this year's Nutshell Magazine, which is being distributed free on campus by The New Students' Program of the Community Development Center.

The magazines will be available in dormitories and the Student Union beginning tomorrow.

Hadassah leader speaks on 'The Zionist Movement'

Marian Greenberg, actively involved in the Zionist Movement for 50 years will speak here Sunday at 11 a.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

In the mid-1930's, she became the first youth Aliyah Chairman for Hadassah, enabling her to work closely with Henrietta Szold, Hadassah's legendary founder.

As a leader in Hadassah, Mrs. Greenberg served as national vice-president, chairperson of the National Youth Aliyah Committee, editor of the Hadassah Newsletter (now Magazine) and headed the Medical Center Building Fund.

She will speak on, "The Zionist Movement; Where Has It Come, Where Is It Going?"

Motor vehicle inspection ends on the fifteenth

Although one-half of the Fall Inspection Period has elapsed, only one-third of registered motor vehicles has been inspected.

The registrar urges owners of uninspected motor vehicles and trailers to visit any of the 4,200 official inspection stations now and have their vehicles inspected. Immediate inspection will give the owner enough time to have a rejected motor vehicle or trailer repaired to meet the statutory equipment requirements.

The Fall Inspection Period ends Oct. 15 and all motor vehicles must display the current yellow inspections sticker thereafter.

Red Sox sold

BOSTON [UPI]— Haywood Sullivan, who caught for the Boston Red Sox two decades ago and former trainer Edward "Buddy" Leroux yesterday announced an agreement for their 13-member group to purchase the American League team.

The sale, for an estimated $15 million, is expected to be finalized Oct. 31. The other 13 American League owners must ratify the purchase by a three-quarters vote.

Mrs. Jean Yawkey, one of the three members of a trust which has run the club since the death of her husband Thomas on July 9, 1976, joined the group as a limited partner after Sullivan and Leroux made their offer on Sept. 1.

"The price was one factor in the decision and the fact that Mrs. Yawkey decided to join the group was another," said trust member Joseph Lacour yesterday. A noontime news conference was held at Fenway Park to announce the impending sale.

"We have to hammer out a contract for the sale, but for all intents it is sold. We do not anticipate any problem," said Lacour.

Sullivan and Leroux will be considered general partners and will handle daily operations of the club. The other 11 members, which include former Boston Celtic star Frank Ramsey, will serve as limited partners.

The Sullivan-Leroux group was among five bidders for the team.

A-T-O Corp. of Ohio, the parent firm of Rawlings Sporting Goods, reportedly made the high bid of $17 million and bids were also made by Jack Satter, owner of Colonial Provisions Corp.; Marty Stone, a business executive who works as the Red Sox' batting practice pitcher for a hobby and a group headed by former Red Sox Star Dom DiMaggio.

Awol Pats to return

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John Hannah and Leon Gray, two standout offensive linemen who left the New England Patriots in a contract dispute, said yesterday they would decide soon whether to return to the club, as the NFL's player-club relations committee suggested.

"I still have the option of retirement and I'll have to consider that," said Hannah, a 6'2", 265-lb. fifth-year guard from Albertville, Ala., where his family runs a farming business.

"I think the fans can understand my position," he added. "It's the difference between playing the NFL and personal, private enterprise."

"My gut feeling is that I want to play football," said Gray, a 6'3", 255-lb. tackle, also in his fifth year. "But I just want to weigh my feelings and look at the whole thing objectively."

Kuberski injured

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. [UPI] — Forward Steve Kuberski of the Boston Celtics was placed on the injured reserve list yesterday after it was discovered he had suffered a broken right hand.

thrive on the ground game. Tailback Marschell Brumfield (37 attempts, 219 yards, five touchdowns) heads up the Youngstown attack, while fullback Dwight Dumas (106 yards in 21 tries) is his complement in the backfield.

On defense, the main man to watch, according to MacPherson, is Greg Fitzpatrick, a 6'2", 210 lb. junior linebacker.

Over on the UMass side, the injury report is still not good. Steve Telander, who was the most recent selection as Yankee Conference defensive player of the week, broke his hand in the Harvard win and will be out for at least three weeks. His place will be taken by John D'Amato, while Peter Russell has been elevated to second string behind D'Amato.

Safety Joe Harrington will also get a starting shot for the Minutemen. He is set to fill in for John Beerworth, who is also sidelined with an injury.

Mike Fallon is slated to start at QB for the Minutemen, as his knee "is in better shape than last week," according to MacPherson.

Ali just retains title

NEW YORK [UPI] — Muhammad Ali barely saved his world heavyweight championship last night when he staved off a late charge by Earnie Shavers and almost knocked out the challenger in the 15th round to score another controversial unanimous decision.

The crowd of 14,613 booed the decision of the officials, who gave Ali a better break than he seemed to deserve. Eva Shain, the first woman to score a championship fight, and official Tony Castellano both had Ali winning nine rounds to Shavers' six, while referee John Lobianco had Ali 9-5-2. UPI scored it 8-6-1 for all.

Ali, who lost the 13th and 14th rounds to the inspired fourth-ranked slugger, staggered Shavers in the final round with punishing lefts and rights to the head. Shavers stayed on his feet on sheer will-power to the end and Ali's cornermen jumped with joy and relief at the decision.

Ali, who has now been pressed to go 15 rounds in six of his last nine fights, had much more of a struggle than he bargained for to earn his $3 million purse and far more than the officials' cards would indicate.

Among those present at ringside were former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, comedian Milton Berle, singer Robert Merrill, actor Sylvester "Rocky" Stallone, "Yankee Clipper" Joe DiMaggio and singer Tony Orlando.

NY loses...

NEW YORK [UPI] — Wayne Garland, facing a 20-loss season, fired a six-hitter last night and the Cleveland Indians defeated the New York, 4-1, to keep the Yankees' magic number for clinching the American League East Pennant at one.

Boston and Baltimore both won last night and trail the first-place Yankees by three games with three games remaining.

Garland, a 20-game winner last season for Baltimore, walked three and struck out one in pitching his 21st complete game of the season for a 13-19 record.

Cleveland scored the first run in the third inning when Alfredo Griffin drew a walk off starter and loser Ed Figueroa, stole second, moved to third on Dave Oliver's single and scored when Larvell Blanks bounced into a fielder's choice.

Figueroa left after the next pitch to Andre Thornton with a strained muscle in his left side, yielding to Ken Clay. Rick Manning belted his fifth home run of the season into the right center field bleachers with no one on in the fourth inning for the Indians' second run.

The Indians added a run in the fifth after Griffin stroked a leadoff single to left. Jim Norris walked and Griffin went to third when Norris was thrown out stealing. Oliver then cracked an RBI single to center field to make it 3-0.

...as Sox win again

BOSTON [AP] — American League slugging leader Jim Rice drove in four runs with his 39th homer and a sacrifice fly yesterday powering the Boston Red Sox to a 7-3 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

The victory kept the Red Sox mathematically alive in the AL East race.

Rice rallied the Red Sox from a 2-0 deficit by belting a homer after Rick Burleson had singled and Ted Cox doubled to start the Boston fourth. Rice's homer to the right of the 379-foot mark in left-center gave him 376 total bases for the year, the most by an American League slugger since Mickey Mantle had the same number in 1956.

The blast off Toronto starter Jerry Garvin, 10-18, enabled Rice to boost his league lead in homers. It also marked his 202nd hit.

Toronto rallied to tie the score 3-3 in the fifth, but the Red Sox came right back for two deciding runs. Butch Hobson doubled and Steve Dillard sacrificed. Burleson walked and rookie Cox drove in Hobson with the second of his three hits. Rice followed with a sacrifice fly scoring Burleson.

The victory went to Bob Stanley, 8-7, who relieved starter Mike Paxton with the bases loaded and two out in the fifth after Toronto had tied the score.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30 — Born today, you are a lighthearted individual, often accused of not taking life seriously enough. You have a tremendously uplifting sense of humor which prevents your being overly solemn about anything. For while you can, in fact, be very serious about your career, your "life," you cannot be solemn. Further, you believe solemnity to be the death of creative enterprise. Those who do not realize the difference between being solemn and being serious will never understand you.

Highly intuitive, you should learn to heed that voice within which seems to recognize danger before it occurs, success before it is indicated and the general mood of the public. Were you to have prior knowledge of these three aspects of daily life, you would be able to circumvent most drawbacks and reach your goals well ahead of schedule.

You are fond of people but are aware that many of them will be devious when it is to their advantage to be so. You are careful never to place yourself in a position where you may be taken advantage of. At the same time, however, you are careful never to appear untrusting. You make it a point to appear confident, friendly and trusting – for the sake of those friendships which are loyal and durable.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Business matters may crowd all else from your schedule early in the day. Make yourself available to one of influence.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Being the stickler for accuracy that you are, you may have a difficult time of it today getting things "right."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — A conflict of interest could cause the kind of confusion that leads to permanent setbacks. Reserve an opinion.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — You would do well to postpone a journey. There is no time like the present for keeping close to home and completing chores.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — A craving for affection could lead you into an involvement you will later regret. Temper feeling with reason.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Put off decisions concerning business until a later date. This is a good day for accepting a new challenge.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A number of opportunities may present themselves in A.M. Take your time making a decision that could have long lasting effects.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You would be ill advised to allow your natural generosity's full sway today. You could end day with a huge financial loss.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Take care not to spoil the effects of yesterday's enterprise. New methods must be tried out – only until they fail.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — This should be an exceptionally happy day for you and yours. An employment scene "buddy" proves helpful late in the day.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Catch up on correspondence. A telephone call may be in order if you feel you have neglected a friend. Make up for lost time.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — You can succeed where others have failed if you will pay strict attention to the directions circumstances take. They are new!

Spikers set for Bridgewater

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass volleyball team opens its home schedule tonight at NOPE gym with a best of five match against Bridgewater State. The game will be played after the junior varsity team opens its season against Bridgewater's JVs at 6:30 p.m.

The varsity lost to Bridgewater last year by identical 10-15 scores and is 0-2 on the young season. For the Bears, it is their opening game and their first under rookie coach Ron Mannoogian, a former AAU volleyball performer. UMass coach Dianne Thompson reports that Bridgewater has five or six returning starters, all of which are talented performers and she expects the game to be a close, hard-fought affair.

She attributed last Saturday's double setback at the hands of New Hampshire and Vermont to the team's lack of offensive punch. She said, "We weren't able to serve-receive the ball quite as well as we should have ... The strategy of being able to switch from defense back to offense just wasn't there."

She also said that the fact that it was the first time that the new group of players had performed together as a team caused them to be somewhat apprehensive and unsure of themselves, especially when they fell behind in the games.

Deb Kuzdeba, a sophomore who is one of the stronger hitters on the squad, agreed. She said that the team played too defensively and lacked the necessary setting and hitting needed to spark the offense.

Thompson does not view the loss as being a total catastrophe. She said that it helped to highlight some of the weaknesses of the team and that the coaches and the team are now working harder than ever to overcome them.

She said that the team has been working on the offense and the defense, especially the positioning aspects. She wants the players to know where they're supposed to be on the floor and what their responsibilities are so they don't panic under game conditions.

Except for Heidi Dickson, whom Thompson hopes will bolster the hitting attack, the rest of the starting lineup will remain pretty much the same although the positions of the players may change somewhat. Thompson said that one of her team's major objectives is to cut down on its high number of net violations. The Minutewomen committed 10 in their first match.

Thompson emphasized the fact that neither her nor JV coach Bonnie Buongiorne were frustrated by the team's unimpressive start. She said, "We're not down ... We're still as optimistic as ever and even working harder than we were at the start." She said that the players were skilled and that it was just a matter of putting it all together.

Hopefully, they'll find the missing ingredients in time for tonight's game.

JV booters shutout Owls

By JUDY KEEFE
Collegian Staff

A convincing win over Keene St. Thursday marked the beginning of the UMass junior varsity soccer team's season. The score may have been 3-0 but it certainly didn't indicate the overpowering play of UMass over the Owls.

The first half was total domination by UMass, although the Minutemen didn't score their first goal, by Tarek Elnabli from Dave Mains, until 30 minutes into the game.

UMass was taking the play to Keene State while keeping the ball in the Owl's end of the field practically the entire first half. In fact, UMass goalie Mark Marilla had to make only two saves during the first half.

On the other side of the coin, there was constant pressure on Keene St. goalie Peter Stevens, as he had 14 saves in the first half. But Stevens held up well under the pressure until the first goal. Then he seemed to unravel. The second goal, scored by Will McEnroe with an assist going to Ted Erickson, came about a minute before the first half was over.

Keene St. coach Joe Palumbo said, "The UMass offense was just overpowering. Our defense was just standing around." He added that UMass was tough opposition but that his team hadn't had enough time to practice as he would have liked, and that it could have played better.

The second half seemed to begin where the first half ended. Two minutes into the second half John Heslin fed to halfback Bret Simon, who then scored. Said Dryer, "That first goal in the second half set the tempo for midfield play during that half."

The second half seemed to be more balanced than the first half with Stevens garnering five saves and Marilla making four. Still, UMass was in the driver's seat and Keene St. never even represented a threat.

"There were no stars in the game, it was a total team effort," noted Dryer.

UMass's next game is slated for Tuesday at home vs. Harvard.

Netmen meet Catamounts

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The oft-rained-on UMass men's tennis team will play its third match of the year tomorrow, against Vermont on the lower Boyden courts at 1 p.m.

In the absence of first singles player Al Green (med boards), coach Jay Ogden will be going with Rich Sharton at the number one spot. Jim Barnhart will play second singles, with Steve Heyl, Dave Nowak, Keith Hovland and Mark Huetteman taking the third-sixth singles spots, respectively.

Ogden said he would work out doubles combinations today, and because of the missing Green, would have to "do some switching."

The Minutemen are 1-1 after losing their last match to UConn.

"I think we'll be much more up for this match," said Ogden. "I think the players were looking past UConn when we played them."

Ogden said he only knew Vermont had lost to UNH, 6-3. He said UNH was again supposed to be the power in the YanCon tournament, which it won last year.

"We expect Vermont to be tougher than UConn," said Ogden.

Vermont was third in last year's YanCon tournament, with UMass second.

Golfers to host Toski; vie for third straight win

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team will try to make it three victories in a row this weekend as it hosts the fourth annual Toski Intercollegiate Invitational Tournament at Hickory Ridge C.C. in South Amherst.

The linksters won the Yankee Conference Championship at Stowe two weeks ago, and last Tuesday won their fourth straight New England title at Hampden C.C.

The Toski tournament was started three years ago when the brothers Toski Jack, Ben, Tom, and Bob — decided to dedicate a collegiate tournament to their father, Walenti Toski, who spent most of his life serving golf in the area.

The Minutemen, who won the first annual Toski as well as last year's event, will go with a lineup of Flynt Lincoln Jim McDermott, Jeff Orr, Vic Lahteine and John Lien. The scoring in the tournament will be the best four of five scores counting each of the two days.

Co-captains Lincoln and McDermott once again led their team to victory last week with solid 75's. Surprising sophomore Orr provided the spark needed to carry the duffers past Central Conn with a 76.

Leading the invading forces trying to wrest the cup from the defenders will be Temple University, which won the event two years ago.

Also on hand will be Central Conn, URI, Yale, Harvard, UConn, Salem State, Boston College and many others. The total field will be 21 schools.

Coach Ed Vlach, confident of his team's ability, warned that the competition will be gunning hard for the Minutemen, trying to knock them off on their home turf.

Women bow to Lyons; greet Eagles today

By ED POWERS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team bowed to a very strong Mount Holyoke team, 6-3, yesterday afternoon on the NOPE courts. The loss was the first setback for the Minutewomen this season.

UMass battled in the wind, and the final score doesn't accurately indicate the closeness of the match. Number one singles player Cathy Maher won an exciting three-setter over Jean Osachuck 3-6, 7-6, 6-2; and number four singles player Sherry Lurie won by beating Elizabeth Montesano 6-4, 6-4. The other singles players for UMass didn't fare as well.

Carolyn Mooney lost to Kim Colson 0-6, 1-6 at number two; Lee Robb lost to Cynthia Granakos [illegible], 6-4, 3-6 at number three; Jackie Isgur lost to Tucker Dacey 5-7, 5-7 at number five; and Jane Carson lost to Lisa Meeks 4-6, 6-4, 0-6 at number six.

First doubles started things off right for UMass as Dawn Minaai and Jennifer Ranz defeated Mount Holyoke's Cummings and Munger 6-2, 6-1. The second and third doubles teams fought hard to gain the much needed wins for UMass, but it was not to be.

Martha Aswiszus and Cathy Sullivan were beaten at the number two doubles spot 6-1, 2-6, 3-6 by Wildoner and Hanckinson; and Chris Carson and Fran Meyers were defeated at the number three doubles spot 2-6, 6-7 by McNerny and Daby.

The Minutewomen will attempt to get back on the winning track this weekend in a 1:00 match tomorrow afternoon against Boston College on the NOPE courts. Coach Bill Yu expects the match with BC to be a tough one.

Craig Arnold will be in action at Franklin Park tomorrow as the sub-varsity meets Northeastern University. (Staff photo by Dave Rodman)

Harriers face stiff test

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

Four All-Americans are scheduled to respond to the starter's gun tomorrow at Franklin Park in Boston in a quadrangular cross country contest beginning at 11:30.

Northeastern, Rhode Island and St. John's provide the competition for the UMass contingent who hopes to maintain its poll position as the second best team in New England. Providence currently holds the number one position with Northeastern third.

UMass All-Americans Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold will match talents against Northeastern's nationally recognized harriers Bruce Bickford and John Flora. The confrontation between these two New England powers has developed into one of the bitter rivalries in the Northeast.

In last year's early season match-up, UMass finished on top, 26-30. On the strength of their 3rd, 4th, and 5th runners, the Minutemen narrowly defeated the Huskies in the New England's, 87-88.

"Both teams have virtually the same personnel as last year," commented head coach Ken O'Brien, "The story of this particular meet is whether we can bunch up men in the middle positions. This year the meet should be equally as close."

St. John's, out of the Metropolitan league in New York, comes into the meet sporting a record of 2-2.

"They possess several good front runners in Steve Callaghan, transfer student Tom DellaVilla, and freshman Ross Donahue, but throw them together with a handful of All-American's and experience begins to show," said O'Brien.

Rhode Island enters the contest with a batch of new recruits. Several freshmen figure predominantly in the future success of their cross country program, but they remain a relatively young and inexperienced squad.

"It'll be tough to throw them up against a buzzsaw like Northeastern and UMass," commented O'Brien.

The sub-varsity teams from UMass, Northeastern and St. John's will stage a preliminary contest at 11:00 before the main event.

Stickers battle Huskies

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The undefeated UMass field hockey team will journey to Northeastern tomorrow, seeking its third straight victory in as many starts. The 1:00 p.m. contest is the Minutewomen's first flight from their nest at NOPE this season.

The Minutewomen are the heavy favorite. Player for player, UMass holds the edge over the Huskies. UMass coach Judith Davidson commented that UMass should win if it is the aggressor.

Davidson said she expects a "fast paced" game from the scrappy Huskies. With UMass' quickness, it should be equal to the task.

Last year, the UMass stickers suffered a 2-0 defeat at the hands of the hustling Northeastern squad.

The Minutewomen can't afford a sluggish start. A slow start against Keene St. on Wednesday allowed the Owls to give the Minutewomen a tough game. Despite UMass' lackadaisical play, the Minutewomen downed Keene St., 2-0, at NOPE field. Cheryl Meliones provided the scoring punch with both goals.

UMass displayed relentless, agressive play in a thrilling season opener when it defeated Springfield, 1-0. Lynsie Wickman's drive evaded Springfield's goalie, Sharon Schmickley, in the first half. The Minutewomen never relinquished the one-goal margin.

The Minutewomen return home for Tuesday's contest against Mt. Holyoke at 3:30 at NOPE field. UMass is expected to win this game, also.

Gridmen greet Penguins

By JUDY VAN HANDLE

The UMass football team will be taking a break from its New England schedule tomorrow when Youngstown State invades Alumni Stadium for a 1:00 (12:50 WMUA) game.

The clash represents the third time in as many years that the Minutemen have included a midwestern school on their schedule. Western Illinois began the skein in 1975, while Toledo was UMass's foe from the 'heart of America' last year.

"It's a good thing in terms of national exposure to schedule teams from other parts of the country," UMass coach Dick MacPherson said. "In years to come, hopefully we'll be scheduling more teams like them."

The Minutemen, though, will be faced with a tough bird in the form of the Penguins, who play an independent slate.

Youngstown State, an Ohio-based college; is a "rock 'em, sock 'em" crew, according to MacPherson.

"They really come out of the coal and steel country and meet you head on," the coach added.

Primarily composed of Ohio players, the Penguins are coached by Bill Narduzzi. In his two years at Youngstown, Narduzzi has compiled a 9-10 record.

Just prior to his arrival on campus, the Penguins were a Division Two titan. Youngstown qualified for the divisional playoffs in 1974, but were defeated by perennial powerhouse Delaware, 35-14, in the first round.

Youngstown slipped to 5-5 in '75, and went one notch further down (4-6) last season. But the Penguins did win their last three games of the '76 campaign.

This season, Youngstown is 2-1. Last week it toppled Western Illinois, 37-16. Prior to that, the Penguins lost to Tennessee Tech, 38-22, and began their season by defeating Villanova, 13-10.

"They run an offense quite similar to ours," MacPherson said. "They also have a great tradition of quarterbacks."

Youngstown's most famous graduate, Ron Jaworski, has gone on to pro fame with the Los Angeles Rams and Philadelphia Eagles as a quarterback.

This season, the Penguins have yet to decide on a number one signal-caller.

Bill Fink, listed first on the depth chart, has completed nine out of 19 passes, good for 160 yards. His partner, Keith Snoody, has logged a 16 of 35, 204 yard performance thus far.

Primary recipient of the quarterbacks' tosses has been flanker Jim Ferranti, listed at 5'8", 148 lbs. He has snagged 14 aerials and gained 214 yards, although no catches have been for touchdowns.

Like the Minutemen, though, the Penguins

Catamounts visit UM booters' lair

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

After starting the season off with three straight wins on the road, the UMass soccer team returns home to host the Catamounts of the University of Vermont at 11:00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The contest will be the biggest one thus far for the Minutemen as the Catamounts are currently ranked second in New England and 13th nationally.

Coach Russ Kidd's Minutemen are now tied for third with UConn in the New England ranking and are looking for a win over Vermont to move up in the New England poll and possibly break into the national elite.

The UMass booters have momentum on their side as they are fresh off of a tough 1-0 win over Keene St. on Wednesday and are yet to be scored upon.

They'll need all the help they can get, though, as they are up against a Vermont powerhouse that has yet to be tested this year. The Catamounts Sports a current ledger of 4-0.

Against Vermont last year, the Minutemen were soundly defeated by a 6-0 score although, according to Kidd, it really wasn't indicative of how well UMass played in the game.

"I know coach Rinehart (Vermont) very well and we're both looking forward to one hell of a game," said Kidd. "This type of battle is good for soccer in New England.

"Vermont has a veteran team with the classiest goalie I've ever seen," Kidd continued. "He's tough to beat so we'll have to make our shots count."

Saturday's game will mark the first time the booters play on the newly prepared field behind Boyden; an event that has been anticipated for quite some time. Kidd is extremely pleased that his home opener will take place there and is grateful to the ground crew from the Physical Plant for rushing to get the field in shape on time.

Senior co-captain Ed Niemiec is listed as questionable for Saturday's game by Kidd after sustaining an injury in Wednesday's contest at Keene State. Niemiec has a sore thigh, stemming from a weird play when he was kicked by Keene State's goaltender, Todd Delron.

According to coach Kidd, this is the highest ranking that UMass has ever had in the New England poll, and to maintain it, a win on Saturday is a must. "This is our biggest game thus far, we're trying not to look ahead," Kidd said.

After Saturday's contest, the booters will host the Crimson of Harvard Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 before traveling to Boston on Saturday to square off against the Terriers of Boston University.

Booter Banter: Senior co-captain Larry Aronson is setting a mark for durability as the Keene State game was his 29th straight victory start...UMass is nearing its total goal output for last year. The booters scored 17 goals in the entire 1976 season and have notched 12 goals in 3 games already this year.

Et tu, Shana?

I guess I'm just feeling a little bit like Jack Kilpatrick of "60 Minutes" fame, but reading Judy Van Handle's column of Wednesday, September 28, made me see red.

Yes, Judy sounded very much like Shana Alexander while making her calm, reasonable and logical plea, "Please don't hate the Yankees."

Well, even though I consider Kilpatrick a blowhard who's never had a sliver of greymatter within the vast wasteland of his bald pate, I can't help but rebut Judy's column as Jack would counter Shana's point.

Judy, you poor misguided woman.

You have the unmitigated gall to barge into a huge, yet close-knit circle of Red Sox fans and idealistically tell us "don't hate the Yankees." This is tantamount to walking into Northern Ireland and telling the Catholics not to dislike the Protestants, or attending a meeting of the American Legion and suggestion they curry favor toward George McGovern.

Do appeals of this nature ever meet with positive response? I think not.

If your premise isn't bad enough, Judy, your justifications for such a statement are even worse. You say you "admire" the Yankees because they "came through in the clutch." Well this is nothing but purest balderdash.

There was never any "clutch" in which to come through. Boston simply lost too many games to allow New York the luxury of choking.

Take into consideration that Baltimore series when the Orioles twice claimed victory from the Red Sox. Baltimore, itself, then dropped a contest to Boston, giving the Yankees even more breathing room.

And who can forget that fiasco in Detroit when the Hose led the Tigers 3-0 with possibilities for more, and then came up on the short end of a 5-4 verdict? The recent loss to Toronto must be included as well. In that game the Red Sox stranded more men than the Titanic while falling one short of the last place Blue Jays.

Let us remind ourselves that during the month of September the pinstripers were losers to Boston in three out of their five encounters. When the Yankees had a chance to choke, you can be sure that they took full advantage of it.

You advise us to tolerate the likes of Billy Martin, Mickey Rivers and George Steinbrenner. I'd expect this sort of propagandistic drivel from the irrational inhabitants of Poughkeepsie, Judy, but not from a person with your ability to see through the facade of the public relations man. It is common knowledge that the aforementioned trio performs unnatural sexual acts upon small woodland animals. Accepting such men as "good competitors" would surely set society back hundreds of years.

As a team, the Yankees set a poor example for our youngsters. If they don't win, they're at each others throats, one player blaming the man at the next locker for his own shortcomings. I don't know about you, Judy, but I wouldn't want my son or daughter going through life accusing the neighbors of botching a pop-fly that was his all the way.

Don't get me wrong, I'm for normalizing relations with my enemies just as much as the next man, but I refuse to go about the procedure blindly, letting my forgiveness fall where it may, so to speak. One must be selective when absolving the people he despises, and the New York Yankees, as a team and as an organization, are much more deserving of 50 gallons of battery acid for their whirlpool bath than absolution.

No, the answer clearly is not to cease ill feeling toward the Yankees, but to continues to detest them. If you don't hate the Yankees, now is a good time to start. If you do hate them, nurture that hatred; let it blossom into plots against Graig Nettles' life.

I'll do my part, however, to make sure that innocent people aren't injured, Judy. If some true Red Sox fans see you near a television set at playoff time rooting against Kansas City, I'll come to your defense. I'll convince them not to do to you what they had been saving for Mr. Nettles ... by pleading insanity.

ELVIS in CONCERT a look at a legend

'Elvis in Concert,' a musical special starring the legendary musical phenomenon, Elvis, will be broadcast Monday, Oct. 3 on CBS-TV.

The entertainment special, highlighting Elvis' music and mystique, was videotaped this summer at concerts at the Omaha Civic Center in Omaha, Neb., and the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center in Rapid City, S.D.

The program conveys the particular excitement and electricity generated by this master showman. Also captured are the other unique aspects of an Elvis concert, including the ecstatic audiences and the simultaneous blend of precise musical preparation and infectious carnival atmosphere.

The disarming combination of the supreme confidence of a superstar with the boyish smile of the kid next door, the Elvis mystique and his performing magnetism made Elvis the unique, never-to-be-forgotten embodiment of the fantasies of millions around the world.

PBS in the spotlight

Canal Zone

CANAL ZONE, the newest in a series of films produced, directed and edited by Emmy-winner Frederick Wiseman, will premiere Friday, October 7 on PBS.

Filmed in the ten by fifty-mile strip of Central America which the U.S. has owned, operated and controlled for more than sixty years, CANAL ZONE is the eleventh in Wiseman's series of documentaries on the operation of American institutions.

Beginning with a trip through the Canal onboard a Japanese freighter laden with automobiles bound for Europe, CANAL ZONE depicts the daily life of the American residents, a scenario played out against the background of the treaty negotiations between the U.S. and Panama.

Although it departs geographically from the continental U.S., CANAL ZONE is in every way a logical part of the continuing Wiseman chronicle. The Canal Zone is like a small city. The main business of the Zone is the proper functioning of the Canal. The film shows the principal kinds of events that are involved in the governing of the Zone and in the operation of the Canal. Meetings in the Governor's office, the work of the courts, schools, commissaries and hospitals, the issues debated in community meetings, the technical work involved in the operation and maintenance of the Canal, and the leisure activities of the Zonians, are among the events shown.

Recently, after thirteen years of frequently bitter negotiation, Panamanian and U.S. negotiators signed a "principle of agreement" on a future Panama Canal treaty. If approved by the plebiscite in Panama and by the U.S. Senate this fall, control of both Canal and Zone will gradually be yielded to Panama by the year 2000.

As with his other films, CANAL ZONE is filmed in black and white and has no narrator or commentator to interpret the events filmed. Patrick Sullivan, writing in The New Republic notes: "Wiseman constructs his films so that we find ourselves there, with the camera. We are observers: routine situations, representative sorts of encounters, conversations, duties, expressions and attitudes come together to create their own story."

PAPILLON

'Papillon,' the incredible but true story of a convict's harrowing 13-year ordeal in the hell of Devil's Island, from Henri 'Papillon' Charriere's book, will be presented Thursday, Oct. 6 on CBS-TV. The special stars Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman.

Enroute to Devil's Island, Papillon meets Louis Dega, an urbane and infamous counterfeiter. He agrees to protect Dega in return for money to finance his escape.

Papillon's first attempt ends in disaster. Betrayed, he is captured and sentenced to two years in solitary confinement. Emerging from solitary, he immediately tries another escape. This time, Papillon gets as far as Colombia before he is captured.

Upon his release from five years' solitary confinement, Papillon finds his friend Dega now a broken and demented old man. But Papillon, his thirst for freedom unquenchable, makes new plans to escape—or die in the attempt.

Butterfield dorm seeking status as union council

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

Residents of Butterfield dormitory expect to file for status as a dorm council this week, the first group to seek official recognition as what unionization organizers call the "building blocks" of a student union.

Butterfield representatives are busy gathering the 50 per cent plus one signatures needed to form a house council, according to Susan Hoffman, resident of Butterfield and member of the Student Organizing Project (SOP).

Residents of Butterfield voted to form a dorm council at a house meeting last Monday. Their petition will be presented for approval of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

There is "clearly a consensus" in favor of the council, Hoffman said, and there should be no trouble in obtaining the necessary signatures.

Decentralized student councils "will be the building blocks of the Student Union," according to Student Empowerment, a booklet written by student union advocates. "Councils will have, among other powers, the ability to formulate and ratify union platforms, guidelines, and contracts," the booklet states.

Students at Butterfield are hopeful their example will provide the impetus for other dorms to form councils. Ultimately, Butterfield would "hook up with these dorms for more power," Hoffman said.

Hoffman said the dorm, under the council set up, would have a spokesperson who would "relate to the Central Area government and to the campus government." Members of the house would hold weekly meetings where everyone would be welcome and issues would be discussed in an "open forum." This procedure would assure that "no one person would make decisions for everyone else," Hoffman said.

The first issue the union would take up would be the installation of room phones in Butterfield. The council will function where area governments cannot. Hoffman said, "Area governments allocate money. There is no way to change things which directly affect the students." They will also discuss other residential issues such as mandatory dorm requirements and maintenance.

The decision for a Butterfield dorm council was derived from long discussions held this summer by SOP members and the student senate. According to Hoffman, "SOP surveyed dorms and departments to see which were ripe for organizing." Butterfield has a history of active residents and house meetings making it "ripe" for such an organization.

Hoffman said the new dorm council would be able to "draw on the resources available" to them: SCER can help do research and SOP can help organize.

At last Monday's meeting, many questions were raised about technical practices and tactics, but there was no disagreement on the formation of the council according to Hoffman. Three exchange students explained the unionized system in Europe's universities which function well enough to handle most of the students' problems. "They encouraged us," Hoffman said.

Slavic power? 'Da, comrade!'

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

At a time when national upswing in "ethnic pride" is as evident as the nearest "Polish Power" T-shirt, enrollment in UMass Slavic Studies department courses has reached an all-time high, according to department head Robert A. Rothstein.

In addition to enrolling 337 students this fall, the department boasts of high marks given its graduate program by a review committee in a report issued earlier this year. The MA degree program was called comparable to "the better Ph.D. programs in the field," by the committee.

Yet the department seemed in danger of being eliminated last spring as part of a five-year plan, now being re-evaluated, proposed by Provost Paul Puryear.

That plan called for elimination of Slavic Studies, along with Asian Studies, as early as 1978.

Ironically, according to Rothstein, demonstrations protesting the plan may have been at least partly responsible for the upsurge in enrollments, as well as for spurring interest in the department's plight among Polish-Americans around the state.

"We received support from the Polish-American community, including petitions from 99 different communities with 3,500 signatures, in response to material sent out by the students in the Slavic support committee," said Rothstein. The committee also made calls to legislators and sent letters protesting Puryear's proposal to members of the Board of Trustees.

In the legislature, Rep. Kenneth Lemanski (D-Chicopee) filed a resolution passed in August calling for a center for Polish and Slavic studies on the UMass-Amherst campus to carry on cultural activities, show films, prepare material on Polish culture for schools, and train teachers.

"In the long run, if we can demonstrate a need and interest, perhaps with foundation money, perhaps a permanent center will be built," said Rothstein.

"We have expanded on contacts with Polish-Americans," said Rothstein, "One of our graduates is teaching Polish at Palmer High School this fall and he has a hundred students."

In addition, through the Outreach Program, funds will be provided for lectures on Slavic culture, including one Monday evening on Polish-American culture, said Rothstein.

Also, under a program soon to be announced, the department will provide a periodical literature translation service for UMass faculty members, to be called the Slavic Translation Bureau and coordinated by department member Edward Stawiecki, said Rothstein.

So, for the present, with enrollment high and its programs receiving support from across the state, members of the Slavic Studies faculty can bid their students, "Do Widzenia!" knowing they will, indeed, "meet again".

Kent gym opposition head to speak here tomorrow

By DAVE OLMOS
Collegian Staff

Alan Canfora, a leader of the May 4th Coalition opposing the building of the Kent State gym, will speak tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in room 165-69 of the Campus Center as the start of the Revolutionary Student Brigade's (RSB) east coast campuses speaking tour.

Canfora was at Kent State during the May 4, 1970 shootings of four students and was shot through the wrist during the incident. He will give an account of what happened at Kent State during the recent demonstrations and will discuss the progress the coalition has made in stopping the gym construction.

Another speaker will be Ed Whitfield, a black student leader involved in a 1969 takeover of the Cornell University administration building in order to demand organization of a black studies department at Cornell.

The third speaker, Cliff Cornfield, a national member of the RSB, will speak about the goals of the organization and the formation of a nationwide revolutionary youth organization.

The east coast tour is part of a larger nationwide speaking tour to build support for the RSB national convention to be held at Kent State on Oct. 22-24. It is also intended to "bring attention to the questions of summing up the movements of the 60's and making people conscious of some of the struggles and problems of today," according to Charlie Baglie of the UMass office of the RSB.

The three speakers will be followed by a slide show of the Wall Street demonstration for jobs for youths and a question and answer period.

The RSB office located in room 413A of the Student Union will provide any additional information about the speakers or any other question concerning the RSB.

State Senator Olver - 'a life of politics, family'

By STEPHEN TAYLOR
Collegian Staff

"My life is pretty much made up of politics and family. When I first got married I dropped a few things. But when I entered politics I dropped almost everything."

Commenting on his political career is State Senator John W. Olver, who serves the Amherst district, a former chemistry professor at UMass. Olver, originally from Pennsylvania, came to Massachusetts in 1952 and has remained here since. A graduate of Renneselear Polytechnic Institute with a BS, he received his MS from Tufts University, and attended MIT, acquiring his Ph.D. in chemistry.

A gregarious and energetic man, Olver states, "the political life is not an eight hour per day job. The measure of success of a politician is the measure of degree in which your constituents will vote you back into office." He categorizes his political energies into five divisions: educational purposes, ceremonial and social functions, developing legislation, constituency services, and community services. His feeling about our state's political machine is "Massachusetts senators are appointed to committees out of merit, not seniority, merit being a sense and feeling for the important issues and of leadership."

Olver is very much in favor of an ethics code. "Of course I am in favor of adopting an ethics code for the senate, but there are always ways that people can take money and hide their income."

He sited as an example the account of ex-senators Joseph DiCarlo and Ronald MacKenzie, who were found guilty by the state senate last spring of extorting some $40,000. "Some people who have been given a little power, allow that power to corrupt them, because of their human nature; and there are some people who have a lot of power, and they use it in an ethical way."

He also concedes that "it's hard to see what these codes in general will really accomplish, they could be more cosmetic than real. A bribe has always been an illegal act, and reinstating that in an ethics code is not going to make it any more illegal or unethical."

However, he did strongly emphasize that "the vast majority of our public officials are doing their darnedest in serving their constituents the best they can."

Answering questions on the present energy problem, Olver stretched back in his chair and fervently asserted, "We are in a really severe energy crisis, and the approach that congress is taking toward President Carter's Energy Plan is dumb stupid." Olver recognizes the immensity of the problem and would like to see big business and the private sector become involved.

A staunch conservationist, Olver said "It is just phenomenal, the inefficient use of energy here in the United States. We have learned to consume energy a zillion ways, and our actions reflect two attitudes. One, that there will be a great miracle to solve our resource problem; and two, there is a gross arrogant attitude that we can continue to consume and the rest of the world can be damned." Olver went on to stress the importance of a national level program coordinated through the federal government to promote conservation.

He is in favor of establishing alternative energy sources such as wind and solar power, and on the subject of nuclear power plants he said, "We should develop as little nuclear power as is necessary."

On other political issues, Olver has supported the Equal Rights Amendment, and is in favor of decriminalizing marijuana. He supports the Supreme Court's decision on abortion, which declares abortion to be a personal and individual right. "I am in favor of abortion where the woman is a victim of rape or incest." He also acknowledges the difficult ethical question of when the fertilized embryo takes the form of life.

He was elected to the state House of Representatives in 1969 and served until 1972, when he then ran for state senator and was elected to office in 1973. He is an active member on the following committees: vice chairman of ways and means, vice chairman of energy, state administrator of transportation, and vice chairman of ethics.

What lies in the future for an educator turned politician? Olver standing up and smiling admitted a keen interest in archaeology. "I always see pictures of tanned smiling archaeologists in far away lands, but, who knows, who knows?"

OHAG budget postponed

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Voting on the Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) budget was postponed last night in order that a new Finance Committee be set up to provide recommendations on the budget proposals.

In submitting his recommendation for an $11,000 budget, OHAG Treasurer Jeff Cohen told the representatives budget proposals totaling $16,618 had been to the Finance Committee, which consisted of only three people.

Cohen said he felt the recommendations of such a committee would not be useful to the representatives and was submitting his proposal in order for OHAG "to have something to work with". A motion by Cohen for OHAG to become a Finance Committee "as a body of the whole" was defeated.

Cohen was asked by Bill Coffee of Grayson house for his rationale in pairing down the proposals, which he gave. After further debate, Cohen withdrew the motion. Approved was a proposal by David Markman that OHAG advertise for new Finance Committee members, in accordance with affirmative action guidelines.

Cohen asked that anyone wishing to be on the committee contact him.

Earlier in the meeting a motion was approved to allocate $50 to Grayson House Council for equipment for a coffee house on Oct. 10.

Sylvan elections set for tomorrow

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Newly-elected President Linne Donaldson announced at last night's Sylvan Area Government meeting that elections for area government representatives will be held tomorrow. The deadline to sign up is midnight tonight. Three representatives from McNamara dorm and two from Brown dorm will be elected.

Donaldson was elected president of the Sylvan Area Government Sept. 21, when she defeated Peter Vicker with 140 votes to 57. Donaldson said "My first goal this year is to try to establish communications between area programs, the area office, and area government." She also expressed a desire to see a broader base of participation in the area.

Also elected Sept. 21 was Joel Jordan as vice president and Jim O'Connell as treasurer. They each ran unopposed and each received 142 votes.

There are positions available for editor of the Parchment, director of SYL TV and director of the Craft Shop. Hiring committees were formed last night for each of the positions.

Five-College Exchange a 'moving' experience

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

Whether it's the mini metropolis of UMass, the traditional ivy-covered halls of Amherst College, the modern architecture of Hampshire College or the other unique attributes of the five colleges, the one of your choice could be yours for a semester.

The Five-College Residential Exchange Program gives sophomores and juniors from UMass, Amherst, Hampshire, Smith and Mt. Holyoke colleges the opportunity to attend another of these five schools for one semester without transferring. Requirements for the program are that the student be living on campus at his-her school and be in good academic standing.

According to Monique Chireau, a sophomore at Mt. Holyoke and the program's coordinator, this option has been available since 1973. "Generally," she said, "there has been a decrease in the participation of the program from a lack of publicity."

On the average, there have been about 30 participants per semester; the majority of the students come from UMass and go to Amherst. Said Chireau, "There is no delineation according to major ... students usually do not switch for reason of courses, but mostly for a change in lifestyle. Yet many people feel that the program would be a big hassle, but it's not ... I'd really like to get more people involved."

In order to be accepted to a school for a semester, there must be an equal amount of students switching schools so that an equal amount of space is available. One must pay the tuition for the semester of the school attended but only has to pay about half the cost of the room and board. A student cannot spend more than two semesters away, and has to re-apply to the program each semester. If one drops out of the program for any reason during the semester, that person must find housing at their own school.

For more information about the program, call Monique Chireau. The application deadline is Oct. 12.

Fac-Sen overseer low-Price-d

By HERB BRODY
Collegian Staff

At any Faculty Senate meeting in the past year, a familiar sight has been a large man seated at the front of the meeting room, overlooking the assembled senators. What is not as familiar to the casual visitor is the identity and function of this overseer.

"As presiding officer of the Faculty Senate, my function is to recognize people, to maintain order—simply, to keep the meeting going," explains William Price, 46-year-old assistant professor of communications studies.

Price characterizes his role as "more or less the master of ceremonies." The substantive duties of the office include determining the agenda for the meetings and serving as a member of the senate's Rules Committee.

The job offers no extra pay, "just a little extra tension," allows Price. He attributes his election to a knowledge of parliamentary procedure, a subject he has taught.

"I didn't really want the job that much, but when they came to me and asked me to do it, I said yes, just to be helpful. I believe in doing my bit."

Price claimed not to be disturbed by the behavior of the senators at this semester's first meeting: newspaper reading was widespread, and senators walking out at mid-meeting was commonplace.

"That's typical of any meeting of a legislative body, be it the UMass Faculty Senate or the United States Congress." Price acknowledged the tedium of that particular session adding, "The next meeting will probably be as dull."

Brightening a bit as he inspected the more distant future, the presiding officer predicted "Things will heat up eventually — it generally takes a while for things to get started."

A question bound to occur to a visitor of a Faculty Senate meeting is, "What is the purpose of this thing?" Price thinks the body is important in "providing a faculty voice to the governance of the University". Specifically, the senate has primary responsibility for the academic curriculum; it reviews, through committee, proposals for all new courses, programs and majors.

The senate has limitations. It is merely an advisory body, the administration doesn't have to follow the senate's recommendations.

There is, however, the surging new development of a faculty union, an organization that may "bargain the Faculty Senate right out of existence," Price said. "This is going to be a significant year for the Faculty Senate, because the whole relationship of what it does might be very changed by the time the union finishes its contract."

It's possible the new contract will call for the abolition of the Faculty Senate. Price expressed some concern about this possibility. He would like to have the governance system "remain pretty much the same." This does not indicate an anti-union sentiment, though. "Collective bargaining is important, especially since the Faculty Senate is strictly advisory to the administration," he said.

Asked how good a job the UMass administration is doing, Price laughed. "I think it has problems. The biggest problem right now is that there's nobody up there. (An allusion to Pres. Robert C. Wood's resignation.) We're fortunate here on the Amherst campus to have Chancellor Bromery to provide some continuity." Bromery, said Price, is doing a good job, "as well as can be expected."

Price defended the Faculty Senate's censure of Provost Paul L. Puryear last spring. Puryear, he said, had taken action without the required consultation with the senate.

Women's Choir in tempo

By JILL METLITZ
Collegian Staff

In an era characterized by Barbara Walters, co-ed dorms, and the Equal Rights Amendment, one might consider the existence of a women's choir passe'. Not so, according to Prof. Wayne Abercrombie, conductor of the UMass Women's Choir.

A theory behind a women's choir, emphasized by Abercrombie, is that it allows the members to perform music expressly composed for female voices. He also pointed out the stereotype identifying men as "non-artistic, insensitive, and unaesthetic" has only begun to shed.

At the present time, the number of women desiring to perform in a choir is substantially larger than the number of men. A women's choir enables each individual to have the opportunity to perform.

Kyle Hoffman, a member of the choir, said, "I'd go crazy if I couldn't sing." This is remedied by the fact that the choir, offered as a one-credit course, is available to both music majors and non-music majors. Its small size of only 25 to 40 women is an advantage allowing more personal attention and the chance to perform more challenging music.

Abercrombie was hesitant to label the type of music the ensemble performs. He narrowed it down, however, to every type of music excluding top forty and show music. He presents a large repertoire of music, including contemporary pieces finished as recently as two weeks before a performance. Music written by a former UMass student Karen Tarlon, was performed last semester and will again be performed this spring.

The choir will perform Oct. 15 in Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. in the Women's Choir Festival. The choir will be joining the Smith College Glee Club, Mount Holyoke's Coro, and the Concord Community Choir. Each will perform for approximately 15 minutes and then join together for a final number. The choir will also perform with the University Chorus in December and May and at other functions by invitation.

Tom Waits performed Friday night, Sept. 30, in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium. His drunken mannerisms and bum-like image attracted many fans and curiosity seekers as well. Waits' raspy voice turned off some of the spectators, but the majority of the audience felt their time was well spent on his lengthy performance. (Staff photo by Janie Portnoy)

Internships Office will do a 'job' on you

By MARY GRANDPRE
Collegian Staff

Has the prospect of starting "cold turkey" in the job market after graduation ever bothered you? There is a way to get practical experience while still earning graduation credit. The Office of Internships at UMass gives students an opportunity to work in their fields full- or part-time and receive academic credit.

An internship is "the only time an undergrad can set up their entire semester of study," says Ellen Wolf, a program coordinator at the office located in 408 Goodell. The program is interdisciplinary, she said, and there are opportunities for internships in any major on campus.

Students don't have to rely on the office to find an internship for them, Wolf said. "It's all self-initiative on the part of the student," she said. Students may solicit the organization of their choice and arrange an internship with the office.

Some students who participated in internships this summer offered their experiences and comments about the program.

Steve Speidel, a senior majoring in landscape architecture, said he feels internships should be a mandatory part of a college education. "It's easy to sit around in class and theorize," he said.

He did an internship this summer with a landscaping firm in Seattle, Washington. Part of a 10-person staff, Speidel did plant counts, calculations for planting grass and seeds, and worked in parks.

Also doing an internship during the summer was Roger Luoff, a junior political science major. He worked for Common Cause, a citizens' lobby group which deals with reforming procedures in government. He coordinated the California Common Cause while working in Washington, D.C. and also coordinated lobby efforts to pass government-funding of elections and monitored senate subcommittee hearings.

Alexander Daugherty worked for the Manhattan Legal Services in East Harlem as a paralegal. A senior legal studies major, he was an advocate for the litigation for poverty rights and interviewed many Spanish and black residents who were below poverty level. Daugherty wrote letters to judges, clients and attorneys, inspected tenants' housing conditions, and represented clients in court cases, under an attorney.

An internship, he says, "offers the intern opportunities for work in the future, even if you don't want to do that kind of work."

The Office of Internships will hold recruitment meetings for spring semester internships this Wednesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center.

156 hijacked in Japanese jet

DACCA, Bangladesh [AP] — A Japanese jetliner commanded by five heavily armed hijackers and carrying at least 30 hostages, including three Americans, took off and headed toward the Middle East yesterday night after a terror-filled 5½ day siege at Dacca airport.

The hijackers, members of the ultra-leftist Japanese Red Army, did not disclose their destination. But Hajime Ishii, chief of a Japanese diplomatic team sent to Dacca, was quoted as saying he had "reached agreement with a certain country in the Middle East for a landing of the hijacked plane."

The plane took off after the terrorists freed more than 100 hostages and after hours of delay caused by hard tropical rains and a bloody but short-lived coup attempt by Bangladesh army rebels.

Along with the hijackers and the captives, the DC8 also carried a $16 million ransom and six "comrades" of the hijackers released from Japanese prisons in response to the terrorists' demands.

A Japan Air Lines official in New York said the JAL DC8 carried fuel for 12 hours' flight, giving it a range of more than 5,000 miles, enough to reach either Libya or Yemen, countries where Red Army guerrillas have found refuge in the past.

In Tokyo, a JAL spokesman said the hijackers told the pilot to head for Kuwait, but it was not known if the plane would land there. Kuwaiti authorities said it would not be allowed to land there.

One Japanese woman among the freed hostages told reporters in broken English the experience was "terrifying and incredible". But she said the hijackers did not injure any of the passengers.

"Very bad time," she said.

"Very, very bad time but we very lucky too."

Airport sources said the jet left 45 minutes before a government-imposed curfew was to take effect in Bangladesh at 10 p.m. local time noon EDT.

Bangladesh officials cleared the plane for takeoff despite a last-minute telephone appeal from Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda, who asked that it be kept on the ground until all the passengers were freed.

Officials in the airport control tower, headquarters for government negotiators involved in the tense radio communications with the hijackers, said there were 30 hostages — 24 passengers and six crew members — aboard when the plane left Dacca.

Airline officials in Tokyo gave a conflicting account, saying there were at least 29 passengers and between seven and nine crew members aboard.

Bangladesh officials said those still aboard included three Americans, 17 Japanese, two Australians, one Indonesian and one New Zealander. Their identities were not immediately known.

JAL had said there were 12 Americans among the 156 passengers and crew aboard the Paris-to-Tokyo flight when it was hijacked Wednesday after leaving Bombay and was forced to land at Dacca.

Among the Americans reported released in Dacca was former California Assemblyman Walter Karabian and his wife, former Hollywood actress Carole Wells Karabian. The hijackers also freed California banker John Gabriel. Officials said Gabriel had been targeted for execution by the terrorists if their demands were not met. He was reportedly seriously ill and was rushed to a hospital after his release.

In a carefully staged drama the hijackers traded away more than 100 hostages in exchange for their ransom demands and finally for permission to leave Dacca airport.

The largest exchanges occurred early Sunday when 59 persons were freed in a step-by-step trade of hostages for cash and "comrades". Most of the released prisoners were Red Army members jailed in Japan after previous terrorist incidents.

Gunfire erupted at the airport shortly after the 60 were released, signaling the start of a brief attempt by army rebels to oust Bangladesh leader Maj. Gen. Zaiur Rahman.

Government officials said scores were reported killed in fighting at the airport and in the Bangladesh capital of Dacca, three miles away.

Witnesses said at least four army officers at the airport were marched out to a hangar by the rebels and executed by gunfire during the short-lived rebellion.

Rahman later broadcast a message on the state radio accusing "selfish quarters" of trying to exploit the government's preoccupation with the hijack crisis. Rahman, the president and martial law administrator, assured the nation the rebellion had been quelled over a group of more than 40 hostages in return for safe passage from Dacca. The hijacked jet had sat at an isolated berth near the marshy fringe of a runway almost continuously since it landed.

In a tense moment Saturday, the hijackers — their patience apparently strained — ordered the plane into possible takeoff position. The government countered by rolling out a fleet of vehicles to block the runway, and the plane later returned to its isolated outpost, still surrounded by vehicles.

Territorial fishing rights disputed in Argentina

[UPI] — Two Bulgarian fishing trawlers damaged by gunfire in a territorial fishing rights dispute were escorted toward the southern port of Puerto Madryn yesterday by Argentine destroyers.

The Argentine destroyers opened fire on the trawlers Saturday in the latest incident in a 10-day dispute with Eastern bloc fishing vessels over Argentina's 200-mile territorial limit.

Rear Adm. Jorge Isaac Anaya was quoted as saying three Argentine petty officers drowned Saturday when a motor launch overturned in heavy seas as it attempted to go alongside a Soviet trawler also detained in the Atlantic 170 miles from the Argentine coast.

The independent news agency Noticias Argentinas also reported that one Bulgarian crewmember from the trawler Ofelia, wounded by Argentine naval gunfire, was in "satisfactory" condition after an operation.

The Ofelia and the Soviet trawlers Frans Hals and Prokoryevsk arrived in Puerto Madryn yesterday escorted by Argentine warships. They joined five Soviet fishing vessels detained by Argentine warships for fishing violations beginning Sept. 22.

The navy said the Aurelia, with engines damaged by gunfire from the destroyer Piedra Buena, had to be taken in tow for the 200-mile trip to Puerto Madryn, some 1,000 miles south of Buenos Aires on the Patagonian coast.

However, heavy seas forced the Argentine escort to cast off the tow and the Aurelia was adrift with the Piedra Buena on watch nearby, the navy said.

The navy said the General Belgrano and three other destroyers discovered the two Russian and two Bulgarian ships early Saturday fishing for hake 170 miles off the Argentine coast.

The navy said both Russian vessels hove to in response to Argentine challenges but the Aurelia and Ofelia attempted a dash for the open sea.

Soviet space program may be launched again

MOSCOW [AP] — When the Soviet Union launched the world's first artificial earth satellite 20 years ago, not everyone in the West professed to be astounded.

Then-President Dwight D. Eisenhower initially dismissed Sputnik 1 as "one small ball in the air."

Nonetheless, the Oct. 4, 1957, launching of Sputnik — a 185-pound silvery sphere equipped with four whisker-like antennas — catapulted both the Soviet Union and the United States into an era of intense and expensive space rivalry.

That single "ball in the air" has led to hundreds of increasingly sophisticated satellites whirling around the globe, with missions ranging from biological experiments to secret military communications and reconnaissance.

Another Soviet space first, the orbital flight of Cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin in 1961, compounded the mounting Soviet-U.S. technological competition with crash programs to develop manned space exploration.

The launching of a new Soviet space station, Salyut 6, last Thursday has increased speculation among Western observers that Moscow may be planning a major space spectacular to mark not only the Sputnik anniversary but also the upcoming 60th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution next month.

Soviet officials, however, have denied that any such spectacular is in the offing.

Where does the Soviet space program stand today, 20 years after Sputnik?

Despite the Soviet failure to achieve a manned moon landing, Western scientific observers say the Soviets have forged ahead with a space effort that on balance is larger, more diverse and better-funded than current U.S. space activities.

According to an authoritative study compiled by the U.S. Library of Congress in Washington, the number of successful Soviet space launchings in recent years has been running at a level about 3 times higher than American launches.

The Soviet program has put greater stress on military applications of satellites and other space technology.

Data from the Library of Congress study show that from 1957 through 1975, the Soviets conducted a total of 586 launchings for apparent military purposes, in contrast to their 292 launches of civilian space vehicles.

By comparison, during the same period there were 326 U.S. military launches and 323 U.S. civilian launchings.

"The vigor of the Soviets' military space program — combining military satellites and strategic missiles — has been continually maintained," commented one Westerner in Moscow who specializes in watching Soviet military developments.

The diplomatic and political value of data gathered by the extensive Soviet satellite reconnaissance network was illustrated in August by the international uproar over alleged plans of South Africa to test a nuclear bomb.

In that incident, Soviet satellite photo analysts reportedly detected what appeared to be facilities for a nuclear test being built in South Africa's Kalahari Desert.

This prompted Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev to send an urgent personal message on Aug. 6 to President Carter warning that a South African test was imminent.

Following the Brezhnev message, Carter ordered a closer U.S. satellite observation of the suspected test site, and this was said to have confirmed the Soviet findings.

The South African government subsequently declared it had no intention of exploding a nuclear device.

Prices drop

Supermarket shoppers got a break last month, with prices edging down almost 1 per cent, an Associated Press market-basket survey shows.

Continuing declines in the cost of coffee and pork chops, along with scattered savings on a variety of other items, helped offset increases, mainly in the price of orange juice.

The AP drew up a random list of 15 commonly purchased food and nonfood items, checked the price at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973 and has rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket total at the checklist store declined during September in 10 cities, dropping an average of 1.9 per cent, and increased in three cities, rising an average of 2.9 per cent. On an overall basis, the marketbasket bill at the checklist stores was eight-tenths of a per cent lower at the start of October than it was at the start of the preceding month.

The situation was an improvement over August when prices remained fairly steady, with the marketbasket total increasing at the checklist stores in six cities, decreasing in six cities and remaining the same in one. The average marketbasket bill decreased about a third of a per cent during August.

Toward a student union

Americans have a tradition of dealing with power structures as individuals, rather than collectively. But the complex and concentrated nature of modern institutions has required the development of new means for gaining influence. So it is that we students, as consumers of an educational "product" and participants in a contract which states the conditions for the consumption of that product, find ourselves seeking collective empowerment where as individuals we have failed.

Events of recent years have provoked the reexamination of the nature of the modern public university and the student's role in it. Two pervasive myths about institutions of higher learning persist, despite repeated evidence that they are fallacious, and serve to stifle efforts to organize and mobilize students.

One myth is that the modern university, like the small college of old, is an organic and "friendly" institution devoid of antagonisms and adversary relations. But if the actions of the administration and state government are insufficient refutation of this position the recent unionization of the UMass faculty certainly leaves no question.

A second popular belief is that the university can provide one with a good job upon graduation, and that it is thus desirable just to log one's four years here and get out. Well, for most of us that job opportunity is at best tenuous, even in some of the sciences where work was once plentiful. Engineering and business majors, who might feel secure at the moment, are nonetheless vulnerable to the indiscriminate vicissitudes of the job market — who can say what the situation will be in ten, even four years' time?

As a result of all this, students are forced to see the university for what it really is — a place where student interests do not necessarily coincide with those of the faculty or administration, and where there is less and less reason to be a passive student in hope of imminent employment.

And hence we arrive at that well-worn topic, student unionization.

Were students to actively participate in a union, the benefits would be enormous — lobbying at the State House with real (20,000 people worth) voting and financial power, bargaining with faculty and administration on a legally equal footing. And, perhaps most importantly, gaining confidence and practical experience in organizing and acting collectively for future interactions with big business and big government.

The danger in the formation of a union is that it could itself become another large, impersonal and undemocratic institution. many of the union advocates on this campus devoted much of their summer to attempting to design a union structure that will remain democratic and participatory. But even the most participatory theoretical structure will remain elitist in practice without the willful participation of many students.

That is precisely where the activists of the Student Organizing Project (SOP) and the student government have failed, in spite of their diligent efforts. Apparently no one has made it clear to the majority of students exactly what they stand to gain from unionization—perhaps because no one really knows (there has never been a true union of students in the U.S.). Until someone "brings it home" to the students, most will remain skeptical of what they will benefit by joining.

The Student Senate has voted this year "The Year of the Union," and considering the election results of last week there exists a strong possibility that some sort of union structure for student government will be voted into effect by next summer. Organized around dormitory, academic and other interest councils, such a system would be the first to actually represent students according to their real interests. But the fear remains that if students still refuse to participate, the same old core of union politicians will run the show.

A union without a broad base of student support will be as powerless as the present form of student government has ever been. Bargaining without the threat of some unified action (such as tuition or fee strikes) or lobbying without the support of a sizeable number will be a lesson in futility.

Students should begin to ask questions about the reorganization plans. Only in that way will they come to understand, criticize, and eventually be comfortable with whatever structure is arrived at. They should demand to know who will be responsible for what at all stages in the development of the union, so that they may ultimately share the power that will hopefully be a result of their participation.

Beware of anyone who suggests that student unionization will be a panacea for all our problems at students. The nature of the society that produces, maintains and surrounds the university precludes that possibility. And wrestling any amount of power from the bureaucracies and special interests that presently clutch onto it will be an arduous, frustrating task. The reward? Real power, and real confidence in ourselves as individuals. And at long last, the beginnings of real change in a society that is in dire need of it.

I was, being human, born alone;
I am, being woman, hard beset;
I live by squeezing from a stone
The little nourishment I get.
— Elinor Wylie from Let No Charitable Hope

Since the beginning of time there has always been this question of where a woman's craftiness comes from. Genesis says it came from a snake or man from whom she was begotten. The Greeks said it came from a box and grew from curiosity.

Despite what those from the past have said, however, a woman's craftiness does not come from a box or a snake, but actually from a woman's need to be effective. Man has simply not left a woman with any other way to express her wants and obtain them than through her craftiness. It is her only source of power. It is, you could say, part of the female ego.

So, I hear so many men saying — how can I trust a woman with her craftiness? I'll tell you quite simply — respect her and treat her as an equal so there will be no need for her craftiness.

I don't think there is anything more infuriating than a man who, when asking an "intellectual" question, turns away from a woman with whom he has just been talking, to another man. It's happened to me and I

Television consciousness

To the Editor:

In regard to the racist, discriminatory, and bizarre commentary by Stephen N. Mathieu on September 28, I would like to express my deepest regret. Your ignorance and your TV-made mind perhaps cause you to write such totally ridiculous diatribe as a way of getting the selfish attention you apparently need. Certainly you were unaware of what an awful projection of yourself was published.

I feel sorry for you, because your perceptions of the "real world" are way off. Let me tell you that it is something more than your hometown social clubs. Your capitalistic narrow mind doesn't allow you to see that we pay taxes as well as you do, that the "public payroll" is our money too. There is no free ride. We have the right to promote educational supportive, and cultural activities for our people, in our own language and in our own way, without your discriminatory needling. Our values and culture are part of our daily lives, and for that matter, so are taxes.

Therefore, the real problem is that we need even more money from RSO in order to educate people like you that the "real world" is something else besides: MacDonalds, Lite Beer, Starsky & Hutch, Farrah Fawcett-Majors, Star Wars, Johnny Carson and the Red Sox.

Some PAUMA corrections

To the Editor:

The article appearing in the Collegian on September 23rd has given the Executive Committee and other members of PAUMA cause for concern. The headline, "PAUMA Denied Recognition" is misleading in that it seems to imply that a specific action was taken by someone denying recognition. This was not the case. PAUMA is, in fact, recognized as a governance unit both by the campus administration and by the other campus governance units. The current discussion of recognition centers around the fact that formal recognition of the professional staff does not exist in Board of Trustee Document No. T73-098, the Governance Doctrine, while faculty and student interests are specified.

The first paragraph of the same article refers to PAUMA as "the union". The Professional Association [PAUMA] is not a union and has no union affiliation. Another organization known as the Professional Staff for Collective Bargaining [PSCB] is attempting to establish a union for professional staff. It is not affiliated with PAUMA.

The goal of the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is to work with the administration, on behalf of the professional staff of this campus, in the development of personnel policies and

Franklin teachers will appeal fines

FRANKLIN, Mass. [AP] — Teachers who were fined a total of $135,950 during a two-week strike plan to appeal those penalties, the president of the Franklin Teacher's Association said.

Mary Elizabeth Carlson said lawyers were preparing the appeals. In addition to the fines imposed on teachers, the union was fined a total of $165,000, imposed at the rate of $15,000 a day for 11 days.

Ms. Carlson said the association's 280 members pays dues of $10 a year, providing an annual income of $2,800.

"I don't know where we will get the money if the fines stand," she said.

During the strike, 74 teachers were jailed but not fined.

The strike ended last Friday morning. The association and the school committee agreed on a contract three hours before 71 more teachers were to appear in court on contempt charges.

And, another 50 teachers, originally due in Norfolk Superior Court on Monday, are scheduled to appear there on Tuesday. Judge John M. Greaney is to decide then whether they must sign a pato purge themselves of contempt charges.

The Franklin school system has 286 teachers, 11 schools and 5,000 students.

On Saturday, the 47 directors of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, meeting in Hyannis, called for major revision of the state's collective bargaining law.

They approved a resolution calling for right-to-strike legislation and other measures to increase the power of teachers at bargaining tables.

State law prohibits strikes by public employes, including teachers.

Career development library is open Thursday nights

The Career Library (Room 119, Berkshire House) and the career-personal counseling service of the Community Development Center will be operating from 6 - 9 p.m. Thursdays, beginning Oct. 13. These expanded hours are in addition to CDC's regular hours: 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The Career Library contains resource materials, including audio-cassettes, designed to facilitate exploration of career areas and graduate programs on a self-help basis. Counselors are available.

In addition, a variety of workshops are offered on an on-going basis, to deal with specific areas, such as study skills, resume writing, interviewing skills and career opportunities for various majors. For further information, check the Collegian regularly, call 5-0333, or visit the CDC, Berkshire House 123.

Simchat Torah celebration tomorrow in Student Union

The holiday of Simchat Torah, or "Rejoicing with the Torah", will begin tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

This is a grand celebration, involving the entire Jewish community, both young and old, based on the six-century old custom of reading the beginning of the Torah immediately after the last portion is completed. The last section of Deuteronomy is read, followed by the first section of Genesis, thus assuring that the cycle has been made complete. This is the only time of the year that the Torah is read at night.

The entire community is invited to share in the merriment and celebration of this annual holiday. The evening, sponsored by B'nai B'rith Hillel, will begin with the Maariv Service and continue joyously into the night.

Student jobs available in research and sales work

The Student Employment Office presently has off-campus employers seeking students to work part-time in areas such as research and sales. In many cases, work may be done on campus at one's own convenience.

For further information contact Ellie West at Student Employment, 239A Whitmore or caal 545-0801 or 5-1951.

How to trust a woman

usually answer his question and walk away. It is irritable, condescending and not only downgrading to the woman, but to the man himself because he is showing-off his rudeness.

I don't believe there is anything more frustrating than a man who only looks at and speaks about the physical side of a woman. Another is a man who lectures away at a woman as if she were his student and turns away when she says something to him about him.

All of these types of behavior show lack of respect and down-grade (perhaps unintentionally) a woman, her character and her own sense of independence. It is as if the man were saying, "You cannot exist without me. I am better than you and so you must depend on me."

This inhibits a woman's character, her own sense of power and independence and leaves her to only one method: craftiness, like "squeezing from a stone the little nourishment" one can get as Elinor Wylie expresses in her poem.

So man has created the craftiness he deplores.

So what is the magic word for stopping this craftiness? — respect. Many men have told me they like a woman who can look up to them. Well, so does a woman. She likes someone who can not only look up to but who looks up to her. The male should not have to be superior to a woman, but should be equal. There should be mutual respect.

Equality is the key word. A woman likes to be taken seriously, as an equal. She likes to know that she can be as effective as a man.

A woman likes to know that her mind is just as important as her body. She likes to have her opinions, knowledge and intelligence respected. She likes to have her whole self respected.

Society, unfortunately, has left this equal respect to the wayside since the beginning. The Roman and Greek wives were left to raise the family. Not even was the husband expected to remain faithful to them. A woman had no power. She was not a citizen. She was practically a slave — to her own home.

And this slavery continued through the ages. In America, in the 19th century when the first industrial plant opened in Lowell, Massachusetts, any woman who worked there (and there were many) was not respected when she returned home. Was it that man feared the guile of woman to take over his dominant position in society?

Virginia Slims advertisements do well in depicting the craftiness of women, showing them smoking behind screens, in the wine cellar, and equally depicts the husband's reaction. He always kicks her out. (A blessing for the wife!)

A feminist movement which in actuality began in the 16th century has finally built up enough momentum in this decade to reach many people and has definitely invaded college campuses, so hopefully our generation will not have the same biases and mind-restrictions as the generations before us.

And with this feminist attitude, this indoctrined equality of women, comes one basic humanist idea — equality of all. And from equality comes trust. Dismantling someone's freedom causes rebellion, in the case of a woman her craftiness, which leads to further distrust. Take away this slavery, this inequality, and you'll have trust. Respect on one side creates trust and respect on both sides.

How do you trust a woman? Leave her everything, leave her power and she'll leave her craftiness.

Retirement notes: a new twist

Retirement speeches are boring: some poor fat slob, either kicked out of office for incompetence, age or unethical behavior stands before us and spits drivel for hours. Quoting pithy maxims and telling Henny Youngman one-liners, the 'lucky guy' keeps us snoring, oblivious to his departure over fruit cup and a Timex. But, suppose that we didn't have to listen to the winding, discursive, self-effacint prattle put forth. Suppose instead, that we were privy to the short concise notes that were sent to the boss, or the close relative. Impossible, you cry? Can't be done? Wrong, geriatric breath!

Pat, Julie, David:

While praying with me last night, Henry told me that I should take a vacation. Bob H. says that California is nice this time of year. We won't be gone long, I hope: just in case, take Checkers down from the wall. Bring some copies of the Post along in case he starts splitting at the seams. Pat: don't forget your cloth coat, and remind Davie to bring his baseball cards.

Remind me to tell ...

damn Butterfield.

Jimmy:

I have decided to return to Calhoun. I understand that the bank is having problems with some damn bureaucrats. Besides, peanut crop is up. I am taking the 12:00 flight out from Dulles on Calhoun International Bank Airline. I left a check for the amount I owe you on your desk. After all, remember what Shakespeare said: "neither a borrower nor a lender be". See you Saturday at Billy's (burb) BarbeQ.

Duke:

Hokkaido bear returned, so I am moving on. By the power vested in me by the Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts, I hereby award you the following degree with all privileges under custom and law it may bring. A Bachelors degree in Higher Education Planning. By the way: is it true that you aren't going to run for reelection? Just remember; you won't have Bo-Bo to kick around anymore!

Woody

God:

I quit; damn Bishops are getting on my case. But, they will change their minds when they walk into the Executive Bishops Bathroom and get hit in the face with a bra. That will teach them. Anyway; Avey Maria, gee it's good to leave you, doing the Episcopal Rag.

To whom it may concern:

To hell with you. Some advice: don't walk the streets at night; invest your pay in blue chips; eat Kosher hot dogs; pie Bella if she opens her fat trip. If all else fails — secede.

Abe Beame

God:

I am getting too old for this business. Going to Florida to a small retirement community I heard of. Maybe in my spare time I can get a job promoting yogurt.

The time has come, the walrus said, to talk of many things, of Nortons, Foremans, Fraziers and stepping from the ring.
The name of Ali will go the way of other greats, down infamy row,
Until a new divorce, more alimony, and I need more dough.

Never you fool — I did it for the money.

Kent editorial an insult

To the Editor:

I recently read an article in the editorial section of this paper which only served to further destroy the already dwindling faith I had in the Collegian as an objective reporting media. I am referring to Steve Dubin's article about Kent State, "Gidget goes ... " [9-29], in which he ridicules the action taken by the students at Kent by setting them in a Disney type scenario. Well Mr. Dubin, that type of analogy may fit your mentality, but it insults mine, as I am sure it does the Senate who found it important enough to allocate students over three thousand dollars for two trips to Kent. Your view also insults the 82 students who sacrificed their weekends to attend the national demonstration last September 24. Also insulted are the over two thousand other students, from all over the nation, who also attended that raaly.

Your treatment of such an important issue shows me, as well as the rest of the Collegian's readers, that you are uninformed of the issues you write about. You probably don't realize that Kent represents more than just a gym. You probably can't comprehend the ideals and principles at stake in this issue. Nobody ever put that in a Disney movie.

I suggest that you attend the seminar next Tuesday, in room 165 of the Campus Center. This lecture will feature Alan Canforas, one of the nine students injured at Kent, and a member of the May 4th Coalition. Maybe he can put the issue on a plane such that you can understand it.

Roberto Bolandrina

Letter misrepresented

To the Editor:

As the author of a recent letter to this paper, I expected and hoped that my comments would elicit some response from the Collegian readers. I would have been disappointed had they not. Nevertheless, I was dismayed to read Degli Altri's reply of 9-29. For either Mr. Altri completely misunderstood my meaning or is guilty of wholesale misrepresentation of my views.

Mr. Altri suggests that I glorified Ms. Bryant simply for daring to be different. I did not give such a reason [and an absurd one it would be]; moreover, I did not attempt to glorify her in the least.

What I did say was, "There is no blame in fearing and respecting such a person".

Unfortunately, some misguided title writer at the Collegian singled out a part of this sentence and came up with "Anita deserves respect". The choice was totally arbitrary and not at all indicative of the theme of my letter. Why didn't the Collegian choose the other half of the same sentence and entitle my letter, "Anita should be feared?" The result would have been no less devastating in prejudicing my letter's intent.

What I did try to point out was that:

1. Disagreement between human beings should be conducted on the level of ideas and not on the level of personalities. Hurling insults demeans not only the victim of those taunts, it demeans the hurlers as well.

2. The greatest wrong that Anita Bryant has committed is that she will not conform to conventional wisdom. I do not mean to imply that Ms. Bryant has been blameless in the conduct of her campaign. Yet I do feel that in today's world where homosexuality is accepted by most intellectuals and would-be intellectuals, it is her non-conformity which has caused her the most trouble.

3. Newspaper articles concerning such important and complex themes as homosexuality should be written in a mature and sensitive manner.

It is Mr. Altri's opinion that Ms. Bryant is a woman of facist attitudes, a conformer to reactionary pressures and perhaps even a Hitler. I, for one, refuse to be swayed by such name calling any more than by the name-calling of certain "anti-homosexual rights" groups.

Bill Tarter

Soccer - The coming of age

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

For some, the war is over.

At the expense of our beloved Back Bay Bombers the insufferable New York Yankees were sipping the bubbly, in honor of clinching their second consecutive Eastern Division Crown.

For the Red Sox, they now have months to contemplate all those if's and but's and could have's and should have's which are inevitable for a team that finishes as close as they came.

Now that the '77 edition of the Towne Team has become past history, we are forced to swallow the condolence, "wait till next year," once more.

Meanwhile, across the river from where the Yankee victory celebration was taking place, in a land the locals call "Joisey", a sports event of even greater magnitude was being held.

A man called Pele was playing in his last professional game. It wasn't just the end of a season, but the end of a legendary career. For the fans that appreciated the game, it was the end of an era.

To those uninitiated with the sport of soccer — he was the best, the model all players would aspire to.

To understand his greatness you would have to use other sport analogies. He was soccer's equivalent to O.J. Simpson, Bobby Orr, Julius Erving or Willie Mays.

Even this may be an injustice to the man because his fame, unlike the others, is worldwide. There is not a continent on the globe where he is not revered and considered the epitome of the hero.

When you say the word soccer one man comes to mind — Pele.

When he arrived in America three years ago, along with the magic foot packed inside his suitcase, he also brought with him the dream of accomplishing what everybody else had considered a lost cause — resurrecting soccer into a major sport.

Not just something that the private schools played, or that "thing" a lot of those crazy foreigners liked to do on weekends, but something that competed with other pastimes of football and baseball.

Pele summed up his thoughts in his native Brazilian tone, "If I fulfill this hope I will have achieved the most important goal of my life." (Apparently, soccer also taught him the ability to play upon words.)

Realistically, nobody thought one man could carry a struggling sport on his shoulders. It seemed impossible. Yet in the same city that hosted this week's Muhammad Ali Heavyweight Championship fight, the NFL's Giants and Jets and the pannant winning Yankees, an exhibition soccer game outdrew them all.

Over 75,000 people absorbed the soaking rain to witness Pele's farewell and to thank him. In typical Hollywood fashion he scored a goal in this, his final game as he had so many times before.

As the game ended the players of both teams hoisted him upon their shoulders and carried him around the field for the last time. The chorus of "Pele! Pele! Pele!" grew long and loud while Pele himself was gleefully waving two flags, one Brazilian and one American.

Genuine tears of joy poured down his cheeks. It was a touching moment, his "impossible dream" had been realized, the 75,000 there would attest to that.

Dreams don't always come true, but to those that are gifted — they do.

Jets upend erring Pats with last-second kick

NEW YORK [AP] — Al Palewicz recovered punt returner Mike Haynes' fumble with one minute to go and Pat Leahy kicked a tie-breaking 32-yard field goal with 23 seconds remaining to give the New York Jets a 30-27 National Football League victory over the reeling New England Patriots yesterday.

The Patriots, 1-2, who lost 30-27 to Cleveland in overtime last Monday night, appeared to send Sunday's game into overtime, driving 75 yards for a tying touchdown on Steve Grogan's 27-yard scoring pass to Darryl Stingley with 1:27 left in the fourth period.

But the Jets, 1-2, after failing to move and punting, got the ball back at the New England 29 when Shelton Diggs and Billy Hardee stripped it away from Haynes and Palewicz, a linebacker on the special team, recovered. The Jets stayed on the ground, Bruce Harper rumbling for 14 yards on one play to set up Leahy's winning kick.

New York, trailing 20-14 going into the final period, roared ahead with two touchdowns.

First, linebacker Greg Buttle intercepted a Grogan pass and returned it 44 yards for a score, then quarterback Richard Todd threw a 25-yard TD strike to Wesley Walker. Leahy missed the extra point on the second score, giving the Patriots their chance to tie it.

Each team scored two touchdowns in the first period, Todd getting both for the Jets with a three-yard pass to Charlie White and a seven-yard quarterback keeper and rookie Raymond Clayborn scoring one for New England on a 100-yard kickoff return.

Todd's touchdown pass to White 6:20 into the first period capped a 59-yard drive highlighted by Walker's 38-yard reception that put the ball on the New England 21.

★Booters fall in overtime

net," UMass coach Russ Kidd said after the contest. "Both Mark Hogdon in goal and Larry Aronson on defense were excellent."

The biggest chance for the Minutemen to break into the lead came midway through the second half when freshman Tommy Koutsoukos was awarded a penalty shot after being tripped on a breakaway in front of the Vermont cage. But, on a play that's usually a sure goal 99 per cent of the time, Koutsoukos didn't score as his blazing shot struck the post to the left of the Vermont netminder and bounded off to the left.

"It's the first time in my life that I've missed a penalty shot," lamented Koutsoukos. "That was the difference; if I had scored on that shot, we would have won."

Another factor in the Minutemen's loss was the below-par performance of a co-captain Ed Niemiec, who is still bothered by an injury to his thigh that he received in the Keene State game last Wednesday.

"Ed is usually a dominating force in our game and to have him not playing at 100 per cent had to hurt us," Kidd explained.

The Catamounts were led by Phil Stevenson, who registered two goals and one assist enroute to one of his finest performances this season.

Vermont mentor Joe Rineheardt saw his team raise its record to 5-0 this year with the win. "It was simple, we wanted it more than they did," Rineheardt said. "Each team had their chances and the missed penalty shot when UMass seemed to have the momentum really inspired us."

The UMass loss saw its record slip to 3-1 on the year and was the first time this season that the ball found its way into the Minuteman cage.

Mascolo was assisted on his first goal by Bill Leary and received a pass from Ed Niemiec to score his second. "Both goals were just a case of me being in the right place at the right time," explained Mascolo. Coach Kidd was pleased with Mascolo's performance and said that "Joe was ready to pop a few."

The game itself was a physical affair that saw the ball change hands very frequently. Koutsoukos, a Montreal native, was injured twice in the first half, the second injury resulting in a bloody nose that caused him to sit out part of the first half and a few minutes of the second.

The loss should see the Minutemen drop down from their number three ranking in New England while Vermont should improve upon its number 13 spot in the national poll.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, OCTOBER 3 — Born today, you are a sincere, affectionate and sympathetic person – but you are not inclined to demonstrate your concern. Many think of you as an aloof and isolated individual. In truth, you observe and inwardly respond to everything that goes on about you. As a very young child, you may well have been tempermental, but a lack of family encouragement in the display of emotion gradually caused you to develop a veneer of unresponsiveness.

A person of great determination, what you decide to do you will do if you have even a modicum of the talent necessary. You are not frightened by large odds; rather, they challenge you. At the same time, however, you are wary of taking on more than your limitations can tolerate. Thus, though you may happily accept a challenge, it is never a challenge that comes equipped with insurmountable obstacles.

You have seldom been discouraged by anything life has brought you. You will know success, failure, grief, happiness, disappointment and fulfillment -- and you will face your life with a rational approach. In short, you are one who says yes to life, not no.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let our birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — You might be wise to keep negative responses to yourself, especially in reaction to another's recent efforts to succeed.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Important matters may take up more time than you had hoped. You have to put off leisure-time activity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Morning confusion could cause you to react badly to another's suggestion for afternoon fun and profit. Make sincere apologies.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — If you are depending upon the benefits of an immediate success, you may be disappointed. Success is sure – but distant.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Keep to your own concerns today. Others may ask for your advice, but you would do well to keep your views to yourself for now.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Tact is essential in your dealings with others today – and most especially should you do business with long-term friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You are probably your own worst enemy at this time. Take advice from those who have an objective view of the situation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take no risks with profits already in hand. This is an excellent time for resting on your laurels. Advise a youngster on his future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Unless you can remain emotionally calm, you will very likely upset your own and another's apple cart. Rationalize difficulties.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — What you anticipate is worse than the reality fast approaching. Relax and prepare to move quickly, and accurately.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Guard personal relationships with the young. Children look to you with trust and confidence. Take care not to mar the image.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Refuse to take sides in an argument that does not really concern you. You could easily be persuaded into an untenable position.

Spikers bow to Bears

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

Before an extremely partisan and vocal crowd, the UMass volleyball team lost its home opening match to an experienced Bridgewater State squad at NOPE gym on Friday night.

The final scores were 12-15, 12-15, 15-10, and 11-15, but the match could have easily gone the maximum five games as both teams appeared to be very evenly matched.

UMass led early in the first game but Bridgewater battled back to tie the score at six. For the rest of the game the lead seesawed back and forth with neither team ever leading by more than a point until, with the score even at 12, Bridgewater took advantage of some poor returns and a couple of missed hits by UMass to post the 15-12 win. Again, as in last week's tri-match, the spikers seemed to panic when they fell behind.

Bridgewater picked up where it had left off in the second game as the Bears opened up a quick 6-1 lead behind some strong spiking and overall sparkling offensive play.

UMass, on the other hand, could sustain no kind of a consistent offense. Heidi Dickson's outstanding spiking brought UMass to within four at 10-6 but the women from Bridgewater kept their cool and gained a 13-6 lead. With Dickson serving bullets, the Minutewomen rallied to within one at 13-12 but again, their opponents survived to win 15-12.

The visitors looked like a sure bet to sweep as they opened up a 7-2 lead in the third game. UMass looked very confused as a number of hittable shots fell in between players and the team seemed to always wind up crowded into one corner of the court.

Freshman Peggy Barger, the tallest player on the UMass squad, was the one bright spot as she came up with a couple of key blocks and spikes to keep the spikers within striking distance at 9-5.

From that point on, the momentum shifted in favor of UMass as, for the first time, the women began to gain confidence in their offensive attack. They ran off a string of nine points to Bridgewater's one and won the game 15-10.

In the final game, the tables were turned as it was UMass that started out fast, gaining a quick 5-0 lead. However, Bridgewater battled back to tie the score at eight and were never headed as it went on to win the game 15-11 and the match three games to one.

UMass never quit, though, as Bridgewater had three serves for match point before it clinched the win.

Despite the loss, Coach Dianne Thompson was very happy with the team's performance.

She said, "This team has nothing to be ashamed of ... This is a whole different team from the one last week in New Hampshire ... I'm not sad at all."

Entertaining is the only word which describes what happened last Friday night at the NOPE gym. The UMass junior varsity volleyball team played Bridgewater State in its first match of the season and lost by a score of 6-15, 15-7, 9-15.

Not entertaining, you say to yourself. Perhaps boring?

The score does not indicate how exciting this match actually was, not only to the player or the fan, but everyone connected with the game.

It began as a rather pallid affair, with Bridgewater scoring the first six points, 11 out of 15, and winning the game by a score of 15-6. The Minutewomen looked awful, with mixups in communication between the front and back courts as the reason for giving Bridgewater most of their points.

The second game began to look like a replay of the first. UMass was trailing 6-1 when Coach Bonnie Buongiorne, looking a little discouraged by the score, called time out.

Now it was the fans' turn to revive the team. They clapped frantically, and yelled "Go UMass" at the top of their lungs. The fans felt that it was now their responsibility to do their own type of coaching, the kind that builds confidence into players who have lost it.

The results were quite startling, as the Minutewomen scored fourteen out of the next fifteen points to win the game 15-7. Everything that they did from spikes to saves had been executed perfectly. The momentum (or confidence energy) had switched to their side.

However, in the decisive third game, Bridgewater began like the first two, building up a seemingly insurmountable 8-1 lead, before Coach Buongiorne wisely called another time out. But fan enthusiasm did not take a break, and they applauded wildly when the Minutewomen returned to the court.

For the second time in the match, the UMass six, which consisted of Elizabeth Masse, Joyce Gresl, Brenda Simmons, Joanne Eames, Christine Perron, and Lisa Lee, came back and tied the score at 9 before bowing 9-15.

The UMass field hockey team avoided Saturday's rain and captured its third victory, to remain undefeated with a decisive 2-0 win at Northeastern.

UMass coach Judith Davidson commended her squad's play for being a "very balanced affair, everyone played well."

Both UMass goals were scored in the first half. Co-captain Cheryl Meliones fired a hard drive to attain her third goal in two games. Meliones' last victim was Keene St.

Sue Kibling's flick shot, into the right corner of the Huskies net, added an insurance goal.

UMass clearly controlled the contest except for the waning moments of play. The Minutewomen penetrated past the 25-yard mark for 15:10 of regulation play. The Huskies could only muster 2:03.

Davidson lauded her entire team for its outstanding play. The Minutewomen's anticipation was the best it has been all season. The UMass stickers' "passing was excellent", noted Davidson. Their passes had finesse, as well as power when it was needed, she said.

Judy Kennedy, at left link, was simply "spectacular". Kennedy, who was injured for most of last season, performed the best game Davidson has seen her play.

Jody Wickman received laurels from her coach, also. Wickman's "cut was just perfect," Davidson commented. Wickman, at left back, made a straight cut into an open area, drew the defense, and left her teammates plenty of breathing space.

In the sub-varsity contest before the main event Saturday, UMass continued its quest towards the New England's by soundly defeating Northeastern in a dual meet, 19-41.

Led by the consistency of Mike Dorion and Kevin Molteni, who shared first place in 15:26, the Minutemen pushed across six runners before the Huskies could manage three.

Bob Hunt, Craig Arnold and Matt Anderson finished the scoring for UMass with 4th, 5th and 7th, respectively.

The efforts of Tim Beauparlant and Jim Gallagher as sixth and seventh men polished off the top ten.

★ Gridders

the score was already 33-0 UMass by that time, and all that was left was for the subs to play out the string, and for Fallon and Cummings to set their records.

Almost overlooked in the light of the unexpected passing show was the fact that UMass' senior halfback Billy Coleman continued to show that 1977 may be his best year ever.

Coleman gained 127 yards in 16 carries, including 43-yard and 20-yard scampers. His day's work pushed his rushing total up to 395 yards for the year.

But passing was the story of this game. And MacPherson was not shocked by his team's ability to throw.

"It's not a new wrinkle to our attack," the coach said of his willingness to go to the air. "I always knew Mike Fallon was a good passer."

And Fallon proved that the Penguins were sitting ducks for his tactics.

The UMass men's tennis team dropped two out of three doubles matches and consequently its match with the University of Vermont Saturday by a 5-4 score.

The match was begun on the lower Boyden courts, until rain forced the coaches to move the match indoors at the Amherst Tennis Academy in Sunderland.

The singles matches had been completed, with the teams splitting, and the doubles had begun when the rains came, forcing the postponement.

Steve Heyl, at third singles, defeated UVM's Bruce Rockowitz, 3-6, 6-4, 7-6. Freshman Keith Hovland, playing at fourth singles, beat the Catamount's Mark Compagnon, 6-4, 6-1. UMass' other frosh star, Mark Huetteman, downed Vermont's Frank Babbott, also in straight sets, 7-6, 6-3, to take fifth singles.

Huetteman and Hovland were also the only doubles combo to win, as they defeated UVM's Jeff Degrott and Neil Light, 6-2, 7-6.

"I'm very pleased with their play," said coach Jay Ogden of his freshmen. "They've really been doing a job for us."

Hovland and Huetteman were moved up to fourth and fifth singles, respectively for the match, and "did well," according to Ogden.

"They'll do well in the Yankee Conference matches at number three doubles, too," said Ogden.

"It was a close match that could have gone either way. We were unbelievably even, and this year's Yankee Conference should be the closest in a while, since there are five really good times."

If you are interested in math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the NUPOC-Collegiate Program (NUPOC is short for Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate), and if you qualify it can pay you as much as $611 a month for the remainder of your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you will receive an additional year of advanced technical education, education that would cost thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy we pay you. And at the end of the year of training, you'll receive a $3,000 cash bonus.

It isn't easy. Only one of every six applicants will be selected, and there are fewer than 300 openings. But those who make it find themselves in one of the most elite engineering training programs anywhere. With unequalled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, plus travel, medical benefits and education opportunities.

UMass harriers' depth keys quad meet win

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass men's cross country team adopted a winning formula at Franklin Park in Boston Saturday by employing the philosophy that "the team that runs together, wins together."

Responding faithfully to the challenge of competing without the services of two of the top three runners on the squad, UMass laced up victories number four, five and six on the season. At the finish line the score read: UMass, 31; Northeastern, 49; St. Johns, 50; and Rhode Island, 94.

Individually, NU's John Flora set the tempo by winning on his home course in 23:55. UMass's fast-charging All-American Stetson Arnold overcame St. John's Steve Callahan with 100 yards to go and claimed second place in 24:06.

In a pack of harriers further back, the Minutemen's Lou Panaccione represented the force that pulled four teammates into the next seven positions. Panaccione finished 4th in 24:40, Kevin McCusker 6th in 24:48, with the brotherly effort of Matt and Tom Wolff rounding out the top ten in 25:05 and 25:08, respectively.

"I'm really pleased and somewhat surprised at the performances of our middle runners," said head coach Ken O'Brien, "Lou Panaccione blazed like fire over the latter part of the course, and Kevin McCusker, Matt and Tom Wolff, and Mike Morris all ran strong, supplying us with a heck of a group."

What could have dictated the outcome of the meet were surprises before and after the race. Bruce Bickford, Northeastern's All-America selection, was in street clothes on the sideline when the gun sounded, and Mike Quinn, UMass's celebrated harrier, did not finish when he was forced to drop out after three miles because of stomach cramps.

"Yes, I was surprised Bickford wasn't running, but without Frank and Quinnie, two of our top three runners, the outcome was certainly balanced; not by design, but by circumstance," said Coach O'Brien.

Co-Captain Frank Carroll sat out the quadrangular contest.

Commented O'Brien, "It has been our policy in the past to regulate the races of our top runners. Frankie looked tired in our last race against Providence, so instead of running him in our third contest in the past eight days, I decided to rest him."

After the race, immediate concern was directed towards Mike Quinn. "Hopefully, it's just a stomach cramp," said O'Brien. "This is the first time this season we've run in the morning. Digestion is different, perhaps that was the cause. The next few days we'll be observing Mike closely."

"I felt fine before the race," explained Quinn, "but at the mile mark I began to feel the cramps. I tried to shrug it off, and for awhile I forgot about it, but with every bump in the course it just got worse. I felt good all this week, I'll just have to wait and see what happens."

O'Brien was quick to single out "depth" as the key to impressive victories over rival Northeastern, St. John's and Rhode Island. "Quinnie and Stetson have been there before, but several of our scorers today haven't."

At the two mile mark of the race Lou Panaccione was the Minutemen's 6th man, and 12th overall. With a mile and a half to go he started his drive towards the frontrunners to become UMass' second man.

"With about a mile to go I caught a pack of runners," said Panaccione.

"I didn't feel good at all at the early stages of the race, but fortunately felt stronger as the race progressed."

Kevin McCusker showed an improvement of 30 seconds over his best time on Franklin Park.

"I felt after my last race, concentration alone would improve my performance. When Lou went by me near the end of the race I got pulled in with him," said McCusker.

Northeastern coach Everitt Baker explained Bickford's reason for not competing as an "aggravated hamstring."

"It's just a slight pull. I worked on a farm this summer, that could have done it," replied Bickford.

The Huskies' All American should be back in action in a couple of weeks, and barring any further injuries, should make his presence felt in the New England's.

"Many people will view this meet and debate whether Northeastern deserves their ranking," said O'Brien. "I think the rankings are justified. Bob Flora never runs that well this early, but always rises in the big ones. With Bickford healthy they're the same threat as last year, possessing three very good front runners."

Gridders paste Penguins, 54-13

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It was almost unbelievable.

Take that back. It WAS unbelievable.

The UMass football team discovered Saturday that a football could be thrown as well as run, and using the aerial route, demolished Youngstown State, 54-13, before 7200 fans at Alumni Stadium.

After relying upon a ground attack to churn to their previous two wins, the Minutemen, now 3-1, let their passing attack out of the closet against the Penguins and rolled up an extremely impressive victory.

More specifically, the chief offensive architects of the triumph were quarterback Mike Fallon and tight end Kevin Cummings.

Fallon threw five touchdown passes to establish a UMass single-game record (breaking the old mark of four, held by Jerry Whelchel and Peil Pennington). Four of the TD tosses came in the first half, when the Minutemen were building up a 33-7 intermission lead.

In all, Fallon completed 11 of 15 passes in the first half, good for 188 yards.

Fallon threw only three times in the second half, but his only completion out of the trio was an historic one. It was directed by Cummings, who revived memories of his 1976 season as he hauled in a 22-yard touchdown toss.

With the reception, Cummings broke the Minuteman mark for most scoring passes caught in a game. He eclipsed the old mark of two, which had been held by 10 players.

But why the decision to go to the air?

"The key was that Youngstown threw an eight-man front against us," UMass coach Dick MacPherson explained. "The coaches upstairs picked it up, and we decided to exploit it."

That UMass did, who no-hols-barred passing attack.

But to only credit the offense would be a grave injustice to the Minutemen's defensive unit, which forced four Youngstown fumbles and intercepted one pass. Four of the five Penguin turnovers led directly to UMass scores.

After Fallon was stymied on a quarterback keeper on fourth and one from the Penguin 22 early in the first period, Youngstown gave the ball back to the Minutemen on its own one.

A holding call on first down pushed the Penguins back to their own 10, whereupon a fouled-up handoff by quarterback Bill Fink caused the ball to bounce loose. Defensive end John Willis pounced on it on the Youngstown one. After two running plays got the Minutemen nowhere, Fallon rolled out and threw a play-action one-yard touchdown pass to a wide-open Cummings.

When Youngstown got its hands on the ball again, new quarterback Keith Snoody's fumble on first down was pounced on by defensive end John D'Amato at the Penguin 23.

Fallon immediately took advantage of a befuddled group of Penguin defenders to hit Cummings with a 23-yard paydirt toss.

The score continued to mount as in the second period as Fallon threw scoring passes to Moses Williams (22 yards on a super sliding catch) and to John Gladchuk (eight yards).

Sandwiched in between the touchdowns was a 26-yard scoring jaunt by Hank Sareault, who bowled over three Penguins on his way to the end zone.

Although Youngstown did answer with one first half TD on a five-yard scoring pass,

Joel Mascolo notched two goals for the UMass soccer team on the Boyden field Saturday afternoon, but it wasn't good enough as the UMass soccer team fell to the University of Vermont in overtime for the second time in three years.

Mascolo's goals came in the second half as the Minutemen fought back from a 2-0 deficit which the Catamounts had built up in the first half.

After that, the game remained at two apiece until regulation time ended and the two ten minute overtime periods began. Vermont scored once in each of those periods and when the smoke cleared the Catamounts were the victor by a 4-2 score in a game in which they had been clearly dominated by the Minutemen in regulation time.

After the game, UMass head football coach Dick MacPherson was asked whether the 243 net yards passing was a new wrinkle in the UMass offense.

"A new wrinkle? No, I wouldn't say that. We have always had it. We just decided to exploit it today," said MacPherson.

Before this victory over Youngstown, UMass had completed just ten of 32 passes in three games. Its opponents had compiled 523 yards while the UMass aerial attack was limited to 185 total yards.

But Saturday, five out of the eight Minuteman touchdowns were scored via the air. Not just one yard "dump passes" but legitimate bombs, including touchdown passes of 23 yards to tight end Kevin Cummings, a 21 yarder to the other tight end Moses Williams, and a 48 yard completion to split end Dennis Dent.

Mike Fallon came all the way back from a knee injury to enjoy his best passing day en route to setting a new record for most touchdown passes thrown in a game. Fallon, establishing the record (set by Peil Pennington in 1972), threw five TD passes, three to Cummings. On the day, Fallon completed 12-18 passes and had no interceptions.

Cummings set a record for most touchdown passes received in a game set by himself last year with two. Against Youngstown, Cummings caught five passes for 93 yards.

Cummings, injured for the latter half of the '77 season, but still managing to compile enough statistics to make him one of the Yankee Conference leading receivers, enjoyed his best day since coming back from his knee injury.

"It sure makes me feel good to see the Kevin Cummings of old come alive again. With him going well, it takes pressure off our wide receivers, our runners, and our quarterback," said MacPherson.

"I'm glad to help this team again," said Cummings. "The first game against Army, I didn't have my timing back and I dropped a few. But today, my rhythm was there and my confidence was greatly boosted," said Cummings.

According to Fallon, Youngstown was expecting a total running game from UMass.

"Coach Conatser up in the press box noticed they were continuously lining up 8 man defensive fronts on the line of scrimmage. We then adjusted our strategy and hit them with play-action fakes, allowing Kevin Cummings and Moses Williams to get open," Fallon said.

Probably the most outstanding catch of the day was by Williams. Williams, with his defender all over him, lunged for the 21 yard pass thrown by Fallon, and came up with the pass while sprawled on the ground. Williams let everyone know how he felt about catching his first TD of the year with a dance that can never be described.

"I knew it had to come sometime. It was just a question of when," said Williams.

"That's just a sign of the times. Williams' play was actually a busted play with Moses and Kevin Cummings in the same area. The play was designed differently but when you're hot, you're hot," said MacPherson.

MacPherson added that although the passing game was the most pleasant aspect to be remembered, the most consistent ingredients of the team, the offensive and defensive lines, and the running game were the keys of the game.

"Our offense had trouble getting going at the beginning but the hits by our defensive linemen causing the fumbles changed the momentum of the game in our favor," MacPherson said.

The running game, thanks to halfback Bill Coleman (124 net yards and his third over 100 game), compiled 297 yards to give UMass its highest offensive putout of the year. UMass compiled 517 total offensive yards.

Sarah comes to UMass

Anyone who has happened to be at the UMass Fine Arts Center concert hall last Thursday evening was treated to a lyrical adventure by one of the finest singers this century has known, Sarah Vaughn.

Bountiful applause rang out as "The Divine Sarah", in her resounding beauty, strutted on to the stage before an anxious and well attended audience. Her accompaniment for the evening included Schroder on piano, Warren Booker on bass, and the great Jimmy Cobb on drums.

With a voice of velvet, a relaxing smoothness that erased every worry in the world, she bellowed out the lyrics to a recent popular tune "Feelings".

This night, Sarah demonstrated her fantastic range which she has developed over her 30 years experience in the music business.

Without hesitation she sang throughout the musical framework of "The Man I Love" and "On a Clear Day". Moving ballads such as Tadd Dameron's "If You Could See Me Now" and "Everything Must Change" highlighted her performance. Ms. Vaughn then scatted changes to "I Remember April" which exhibited her amazing sense of pitch.

Drummer Jimmy Cobb kept things hot with fiery and evenly executed fills, extrodinary brush work, and magnificently accurate time keeping. Cobb, being a master and innovator of his profession has worked many years with Miles Davis, Cannonball Adderly, Bobby Timmons, Stan Getz and Dizzy Gillespie. He gained his experience working behind singers like Billie Holiday, Pearl Baily and Dinah Washington.

Pianist Carl Schroder managed to build an anti-climactic performance through his use of consonant chordal structure and cliche embellishments. He often failed to bring about interest and excitement in his playing as it lacked various elements indigenous to black music.

His playing didn't distract from the whole of Ms. Vaughn's performance as she was in control of her total environment of sound.

She increased the audiences motivation to listen adeptly with renditions of Gershwin melodies, A Foggy Day in London Town, and Thelonius Monk's immortal "Round Midnight".

Sarah Vaughn born in Newark, N.J., began singing at the Mt. Zion Baptist Church in Newark. She took piano and organ lessons between 1931 and 1939. She entered in an amateur contest at the Apollo Theater in New York and won. She was then recommended by Billy Eckstein, who was working for Earl 'Fatha' Hines, for a debut as a second pianist and vocalist with 'Fatha' Hines.

She began work as a vocalist with John Kirby's combo at the Copacabana in New York between 1945-46. With the help of a Musicraft recording contract and the entnusiasm of musicians such as Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker who praised her voice as a new development in music, she began to make her way toward a wide listening audience. She gained national attention first with her recording of "I'll Wait and Pray"

Support gathers for 'Hirohito Case

October 4 will mark the second anniversary of the infamous "Hirohito case." Two years have passed since the mass news media broke a story about the arrest of two Asian-Americans who were believed to be connected to a suspected assassination plot. The target was Emperor Hirohito of Japan who was on a historic first visit to the U.S. Overnight the story became sensational international news. The Secret Service, who made the arrest, appeared to have aborted a possible international incident. News reports spoke of a seized "arsenal" of firearms and a "library" of communist literature. The story came exactly 22 days after the attempted assassination on President Ford by Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme. Exactly 9 days before, Sara Jane Moore missed hitting President Ford with a .38 caliber bullet by only four feet. This attempt came after her release from Secret Service questioning. The Secret Service, under fire by superiors and Congressional Committees for improperly protecting the President, once again stood erect after the aborted Hirohito assassination plot. The public believed that the Secret Service was back on the job. However, two days later the Secret Service mysteriously withdrew from the case and transferred it to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. Yet the case has since been known in the international press as the "Hirohito case." The two Asian-Americans were never formerly charged with attempted murder or conspiracy to assassinate His Majesty. Was there in fact a plot as real as the attempts on President Ford's life?

A UMass public health student states, "Absolutely not! I couldn't care less about the Emperor of Japan." Kenneth R. Chin, a freshman, was one of the two Chinese-Americans arrested by the Secret Service. Presently, Elizabeth J. Young, the other Chinese-American is living in New York city where the incident occurred. The two were held in a Federal detention center for five days. Both shared the apartment the Secret Service had ransacked. Later, both were charged with violations of the 1968 Federal Gun Control Act. The two were licensed hunters and licensed by New York city to own firearms. The Federal violations were totally unrelated to the original accusations by the Secret Service and the mass news media. They were subjected to two jury trials; the first of which ended with a "hung jury" because of an issue over the legal definition of residence. The trial judge had given an incomplete and illogical definition. After the second trial, with the residence issue cleared up in favor of the government, the two were found guilty. Ms. Young was convicted of taking her hunting rifle across state lines while Mr. Chin was convicted of conspiring with her to do this and receiving the firearm.

Something you need to know

By Chaka Zulu

Sisters and Brothers, in the many articles that are published in this newspaper which speak to specific issues concerning oppressed peoples of color, there are terms that are used that we do not come into contact with everyday. Terms such as Capitalism, Imperialism, Colonialism, Neo-colonialism, National Liberation Struggle, Socialism, Revolution, Classes, etc.

These terms we hear in speeches given by representatives of different organizations, we see them in leftist newspapers, in books written by revolutionary thinkers and on posters. We see these terms yes, but do we understand what they mean and how they affect our lives? Suprisingly enough, many of us don't. I therefore propose that this newspaper should print each week a new and different list of terms and their subsequent definitions. I also propose that you the reader take this newspaper and once or twice a week briefly familiarize yourself with these terms.

These terms are important to know because they are key in understanding the nature of our oppression. Also when you find out exactly what our oppressor is all about and where he is weakest, you may not be as afraid as you thought.

So for the first week I propose that we define the terms: Capitalism, Imperialism, Colonialism, National Democratic Revolution, and National Liberation.

Capitalism is an economic system based on the exploitation of man by man for the benefit of a few at the expense of the many. It is a system where the means of production (land and factories) are concentrated in the hands of a few, and the goods that are produced are not based on the needs of the people but on the dictates of the economic market (which they also control), and whatever else will bring in profits.

Imperialism—is the highest stage of capitalism, it is an international expansion of capitalism, where a capitalist nation extends beyond its national boudaries in order to exploit the natural and human resources of other usually weaker nations, for example the United States.

Colonialism—a higher state of imperialism, where after the process of gaining control of the weaker nation has been completed, the imperialist nation occupies the conquered territories with its military forces, an army of administrators to gear the development of the colony to satisfy the needs of the "mother country", and in some cases settler, to displace the enslaved people from their own land.

National Liberation Struggle—is a process where a colonized people decide to "no longer" bear their oppression, and, through planned, concise and spontaneous actions, organize themselves to defeat their oppressors. National Liberation Struggles are for the obtaining of Land and Power and the establishment of an independent Political Economy, in other words Self Determination National Liberation struggles take many years and go through many different changes. The oppressor is highly afraid of National Liberation Struggles and will use any means at his disposal to stop a peoples freedom struggle. This is why violence is a necessary factor in the process of liberation.

National )Democratic Revolution—a part of the anti-colonial process consisting of different stages due to the changing political circumstances. A National Democratic Revolution can consist of everything from a movement for civil rights and equality, to armed struggle. A National Democratic Revolution is a process that takes years, and requires as much unity as possible from all sectors of our population.

and then "It's Magic" which sold 2,000,000 copies.

Ms. Vaughn, however, 'paid her dues' as all musicians at one time or another must do. It was especially hard for her as a black woman in a business controlled primarily by white men. She often had difficulty finding restaurants to eat in and hotels to sleep in while she was on the road. Other incidents of racism also occurred as one time she stood on stage at a Chicago night club as an all white audience hurled rotten fruit at her.

As a strong woman she stood up to such punishment to become the most respected of our time. Her voice, completely different from that of Billie Holiday or Ella Fitzgerald, contains controlled tone and vibrato. Her ear for chord structure, enables her to change or inflect melody as an instrumentalist would.

Sarah (somestimes known as "Sass") has the remarkable ability to sing out her emotions and feelings as she did Thursday night expressing sensitivity throughout the milieu of moving ballads uptempo standards, and modern popular tunes. As of today no singer has yet to project such a tonal quality in her voice and charismic personality. This has made "The Divine Sarah" one of the most important figures in Black Classical Music.

What is the 24 hour Trick?

by James Lewis

The lecture by Dick Gregory was extremely important. The content of that lecture can only be appreciated by the desire to do and be right. He very carefully constructed the American picture for Black people as well as white people. His message was dynamic and collective. He built his lecture around the "24 hour Trick." What is the "24 hour Trick?"

In the dictionary, trick is defined as a dupe, stupe, con,; to cheat someone or rip them off. In the streets, a trick can be any thing a prostitute uses to get money from some prospecting male. Through dealing with pimps and other prostitutes, she can learn not to use her body in getting someone's money.

Using the idea called the "24 hour Trick," Gregory clearly presented some facts about living in this country. The country repeatedly lies to its people — white and Black — filling the American people with delusions in the politics, energy, industry, CIA, media, medical facility, foods, religion, water, social role, everything, and etc.

From the moment we wake up in the morning til we go to sleep at night, and even in our dreams, we are under a constant mental education and suggestion.

Gregory said the CITA admitted publishing a report stating that it has over 200 journalist placed to manipulate the countries' media. Gregory showed through letters by the government, how the cause of ozone depletion in our atmosphere was due to nuclear testing and not due to aerosol cans. He asked everyone, "Do you all know why the ozone is being depleted." People said "aerosol cans." Then he said, "see how quick your statement came out. 'Aerosol cans.' You all didn't even think before you answered it." Since most aerosol cans are indoor, the chances are very unlikely that aerosol would affect the ozone layer.

He talked about how in 1962, millions of people in the U.S. were injected with a cancer virus — SV-40 — when they thought they were receiving polio shots. He had a personal letter from the government reinforcing his claim. He read the letter to the audience.

He talked about the minds of women and how they are duped with delusions about their sexual identity. Many women are not aware of the extent to which the medical racketeer industry manipulates their lives.

He expressed concern about the many women who were unconsciously sterilized in the country when they thought they were getting abortions. He mentioned the fact that many doctors are not doctors. He expressed a deep, deep desire for the women in this country and elsewhere to develop the proper intelligence for themselves and for the freedom of man as well; "for I can't be free until woman is free."

He talked about the CIA set up of Watergate, assassinations of Martin Luther King, the Kennedys, The Korean affair and New York City black out, the economy, the state of the union.

He said the reason we can't solve our problem with the rich racists who control the country is because we have the same mentality he has, a racist mentality. This is true for Black people as well as white people. He talked about how the Kent State shooting was ordered; how those guards went out with expressed intent to shoot white demonstrators.

Basically, a lot of it said that most Americans are filled with all types of misconceptions about the government and its people. He very convincingly presented facts to support the idea the government does not care about its people. The American people are filled with so much hate, through racism and sexism, that they don't ever see how society has taken away any natural dignity. This is the Trick, the "24 hour Trick." We, as people, Black and white, are so filled with perverted, debased, frivolous thinking that we don't even see that we don't really want to be like that. No person is born with the hatred and darkness this country breeds and tries to hide. But the Trick is so effective, we don't even see that we are the country. Our country lies within US. It cannot exist anywhere else. The trick has mentally and physically removed us from our duty as human beings to stand opposed to any debasement of ourselves.

He talked about religion being false because of our false ideas about it, but that our religion lies within us. He talked effectively about this.

We have to stop letting the Trick trick us, and work to develop that spiritual nature of love and consideration that we were born with, and have been tricked out of.

He talked about how powerful the force of right is, how much more powerful the force of right is compared with any nuclear weapon. He talked about the authority that right has over wrong, once it has been realized that right is a universal idea, dreamed about, felt, desired by all peoples. He talked of the realization of God being achieved when persons "get their spiritual thing together," and realize that this whole indifferent, racist, sexist trip is simply a trick by the "master pimp."

Most prostitutes start out at a very young age, and are put out on the street by older men who know how to seduce their young minds. That's the King Trick by the master pimp. Are we selling our bodies, our minds, our selves? There is much to prove so.

Who is the master pimp? Is it the rich, white males who control this society? Are they not the ones who created this mess? It seems like Gregory was saying that this pimp, (Tricker), can only be something in one's own thinking. We can only hate someone else if we hate ourselves. We don't change the racist, sexist hate that breeds our people because we think the same way. Certainly that pimp has to be something we have accepted, been tricked into bearing. Certainly we carry him. We can only be duped because we are dopes, trained dummies that swear up and down that we are a better person for stealing money and screwing in one evening.

Lastly, Gregory said with, current throughout the lecture, that we, as students, have a big job. Students will later run the country. It was always students who showed the power structure that they, as people, were not going to stand for it. If we are going to right the wrong, we have a big job.

We must first get our spiritual thing together. Then we will have the nature, disposition, ability and power to work for the right, and cast out the wrong.

I asked Mr. Gregory "What is the most important thing you would say to Black people?" He answered: "Take time out to think about yourself, to get yourselves together.

The second thing he said is to watch your diet, watch what you're being fed

Killer to pay $25,000 into man's estate

NASHVILLE, N.C. [UPI] — An elderly white storekeeper has agreed to pay $25,000 to the estate of a black farm worker he killed after pleading no contest to involuntary manslaughter.

In addition, Joseph Judge, 73, of Whitakers, was given a 10-year suspended jail term and placed on probation for three years.

He was originally charged with second degree murder in the death of Charles Lee, 43, who was shot April 16 and died April 18.

The charge was reduced through plea bargaining.

Judge was accused of shooting Lee during an argument in Judge's store in which Lee claimed he had been shortchanged $7 by Judge earlier in the day.

He died of a bullet wound to the chest two days after he was shot.

Nash County Superior Court Judge John Webb said Judge must pay Lee's estate $12,500 immediately and must pay the rest of the money, with interest, in a year.

He was also ordered to pay court costs.

District Attorney Frank Brown said it was decided plea bargaining was the best way to settle the case after talking with Lee's widow. Mrs. Leola Lee, other family members and witnesses.

Outside the courthouse, members of a group calling itself the "peoples coalition for freedom," picketed during the half-hour trial.

"This trial shows the hypocrisy and injustice upheld by the courts and our entire political system," said group spokesman Nelson Johnson when the case ended.

"The judge, the district attorney and everyone within the case knew that it would be a short trial with no jury selected. But in order to make some show that justice was being done, a jury was selected for a half hour before the final plea bargaining was done," said Johnson.

Meeting at Hampshire College

Cross Burning Condemned

Concerned Students and Faculty meet at Hampshire College

On Saturday, September 24, 1977, a few of the Third World Students at Hampshire College got together at the Merrill House dormitory. At 11:45 p.m., a burning cross was spotted in the court yard in direct view of the Third World students present.

The Amherst Fire Department reported that the 3x3 foot cross was doused in gasoline, but due to the inclement weather the fire did not spread.

The resident director of the house apathetically viewed the situation as being a prank. The incident might have gone unnoticed, except that the cross was of the Ku Klux Klan type, and was burned outside Merrill house, where the Third World students were participating at a social event.

Some Third World students later found out from undisclosed sources that the cross-burning incident was indeed an act of terrorism by some white students designed to instill fear and to warn the Third World Community on campus that this was only the beginning of further acts of violence to be inflicted on them in the future.

In a meeting of Hampshire College Third World Organization on the evening of Monday, September 26, 1977 a consensus was arrived at to the effect that the crossburning was the most blatant and despicable act of racist violence ever perpetrated on the Hampshire campus. While this has been only one of a continuing series of racist incidents, it nevertheless is the most vicious manifestation of the lynch-murders of thousands of black men and women throughout this nation's history.

Such insensitivity on the part of white students, as well as white faculty who have chosen the veil of silence, was vehemently condemned at the meeting of the Third World Organization. Moreover, the members pledged that they will no longer tolerate any more such incidents and if they should occur the Third World Community reserves the right to deal with the perpetrators BY ANY MEANS NECESSARY and of their own choosing.

Meantime, the new president of Hampshire College, Adelle Simmons, has issued a letter to the Hampshire Community roundly condemning the Klan-like racist cross-burning incident.

Affirmative Action

by Larry Adams

Title VI of the 1964 Equal Employment Opportunity Act regulates government spending for Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) Department grants, for research, and for education. Funding for grants, research projects, and education can be refused, whenever affirmative action guidelines are not followed. There are certain measures that must be met in order for a particular entity to receive (and to continue receiving) federal grants, research funding, and monies for education. These measures include an affirmative action plan that should include: (1) a written statement of policy, (2) an employee who's specifically assigned to monitor and carry out the affirmative action plan, (3) a system for monitoring the plan, and (4) supportive services for carrying out the affirmative action plan.

The statement of policy should include the institution's, or organization's policy toward meeting affirmative action guidelines. For example, measures that explain what percentages or quotas will be used and why; how those quotas are justified in terms of other considerations that were used to assess qualification; and how these assessed qualifications reflect the applicant's expected future performance in a given field after graduating, for instance. Other considerations, besides test scores and grade averages, may include achievement, community activities, whether or not an applicant had been working full-time while studying, and personal experience, as it relates to a given academic discipline.

The person assigned to monitoring and carrying out the affirmative action process should have the ability to influence the process and should provide ongoing updated reports on the affirmative action mechanism. Systems of monitoring the affirmative action process should include the following type of self auditing: (1) a means for problem identification, (2) workforce analysis, (3) applicant analysis, (4) existing salaries, and (5) job and student-body classification. An institution, or organization is expected to periodically fill out EE01 and EE04 forms that ask questions about they system for monitoring affirmative action processes.

Very few (if any) institutions, or organizations actually meet written statement of policy, monitor, and monitor system requirements. In some instances, an institution may be losing out on a lot of available funds, because affirmative action (aa) guidelines are not met. In other instances, organizations (or institutions) may be receiving funds, although they are not fulfilling aa guildlines, because the government auditor and-or funding source decides to overlook certain regulations that involve affirmative action.

Unfortunately the University of Massachusetts (although it has one of the best affirmative action mechanisms) apparently didn't have a written statement of policy; a person specifically assigned to monitor and carry out affirmative action policies; a viable system for monitoring the affirmative action process; nor sufficient supportive services for carrying out the affirmative action plan, last semester. It's important for interested individuals to question why this university's 'affirmative action' mechanism is kind of 'shaky' and it's important for interested parties to see that an affirmative action process does, in fact, exist, so that the affirmative action process can be seen in a more tangible fashion.

It's commendable that UMass withdrew its investments from U.S. corporations that were either based, or maintained branches in South Africa, but there's also an overwhelming number of problems with equality that exist in this country (i.e., right here at UMass.-Amherst and in the Five-College Area).

Actually, Blacks, minorities, and women at UMass and the Five-College Area can exercise considerable control over the manner in which grants, and research and educational funds from the federal government are dispersed, but such a task would require genuine concern and involvement (especially from those who directly benefit from affirmative action guidelines).

Future articles on 'affirmative action' (which will appear bi-weekly) will discuss how affirmative action relates (or doesn't relate) to other situations in this country; affirmative action processes; models for affirmative action; recruitment; economic status; statistical date needs; and faculty and administrative minority and female ratios.

OCTOBER 8TH DAY OF THE HEROIC GUERILLA

DIA DEL GUERILLERO HEROICO 8 DE OCTUBRE

THIS DAY COMMEMORATES CHE, AND ALL WHO ARE CARRYING FORWARD LIBERATION STRUGGLES.

Two films: Che and the New School

By ZOE BEST

What is important is that people become more aware every day of the need to incorporate themselves into society and of their own importance as motors of that society... It is necessary to develop a consciousness in which values acquire new categories. Society as a whole must become a huge school.

Ernesto "Che" Guevara

In commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the assassination of Che Guevara, two films, "Che" and "The New School" will be shown, Tuesday, October 4th in Room 106 of Thompson Hall at 8:00 p.m.

On October 8th, the day of Che Guevara's assassination, in Cuba, in parts of Africa and within guerilla enclaves in Latin America, The Day of The Heroic Guerilla will be celebrated. In Cuba it is the opportunity for the children of the country to remember how they have won their independence from U.S. imperialism and to acknowledge the leadership of all ages, even among themselves that press forward the principles for which Che Guevara represented.

In 1965 in Algiers, Che Guevara stated, "There are no frontiers in the struggle to the death. We cannot remain indifferent in the face of what occurs in any part of the world. A victory for any country against imperialism is our victory, just as any country's defeat is a defeat for all. The practice of proletarian internationalism is not only a duty for the peoples who struggle for a better future, it is also an inescapable necessity."

In this period, Che Guevara met another doctor, from Martinique, Frantz Fanon who had taken part in the Algerian struggle for independence from the French and who had visualized Algeria as becoming the main front in launching Kwame Nkrumah's formulations for a unified Africa. (Che Guevara noted the writings of Fanon and sent them to Cuba to be translated and published as books for the first time.) Together Fanon and Guevara discussed the historical precedent of the progressive forces fighting fascism in the Spanish Civil War. Fanon wrote how Europe had depended on allies to further their independence from Nazism: "The countries against which the manifestations of Nazism were most immediately directed, leagued together and pledged themselves not only to liberate their occupied territories but literally to break the back bone of Nazism, to root out the evil where it had sprung up, to liquidate the regimes to which it had given rise. Well! The African peoples must likewise remember that they have had to face a form of Nazism, a form of exploitation of (people), of physical and spiritual liquidation clearly imposed...."

In January 1965, Che led a force of Cuban guerillas to participate in the Kinshasa rebellion in the Congo. Lumumba's efforts to liberate Congo were snuffed by C.I.A. directed nationals. Kwame Nkrumah documents this.

Today we must remember that Fanon and Nkrumah were assassinated in that they were injected with cancer. Lumumba and Guevara were assassinated. The United States C.I.A. planned and took part in each murder. To read and understand history of this period as it pertains to Latin America, to Africa, and to this country, we must go directly to the writers of history reading from them, which is not the same as reading about them. The film, "CHE" can serve the purpose of providing an objective glimpse of "Che" Guevara.

"Che" wrote about the role of youth in making revolution, about their responsibilities in sharing the making of the future. Cuban society depends immensely on their educational system — that is, their youth. The level of literacy and educated understanding of Cuba's people is manifested by the speed in which it has conquered ignorance and prejudice.

Cuban education is the topic of the film, "THE NEW SCHOOL". It is no coincidence that schools in Cuba have names of their patriots and martyrs, but also they know the names of the standard bearers of struggle from "Los Estados Unidos."

The United States — like Malcolm X, and most recently a junior high school was named by its students, The Kent State Junior High School. These schools pay for themselves within three years after construction because students not only study, partake in the arts, develop technical skills, but they put all this into practice by working in both industrial and agricultural production.

After the intensive literacy campaign in 1961 of each one teach one, illustrated cinematographically in the Cuban film, "LUCIA", Cuba emerged with the lowest illiteracy rate in Latin America — 3.9 per cent. Today that figure has been reduced even more.

In the book, THE CHILDREN OF CHE by Karen Wald, she asks a child, a member of the Union of the Pioneers, "There are many people who think that children are not capable of participating in a revolution nor of doing serious work. Do you agree with this?" The child answered, "We can take part in the struggle, even though some think we can't. We could carry messages, or help those who are fighting. But since we already have this revolution in our country, the way we help is by studying, passing each grade, maintaining solidarity with all peoples of the world, and coming to school every day on time."

Adult education thrives on a mass scale in Cuba. Worker peasants can enroll for preparatory training so that they may enter the universities. University education is a thoroughfare for all the people of Cuba. All in all Cuba is a "huge school".

Commuter Collective is sponsoring these films. They'll be shown at 106 Thompson Hall at 8:00 p.m. Films start on time. There is no admission.

SONG TO FIDEL

by Ernesto "Che" Guevara

You said the sun would rise
Let's go along those unmapped paths to free the green alligator you love.

And let's go obliterating insults with our brows swept with dark insurgent stars.
We shall have victory or shoot past death.

At the first shot the whole jungle will awake with fresh amazement and there and then serene company
we'll be at your side.

When your voice quarters the four winds
reforma agraria, justice, bread, freedom,
we'll be there with identical accents
at your side.

And when the clean operation against the tyrant ends at the end of the day there and then set for the final battle
we'll be at your side.

And when the wild beast licks his wounded side where the dart of Cuba hits him
we'll be at your side
with proud hearts.

Don't ever think our integrity can be sapped
by those decorated fleas hopping with gifts
we want their rifles, their bullets and a rock nothing else.

And if iron stands in our way we ask for a sheet of Cuban tears to cover our guerrilla bones on the journey to American history.

fine respectively, Ms. Young and Mr. Chin were given suspended sentences and three years probation. In light of the two's clean record, the over 100 letters of support from community organizations and individuals and the Government's inability when asked by the sentencing judge, to produce the slightest evidence as to the existence of an aassassination plot, the judge was compelled to not send the Chinese-Americans back to prison.

APPEAL EFFORTS

In an appeal effort to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, a three judge panel affirmed the convictions without giving formal legal explanations. Defense requests for a transcript of the proceedings were rejected because the tape recording was "defective."

Because Young-Chin believe they have been victims of a gross violation of their human rights, they have filed a request for a case review by the U.S. Supreme Court. The Court is expected to announce their decision whether or not to hear the case sometime this fall.

In the meantime, Mr. Chin, who started school here this past September, apparently has more than hour-exams on his mind. He is pursuing a career in Environmental Health. In the past he has helped organize a free health clinic, health fairs in New York city streets, and demonstrations for better health care in the Chinatown community. All this on volunteer time. He did a four year hitch with the Navy and was an honorably discharged Vietnam Veteran. After his discharge he actively supported the anti-war movement.

Ms. Young, a graduate of the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley, is presently working full-time on a publicity campaign to gather support for the defense if and when the case goes to the U.S. Supreme Court. She is also attending plumbing school where she is the first woman plumber trainee in New York State. According to reports, national support for the "Hirohito case" is slowly gathering. Already a number of Asian-American organizations are supporting the Amicus Curiae brief (friend of the court) being filed by the Asian-American Legal Defense and Education Fund. The Asian-American Student Assoc. of UMass is also supporting the defense case. The two defendants believe that without this support, the Government will successfully complete their attack on the Asian-American community. Mr. Chin states, "Using Asians as scapegoats is not new. Neither is our will to fight back. But this racism must stop sometime; what's a better time than now?"

For more information and a detailed account of the case, contact the Asian-American Students Association, New Africa House, Room 418; Tel: 545-0517 — Young-Chin Legal Aid.

Che Lumumba School For Truth

The Che-Lumemba School — Loft II — was founded in 1972 as an alternative, Third World elementary school. The school serves children between the ages of 5 to 12. It was created out of a growing concern felt by Third World parents at the University of Massachusetts that their children's needs were being met by the public schools. Third World children were and are a minority in the public schools in Amherst. Such questions as identity and the history of the achievements of Third World people were not adequately dealt with, if at all. Further it was felt that the needs of Third World children were different from those of non-Third World children, i.e. who am I? why am I different? These were just some of the questions that had to be answered and dealt with.

With this emphasis and initiative, Loft II was begun. The School was allocated four classrooms, one store-room-office, and a bathroom on the fourth floor of the New Africa House at the University, which also houses the nationally known W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies.

The school applied for and currently has accredidation from the Amherst Public School system.

Che-Lumemba is now in its sixth year. During this time the school has had students, parents, and teachers, of African, Native American, Asiatic, Chicano, and Puerto Rican descent. As the philosophy of the school evolved, it was felt that the make-up of the school must reflect this growth. Accordingly in the beginning of the 1975 school year Che-Lumemba began to accept and welcome progressive European-background families and staff, understanding that a large majority of families and teachers involved must be of Third World background in order to maintain and develop the school's identity and goals.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

The educational program of Che-Lumemba is geared toward the development of children who are able to think critically, analytically, and creatively in seeking alternative solutions to the problems we face in the world around us. Children who possess a strong academic foundation and clear values, who are unafraid to question and challenge.

. The curriculum of the school is multicultural. Each unit deals with a particular country or group of people (e.g. Cuba, Native Americans). All learning experiences, whether in Spanish, math, history, art, field-trips, etc. are related to these central themes. In this way, the children learn to understand and analyze the forces shaping societies and people's way life. Each unit lasts several weeks and each teacher may develop his-her own program based on it. In addition to this general theme, current events are stressed so that the children develop an appreciation of the importance of history, not only as an academic area, but in their own lives. Also, stress is given to learning Spanish, and multi-language skills are integrated into the rest of the curriculum.

The curriculum emphasizes problem-solving skills and processes. It also endeavors to instill a sense of worth and dignity and respect for others. The school studies and tries to practice the Seven Principles of the Kawaida. They are Umoja (Unity), Kujishagulia (Self-Determination), Ujama (Collective Work and Responsibility), Ujamaa (Cooperative Economics), Nia (Purpose), Kuumba (Creativity), and Imani (Faith). Finally, the acquisition of self-discipline is seen as a valuable asset in the development of children.

To summarize, the curriculum is a collective development which relies on the active and genuine participation of the children, the families at school and at home, and the community at large. It is, thus, a tool through which the children develop a strong self-identity and a commitment to change.

WHERE WE STAND

Throughout the development of Che-Lumumba three goals have remained firmly in our minds:

/ . The Necessity for a Commitment to Social Change in U. S. Society. We are committed to social change — the elimination of racism, discrimination, sexism, class privilege and other exploitation of one human being by another. To this end we seek to develop a sence of social consciousness in our children to encourage them to join in the struggle against social injustice however and whereever it may occur.

2. The Necessity to Develop Academic Skills which have been Historically Denied to Third World People.

Because in North America Third World Peoples are exploited both as workers and racial minorities, their deprivation is dramatic and severe. A statistical breakdown of the North American population shows that, far out of proportion to their numbers, Third World People make up a significant portion of the unemployments lists, welfare roles, prison population, etc., and fill up the lowest paying sections of the workforce. What this means is that Third World People are regularly denied the opportunity to rise above their economic and cultural position as it now exists. This is accomplished through the systematic denial of the skills necessary for such social ascendence. It is one of Che-Lumumba's primary goals to counteract this tendency through the development of useable skills.

3. The Necessity to Counteract the Ethnocentric Perspective of the Public Schools.

Che-Lumumba operates from an international perspective placing emphasis on African, Hispanic, Asian, and Native American roots, which in addition to composing a sizable and the most exploited portion of this country, constitutes the majority of the peoples of the world. It is logical, then, that the school is committed to a multicultural, bi-lingual philosophy as vehicles leading toward ethnic pride in our children coupled with their firm commitment to the struggle for the liberation of oppressed poeples everywhere.

The school attempts to instill these goals within the framework of cooperation and collective unity among students, parents, and staff. We further believe that as the children develop, so must parents and staff, as well as the home life of the school's families, not only to keep pace, but in order to set the example in action as well as words to "Serve the People!"

The Che-Lumumba School operates as a collective of parents, children, and teachers who are committed to the goals of the school. The parents contribute their talents, whether as teachers, curriculum developers, administrators, cleaners, etc. Tuition is according to the families' ability to pay. The only funds which the school receives are from tuition, fund-raising events, and contributions from student groups in the Five College Area. Contributions, therefore, are always welcome.

Hampshire College Moves Toward Enlightenment

by: Johanna P. Brassard and Edwin J. Patterson
Nummo News Staff

Proposed Resolution of the Hampshire College Faculty, September 29, 1977.

> "The Hampshire College faculty condemns in the strongest possible terms the outrageous affront to the Third World community stemming from a cross burning outside a Third World gathering at Hampshire on Saturday, September 24. There are few acts that could be more threatening and provocative given the obvious symbolic nature of such a deed in the context of American history.
> The faculty recognizes that the mere passage of a resolution deploring this event will only draw with the on-going and chronic problems at Hampshire. The faculty believes that this incident removes any complacency regarding the welfare of Third World peoples and consequently we request and support an immediate and thorough College-wide investigation of all difficulties facing the Third World community at Hampshire with the aim of producing concrete policies and guidelines guarding against the repetition of similar or less obvious everyday racist episodes in the future."

This proposal was part of an address delivered by Hampshire College President Adelle Smith Simmons in the Main Dining Room of the Campus Dining Commons last Thursday.

Attended by the faculty, staff and close to half of the student body at Hampshire College, the meeting began at 4:35 p.m. and was finished by 4:45 p.m. President Simmons formally outlined the views of the College administration toward the crossburning last Saturday night, and went on to inform the community of the specific steps she had taken in regard to the incident.

The President turned toward the issues saying that she had "kept The Board of Trustees fully informed of the happenings of the last few days," that all parents had been notified, and that she had "met with students of the Third World Organization to hear of their concerns first hand. Simmons also stated that a faculty committee — headed by Frank Holmquist of Hampshire's Social Science department — had been appointed in accordance with the Faculty Resolution in order "to investigate this and any other incidents of racism which have or may occur."

Before the following discussion among faculty staff, students and President Simmons at Franklin Patterson Hall, we were able to speak with two members of the Third World Organization at Hampshire College.

Irvienne Goldson told us that the investigative committee would be composed of white members of the Hampshire community, with only two representatives of Third World organization included. Miss Goldson stated that the Third World Organization feels the responsibility for rectification of the crossburning to Third World students rests solely on the shoulders of the White Hampshire population. Therefore the investigative committee should find its majority of representation among the whites of Hampshire College.

Gary Owens, a recent graduate of Hampshire, described last Saturday's trouble as coming "out of nowhere". According to Irvienne and Gary, it seems that last Saturday night a group of Third World students held an informal get-together in the first floor lounge of section A at Merrill Dormitory. At first they were not aware of anything unusual going on outside of the window — but soon the burning cross was clearly seen. Although rain appeared to extinguish fire at the base of the cross. The pieces then fell apart and were brought to a loading platform by firemen. They were to be disposed of on the morning of September twenty-sixth.

Gary Owens said that one could define the Hampshire Third World Organization as a "loose coalition." To his mind, the coalition had never before been the target such blatant condemnation, and he assured us that the Third World Community would design their own investigation of the racist incident, regardless of the faculty committee and discussion-workshops planned by the administration. But Gary did not want it to be thought that Third World students at Hampshire College seek revenge for the Saturday evening cross burning. They simply desire justice to be done by those wronged. We think the general concensus to be that The Third World Students at Hampshire College have been severely wronged.

Black and White students, faculty, and staff met in an Ad Hoc workshop at 5:30 p.m. in Franklin Patterson Hall. There was a call for any information as to the identity of those involved in the perpetration of the crossburning incident to be submitted to Mr. Frank Holmquist, the chairman of the Faculty committee to investigate racist incidents on the Hampshire College Campus.

It was felt that the consciousness of Blacks and Whites, students and administrators, needed to be raised regarding racist attitudes in America. Ruth Washington, Coordinator of Third World Students and Academic counselor at Hampshire college felt that we should all be interested in understanding one another's cultures, and while we don't have to fully accept another culture, we must certainly respect that culture.

Hampshire college meeting.

We feel that a good summary of the general feeling on The Hampshire campus at this time is contained in a quote from Gloria Josephs, a member of the faculty at Hampshire, presented by President Simmons at the meeting in the Dining Commons:

> "Colleges, like all other educational institutions, inévitably and invariably reflect the culture of their society, and Hampshire is no heavenly exception! The fact that racism exists on this campus is the expected, and should come as no great surprise. In a society that perpetuates and encourages existing social ills such as racism, sexism, poverty and crime, so consistently and effectively and efficiently, racism has become, as H. Rap Brown once said about violence, "as American as apple pie". But that is not to say that we should calmly accept an act as cross burning as just another incident of racism, or as a prank, or as the act of an over-dosed or strung out individual; no, such an act should evoke a sense of outrage in everyone!"

Adelle Smith Simmon's final words at that meeting are paraphrased here: We must all work in the weeks and months ahead to solve our (social) problems.

Majority rule 'deals' called laughable

by Kgosinkwe Moesi

BALTIMORE — The question of majority rule in southern Africa is a war issue. It encompasses a violent clash of cultures, nationalisms and principles. The white minority regimes vehemently express a perverse stereotyped, dogmatic brand of nationalism, white supremacy. This nationalism is a cultural off-shoot of Europe's, cultural arrogance and colonial record in Africa.

The norms of colonialism were based on the myth that the African is inferior...that the African has no dynamism to create history, wealth and civilization.

White settler communities in southern Africa are following these absurd anachronisms to the letter.

The result? Economic exploitation and political suppression of Africans.

However, Africans have never at any time in history compromised with white supremacy. African resistance to white domination dates three centuries back. 'Alutta continue! (the struggle continues) is the religion of black people in souther Africa.

But the big question has not yet been answered! what is the future of majority rule?

South African Premier John Vorster says the Bantus or tribal homeland is the future. Rhodesia's Ian Smith says "not in my life time."

In South Africa independent homelands are the "perfect stage for racial segregation."

There are eight homelands divided according to tribal ethnic background. The homelands occupy about 23 per cent of South Africa's land area.

African have no rights in the rest of the country.

However, 80 per cent of black people live in 'white' South Africa.

Any European from any part of the world has all the rights in South Africa.

Africans detest this state of affairs and regard homelands and homeland leaders with the contempt they deserve.

Homelands are the ultimate ideological rationalization of the policy of racial discrimination.

The argument that homeland leaders can work within the system to bring majority rule is too cynical and naive to be taken seriously.

The South African legislative system has completely sealed off all loopholes for a black person to squeeze out to a position of power.

The same divide and rule tactics are working like magic in Rhodesia.

The regime plays on African tribal division and weak personalities and buys the man on the street with money.

There are more blacks in the Rhodesian army than whites.

Can western "settlement" initiatives bring majority rule?

Do not make me laugh!

Western diplomacy is more concerned with minority rights in southern African than with majority rights.

"What is going to happen to whites? Please Nkomo or Sithole, assure us," is what they say.

In the final analysis the future of majority rule is simply a question who will win the war.

What is happening to black people now is a mere technicality.

The fact that many people shy away from is that southern Africa is in a state of war.

The war was declared the very first day that the white man saw a black man and said, "kaffir I am the boss."

Idi bans church groups

NAIROBI, Kenya [UPI] — Ugandan President Idi Amin has accused 27 banned religious groups of involvement with the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency and plots to overthrow his government, Kampala Radio said.

A broadcast monitored in Nairobi said Amin had turned down an appeal from the Anglican Archbishop of Uganda, the Rt. Rev. Silvanus Wani, to have the ban against the groups revoked.

Amin agreed, however, to meet with leaders of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church, the Salvation Army and the Uganda Baptist Mission to discuss the ban, the radio said.

Prospecting for gold out

DAR-ES-SALAAM, Tanzania — Tanzania has banned gold prospecting in the Lake Victoria mineral region after thousands of persons set up camp to work abandoned mines.

The government was reported to be concerned that the illegal prospectors, who came from as far away as Kenya, Zaire, and Rwanda, were draining the nation's foreign exchange by selling the gold abroad.

Authorities were also reportedly upset at reports that dozens of people were dying in the gold pits because of accidents and illness. Armed policemen have now been posted at the mines to keep prospectors away.

Africa Progress

DAR ES SALAAM — The African Development Bank has granted a multi-million dollar loan to the East African Development Bank.

The money is to be used to finance industrial development projects in the three member states — Tanzania, Uganda and Kenya — of the East African Community (EAC).

Though major doubt surrounds the future of the EAC, with many of the joint public corporations now reverting to national status, the ADB loan is intended to provide the basis for future economic cooperation between Community members.

NEW STATUE TO HONOR NKRUMAH

ACCRA — A new statue in honor of the first president of Ghana, the late Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, is being erected in the Ghanaian capital, Accra, close to the spot where Dr. Nkrumah declared Ghana independent in March 1957.

The $900,000 statue will replace on earlier representation of Dr. Nkrumah which was destroyed during the 1966 military coup which overthrew him. Dr. Nkrumah died in exile in 1972, though he is buried in Ghana.

The commissioning of the statue followed a report of special committee set by Ghana's present ruling military government to assess ways of honoring the late Ghanaian leader.

Other statues of prominent Ghanaian political figures are also to be erected, it has been announced.

KENYA FOOD AID FOR MOZAMBIQUE

NAIROBI — Kenya's President Jomo Kenyatta has donated a gift of more than 27,000 bags of maize of victims of floods in Mozambique. The maize, with a total weight of about 2,500 tons, is to be shipped from the Kenyan port of Mobasa to the Mozambique capital, Maputo. In Mozambique, it will be distributed by the United Nations Development Program.

HELP FOR MILLION IN CHAD SCHEME

PARIS — About one million people in the Sahelian zone of Chad are expected to benefit from a new multi-million dollar development program designed to help increase the development of crop farming, sustain and improve veterinary services, expand forestry working and maintain water supplies.

The project is being financed by a $1.9 million credit from the International Development Association (IDA), a part of the World Bank, and a $1.9 million grant from the Canadian International Development Agency.

Carter goes to Nigeria on Nov. 25

WASHINGTON — President Jimmy Carter's Nov. 25 visit to Nigeria, the first by an occupant of the White House to black Africa, marks a dramatic change in U.S. policy.

Although Nigeria, one of this country's major oil sources, has remained on friendly terms with the U.S. in recent years, it has been a tenuous sort of acceptance on both sides.

Until United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young warmed up relations between the countries, Nigeria chiefs of state were not being invited to this country.

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger bluntly was told he would not be welcome in Nigeria during a swing through Africa during the Ford Administration.

But in October, Lt. Gen. Olesegum Obasanjo, head of state of the Nigeria federal government, will pay a visit here at the invitation of President Carter.

President Carter's personal insistence on including Africa and South America on his upcoming 11-day trip "to promote the sort of world we all want to live in," is a "testament to Andy Young" and his diplomatic efforts, a State Department spokesman said.

Young is expected to visit Nigeria with Carter.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, Carter's national security advisor, said, the Administration considers Nigeria "a most important African country which has had a "moderating influence" in African politics.

Nigeria is Africa's wealthiest and most populous nation.

The president will go to Caracas Nov. 22. Then he will fly to Brasilia Brazil, on Nov. 23; Lagos, Nigeria, Nov. 25; New Delhi, India, Nov. 27-28, Tehran Iran, Nov. 29; Paris, Nov. 30; Warsaw, Dec. 1, and Brussels, Dec. 2.

Dinner to honor Dr. King

NEW YORK — Ambassador Andrew Young, permanent representative to the United Nations, is chairman for the first dinner of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change which will be held at the New York Hilton on Oct. 12.

The dinner will honor the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Sr., pastor emeritus of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta, and honorary president of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change.

Ambassador Young, in a recent interview, said, "Dr. King's strength and his dedication to the ideas espoused by his son, Martin Luther King, Jr., are well known to us all. His ability to endure adversity is known to us all.

While many of us have expressed our respect and admiration for him privately, I am pleased to serve as chairman for this dinner honoring him.

Criticism of Carter seen good

LOS ANGELES — James Farmer, former director of the Congress of Racial Equality, (CORE) says criticism of President Carter by blacks was justified and apparently did some good.

"It's not a matter of too high expectations, but too low delivery," Farmer, now head of the Coalition of American Public Employers, said Tuesday.

He said Carter seems to have accepted the criticism and now appears to be taking the correct actions to increase minority employment significantly.

B'nai B'rith criticizes U.S. stance Bakke

NEW YORK — The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said that the Justice Department brief on the use of racial quotas in college admissions "deliberately waffles the basic question and constitutes an unfortunate political push in the wrong direction."

The brief, an amicus curiae in The Regents of the University of California v. Bakke case to be heard by the Supreme Court next month, urges that race be allowed as a factor in examining an applicant's qualifications for college entrance.

According to Arnold Forster, ADL's general counsel, while the government's brief appears to oppose quotas, that position is overwhelmed by its insistence on race preference.

"But once this is permitted," Forster said, "a loophole is opened in the constitutional barrier against racial quotas large enough to render that barrier meaningless."

Forster said that ADL, which has also entered a friend of the court brief in the case — on the side of Bakke — does not advocate the strict use of grade point averages aptitude tests.

"Obviously," Forster declared, "an applicant may be considered on a wide variety of standards, including overcoming educational disadvantage, but such standards cannot legitimately include race, religion, ethnic origin or sex."

He went on to say that the government's brief confuses affirmative action with racial preference and supports racial goals or targets, which were not involved in the Bakke case.

He called the brief "the product of enormous pressure brought on the Administration" and asserted that the government has "abandoned the position that every American is entitled to consideration for admission on the basis of his or her own merits."

Declaring that ADL is "deeply disappointed in the government's position, which we believe violates President Carter's campaign pledges," Forster said it is now up to the Supreme Court to weigh the merits of the argument and come to a decision.

"In the last analysis," Forster said, "the government's brief must stand or fall on its constitutional merits and not on its politics."

Josue de Castro

I'm looking at a group picture of you, published in a safe Sunday newspaper, spread wide on a family table, thousands of tightwire miles away from your lion-hunting silence.

Your faces are all set against the world's hill and gully and your own flat savannah, reported only during every other drought,
every other famine, every other genocide, across the centuries of leonine serfdom, across the uselessness of the burnt grass, across the stench of the stinging wind.

You sit down now with your re-educated men, the unity healing the ancient divisions with touching elbows and shoulders, locking out the crippling solitude with matching dreams and actions.

At this distance, even I can hear the dying swish of the useless tail, the hereditary roar dropped to a moan,
the old lion house crumbling away,
the new land rising slowly in your eyes.

Breaking out of the Long Silence
(For Suni Paz and Ramiro Fernandez)

Breaking out of the long silence,
walking on thorns out of the death
of her parched valley of no work,
no sky, nothing to look forward to,
she dragged her swollen, bound feet
into the plush city of hit-and-run.

Having broken the long, steep slide,
walked away from the sucking waste
of rumoured jobs, sun-tricked pride,
river stones in her mouth, no hope,
she cursed the day she left behind
the atavistic silence and the dead.

Then, turning to her first resolve,
making the city of zinc sprout trees
and ripe fruits to flood her drought,
she sprang like claws on the backs
of the brick hard metropolitan men
and ripped their lean meat, sweetly.

Recently, she and her five children
(unfathered by a surfeit of fathers)
have driven urban stakes of their own
down into the ever-booming iron aorta;
yet they're now blindly near the edge
of a new, ironic, descending solitude.

Governor visits campus

Dukakis; solar energy now

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Governor Michael S. Dukakis yesterday kicked off an all-day Regional Solar Energy Conference at UMass with a pep-talk on the necessity and potential benefits of the commercial development of solar energy.

Dukakis began his address with, "My presence here gives you a sense of how serious the energy situation is," and informed about 150 conferees that the widespread development of solar energy could open a possible 11,000 jobs in Massachusetts by the 1980's.

The governor said that although Massachusetts is viewed as the leader in developing solar energy technology, the industry is still lagging.

"Too many people don't believe we have an energy problem. That's why we're lagging and that's why the President's energy bill which strongly recommends energy conservation is fairing so poorly in the Senate," said Dukakis.

"Solar holds the prospect of an industry in a new sector of our economy and of a general life style which meets a great many of our social goals," Dukakis added.

Dukakis described solar technology as "real, here, now" and "capable of competing with electricity." He also said that solar technology development would mean a "more desirable pattern of commercial and industrial development."

Dukakis did not want to place blame on the oil industry for perpetuating the energy problem, but he did add, ".... I don't want to suggest the oil companies have won blue-ribbons for candor or commitment to public interest."

> "I'd like to see our state the leader of solar energy development..."
> Gov. Dukakis

Closing his address to the Solar Conference, Dukakis said all signs are promising and hopeful. "I'd like to see our state become the leader of solar energy development in the country."

Dukakis, continually attacked by fellow legislators because of what they have termed as his indifference to public higher education, welcomed yesterday's opportunity to launch a university—affiliated, state—supported project.

President Wood, who recently leveled such charges against the governor, withheld similar comments during the chief of state's brief visit.

Paul Parks, state secretary of educational affairs, a Wood foe, remained silent also through the ceremonies.

The Dukakis,Parks—Wood fued originated soon after Dukakis took office in 1974 when he proposed to cut public higher education spending by 10 per cent.

Wood won most of the monies back through legislative assistance, but Dukakis sent another sting into the Wood administration when he recently proposed to reorganize public higher education in the state. One of Dukakis's plans to reorganization is to decentralize the three UMass campuses

That proposal is still under scrutiny.

The court refused to hear the appeal of James Gaylord, fired in 1972 when his homosexuality was discovered by officials at the Tacoma High School were he had taught for 13 years.

> Supreme Court denies appeal; upholds earlier ruling—'homosexuality is immoral'

Gaylord contended that his constitutional rights were violated when his status as a homosexual was used to dismiss him. The Washington Supreme Court ruled that homosexuality is immoral and Gaylord could be fired even though he was accused of no homosexual act.

Civil liberties attorneys, who had hoped to use the case to have the Supreme Court review the rights of homosexuals, predictably were outraged by the court's action.

"The case presented the Supreme Court with an opportunity to say that discrimination against people by government because of their status are homosexuals is impermissible," the American Civil Liberties Union said.

"This Supreme Court maintains its record of gross insensitivity to individual rights," the organization said in a statement from its New York headquarters.

The Supreme Court of Washington upheld Gaylord's dismissal which came after he admitted being homosexual to a vice principal who acted on a tip from a former student. He has not been able to find another teaching job but now works for the Tacoma Federation of Teachers, according to the appeal record.

Although there never was any allegation Gaylord did anything improper on the job, the school board fired him for "immorality." The court said Gaylord's efficiency was impaired once his homosexual status was known.

Homosexuality has been widely condemned as immoral, the court said, and keeping him on as a teacher might be interpreted by students as adult approval of homosexuality.

The Supreme Court's brief order does not set legal precedent but indicates the court could not muster the four votes needed for review. Justices William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall said they wanted to hear the case.

The court last heard arguments on a case involving discrimination against a homosexual 10 years ago when it ruled a gay alien could be excluded from the country under a 1952 law barring persons "afflicted with a psychopathic personality."

The American Psychiatric Association no longer regards homosexuality as a psychiatric disorder.

The American Civil Liberties Union lawyers urged the Supreme Court to deal with discrimination against homosexuals in the narrow framework of public, rather than private, employment.

The U.S. Civil Service Commission has issued guidelines saying a person cannot be found "unsuitable for federal employment solely because that person is a homosexual."

Supporters of homosexual rights emphasized that the court decision set no precedent and would not overturn existing state or local laws protecting gays against discrimination.

"Needless to say I'm disappointed," said James Gaylord, the former Tacoma high school social studies teacher whose job was at stake.

"For me it is the end of the road," said Gaylord, who now works for the Tacoma Federation of Teachers. "I'm not terribly happy about losing, but someone else will win, believe me."

The end of a two-week filibuster on natural gas enabled Sen. Henry Jackson to propose a plan that would eliminate federal gas price controls in 1987. See Page 7.

Cosmetics dangerous

The cosmetic industry makes money portraying women's bodies as unclean and in need of various cosmetics, soaps, deodorants and perfumes. However, many cosmetics and deodorants sold over-the-counter end up doing more harm than good. The third article of a weekly series on women's health by Julie Melrose appears on Page 2.

Partly cloudy today, breezy and cool. Highs in the 50s to near 60. Fair continued cool tonight, with lows in the mid 30s with scattered showers. Sunny and a little warmer Wednesday.

Duke dedicates econ center

"We were beginning to develop the reputation of being the New York City of state government," Governor Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday at the dedication ceremony for the University's new Center for Economic Development (UCED)".

Dukakis said that mayors, selectmen, city councilors and businessmen are working hard together to "rebuild and revitalize the state's economy."

The center will offer technical assistance in economic areas to businesses, communities and individuals throughout the state. It is part of the community renewal studies at the UMass Institutue for Man and Environment.

Other speakers at the dedication ceremony included Raymond A. Werbe, chairman of the Executive Committee of the UCED; Daniel Harrington, deputy director of the Economic Development Administration (EDA); UMass President Robert C. Wood; Amherst campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, Richard Smith, an aide of Sen. Edward W. Brooke; James G. Collins (D-Amherst);John W. Olver (D-Amherst) and Steve Perlstein, aide to Congressman Michael J. Harrington.

Aides to Brooke and Congressman Michael J. Harrington said that the two men were not present at the dedication because they were involved in congressional issues.

John W. Olver (D-Amherst) speaking for himself and Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, said there is a need for both "preventive and remedial" knowledge to assist cities.

State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) speaking for himself and Speaker of the House Thomas W. McGee, said the initiative of the center "is the type of outreach program we think will be a continuing and expanding part of the University."

Steve Perlstein, an aide to Congressman Harrington, said the Congressman favors having an Economic Development Administrative office in Boston. The closest EDA office is in Philadelphia and Perlstein said President Carter has promised to consider placing one in Boston.

Perlstein said Congressman Harrington felt there ought to be another way to help finance businesses. "The present EDA is uncreative and inflexible," he said.

The new center is backed by a $100,000 one-year renewable grant from the U.S. Department of Commerce Economic Development Administration, as the result of a proposal from Raymond Werbe, director of the Institute for Man and Environment.

Wood stressed the importance of linking the University with business. Wood said there would be no cranberry industry in Massachusetts without the University's extension service. "Now we are engaged in building another link ... I am sure that we are on an adventure well begun that will pay off in dividends."

Gordon Sanford, the director for the new center, came from West Carolina University where he administered a similar program serving the West Carolina area.

"We are like the fabled tortoise, we're getting off to a very slow start, but we will keep moving until we accomplish our objectives," Sanford said.

Solar energy means jobs

The message of yesterday's Western Regional Solar Energy Conference was clear even to a layman's ears: promotion of solar energy development in this state, as well as dissolving misconceptions held by both the public and business community toward solar energy feasability.

Governor Michael S. Dukakis' appearance as introductory speaker at the conference made it clear the state would do everything it could to get solar energy into its commercial development stage. The governor's address emphasized the importance of maintaining the state's role as leader in the solar energy field.

Dukakis also stressed the importance of solar energy, not only as a vital energy source, but as a stimulant of social and economic benefits.

According to Dukakis, widespread development of solar technology will open a possible 11,000 job opportunities in Massachusetts alone by the 1980's.

Because of the state's leadership status, Massachusetts was awarded by the Department of Housing and Urban Development HUD) a grant program which will provide 1375 homeowners with $400 each toward purchase and installation of solar domestic hot water systems.

But from the questions raised from the floor, it would appear the government's stimulation in this state solar energy growth stage has also raised some problems confronting consumers as well as small business and entrepenuers of the field.

Standards, guarantees, durability and quality of systems, cost and financing were just some of the questions raised.

According to Mr. Ryc Loope, expert in solar designs and professor at Yale University, the standards question is a difficult one to answer.

"Because of government pushing", said Loope, "the solar industry will do in six months what ordinary industry growth does in two years."

But to insure standards, questioners were assured by panelists, state building codes will be involved as well as a self-policing element of installers, and government imposed Minimum Property Standards.

Also, according to Loope, HUD grant monies can purchase only government certified systems, so these systems will have to meet with government standards.

A panel of experts representing banking, consumers, and technologists in the field of solar energy, fielded questions by perspective solar energy system retailers concerning bureaucratic hassles in obtaining loans to take on the new wave of demand triggered by the HUD grants.

Massachusetts Secretary of Consumer Affairs Christine Sullivan's response was an assurance that the Solar Action Office would lobby the Small Business Association on behalf of the retailers request. Said Sullivan, "A lot can happen if you push hard in the right places."

Some conferences expressed concern over how durable solar system designs were and what guarantees were being offered by retailers.

According to Loope, "Most manufacturers are designing the physical construction to propogate a life expentency of about 25 years." Most guarantees are for five years, Loope said, since it is a relatively new field.

The solar energy conference was the third such conference sponsored by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Consumer Affairs-Solar Action Office and the National Solar Heating and Cooling Information Center. The Solar Action Office was formed by Christine Sullivan in this past summer to promote and encourage the use of solar energy in Massachusetts.

$8 billion cosmetic industry: risks outweigh benefits

Editor's note: This is the third in a weekly series of articles on women's health care.

By JULIE E. MELROSE
Collegian Staff

There is a myth which, this year alone, will contribute to the injury of approximately 55,000 American women according to the National Commission on Product Safety. Some of them will go blind. Some will lose their hair. Others will suffer the pain of bladder infections or severely irritated skin on their legs.

There is also a myth which, this year alone, will put $8 billion into the pockets of those in the cosmetics industry. Not by coincidence, its wording is the same as the first: that women's bodies are dirty, smelly and unattractive unless depilated, deodorized, douched, drawn on and drenched with perfume.

As consumers, we hear constantly about the Federal Food and Drug Administration's (FDA) testing, research and guidelines for prescription drugs. But what of the so-called cosmetics sold over-the-counter to anyone who asks for them?

These products' availability, packaging and advertising suggest they are harmless and mild. Who would ever guess that inside those delicate pastel cans of Feminique and Nair lurk chemicals strong enough to kill a proverbial moose?

Certainly not the uninformed female consumer, looking for ways to make herself more attractive in a society where beauty is at a premium for women.

For her, the drugstore is the key to achieving the standard of beauty set for women in this country. The "beautiful" woman is small, thin, without body hair and free of the odors of hard work and sex. (The current trend of child pornography should be no surprise to any of us.)

Mature female bodies just aren't that way naturally. Women find themselves needing help to look like models in cosmetics advertisements. And the cosmetics industry, after setting the standard of beauty, comes galloping up on its white horse to offer her assistance.

In an interview with Nora Ephron (Crazy Salad, Knopf '74), Jerry Della Femina, whose advertising agency handles Feminique's campaigns, describes a hypothetical situation: A woman uses vaginal deodorant, jumps into bed with her husband and has her first orgasm.

"If I can feel I was responsible for one more orgasm in the world, I feel I deserve the Nobel Peace Prize," Della Femina remarks.

He, himself, attributes the improvement in sexual relations not to the product itself but to increased self-confidence on the part of the user. (Ironically, vaginal sprays are portrayed as improving sex. Used before intercourse, they often cause skin irritation in both partners. They also numb tongues).

Producers of cosmetics exploit women's

Amherst won't back rule bill

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night voted not to back an appeal of a recent state decision against the creation of a security deposit trust fund.

The appeal is slated to appear on the warrant at the Oct. 17 Town Meeting.

Chairman Diana H. Romer abstained. "With the cost high," she said, "and a lack of certainty in the case, I just can't make up my mind."

The Security Deposit Bylaw, passed by the Town Meeting last May, calls for the creation of a trust account system for area landlords and tenants. Under the system, both tenants and landlords would have to approve any withdrawals from the mutual, interest yielding account. Backers say the bylaw would protect tenants if the landlord declared bankruptcy. The account, they say, would also protect tenant security deposits in any tenant-landlord disputes.

Massachusetts Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti last month ruled against the bylaw on the basis that enactment was outside the town's powers of legislation. The selectmen voted last week to send the article to the Fall town meeting.

The selectmen postponed making a recommendation to ban recombinant DNA research. Romer said they would conduct a work-session on Wednesday before making a recommendation to Town Meeting. The article, as it now stands, would prohibit "research that would produce novel genetic combinations between novel genetic combinations." The proposed ban would hold until potential dangers and social implications could be adequately reviewed.

The selectmen also voted to support three articles examining possible future sources of water for the town. Article three calls for the appropriation of $63,000 for a testing program for new water wells in Lawrence Swamp. The two other water proposals call for the consideration of purchasing future water from the town of Belchertown, and the Metropolitan District Commission.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward said if the article passed Town Meeting, legal counsel would probably be provided by an outside firm. Hayward said while he did not know the exact cost of such legal action, he said it would probably be around $7,000. Town meeting would have to provide legal funds for this year, or subsequent years. Cost to the town, he said, would be reflected in the future in reduced use of the town counsel, or from next year's budget.

Selectman Nancy B. Eddy last night said, "My overriding concern is the home rule issue. Eddy said earlier in the meeting she was "on the fence" for appeal of the ruling.

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, last month filed the "Home Rule Bill" with the state legislature. Romer said last night the chances of the legislation being approved are "not too good."

CAC approves allocations

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Central Area Council approved at a meeting last night proposals that would include spending $315 of its budget. Funds will be allocated in the following areas: $50 for a Recycling Coordinator's salary, $50 for a Wheeler Dorm coffeehouse, $400 for a movie sponsored by Wheeler, and $15 for a slide show sponsored by Brett Dorm.

Louise Sapp, affiliated with the UMass Recycling project, proposed that a work-study student be hired for the position of Recycling Coordinator at a $50 salary. The person holding this job, Sapp explained, would go around to dorms and supervise all recycling programs.

Fifty dollars for the Wheeler coffeehouse, planned for October 20, will be used for sound equipment and food.

Wheeler will receive $400 to sponsor "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" on October 11 at Campus Center Auditorium, 7, 9 and 11 p.m.

The Brett slide show, set for October 11, will receive $15 for its program concerning racism and native Americans.

A spokesman for the Men's Center, a Central Orchard Hill organization, asked for $1,575 each from both residential areas. "It is difficult," said Rich Fryer, vice-president and secretary of CAC, to make those kind of allocations because the semester has already started. Next week the council will vote whether or not to spend this money.

"The Alpine Slide fiasco," said Fryer, is a problem "we want to investigate." Fryer was referring to the trip planned for last Friday which was cancelled due to a phone call Thursday night from Mount Tom saying that the tow operating the chairlift was broken. The following day, it was revealed that the chairlift was in working order. The Alpine Slide trip has been rescheduled for tomorrow. Fryer admits that the council is still confused regarding the mix-up last week.

Ann Meissner, a representative from Chadbourne Dorm, discussed the dilemma of cars getting "ripped off" from the "P" lot at Chadbourne. The council plans to meet with Robert Joyce of the UMass police department to find out what can be done about this problem.

Ron Coler, director of the craft shop stated the hours of the center: Tuesday—Friday, 5—9 p.m.; Saturdays, 12—5 p.m. There may also be some craft colloquiums, Coler added.

Alumni to help seniors join job market

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

If you are a senior and dread the thought of that first job-search experience, the Placement Office is offering a program this fall that may be of help to you. The office has designed a series of workshops that will bring successful UMass alumni back to campus to help seniors prepare for the job market.

The program is being coordinated by Assistant Director of Placement Anne Schewe and Kenneth Sommers, a graduate student who is an administrative assistant to the director of Student Services.

According to Sommers the program is one of the many ways that "we are trying to make the placement office more responsive to student's needs."

"We contacted a number of alumni who have achieved prominence in various fields and invited them to come back to campus and meet graduating seniors, relate to them what the job market is like, what it is like to work, how to prepare for an interview, and how to prepare a resume," said Sommers.

The program is on a trial basis this semester. It will consist of three sessions, all geared towards seniors in the Arts and Sciences Department. "The professional schools will be next semester because they generally have less trouble finding a job," Sommers said.

Sommers said that the first two sessions will be two-day programs. "The alumni will be put up overnight in the Campus Center Hotel."

The first night of each session will consist of a panel discussion with six alumni speaking. A question-answer session will follow and afterwards there will be time for more informal discussion between students and alumni.

Sommers said the second day of the program was to involve alumni in classroom presentations and discussions.

"the faculty response to the program has been very disappointing. We sent out letters to 50 faculty members in the College of Arts and Sciences, including all undergraduate advisors, and only three have responded," said Sommers.

The first session is Oct. 13 and 14 for Arts and Science majors who have some type of social service in mind. "That could range from working in a hospital to working in politics," said Sommers.

The second session will be Oct. 20 and 21 and is geared toward students who are interested in working in the business world.

The third session will be only one night and is designed for students who have no idea of what field they want to enter.

"All the participating alumni majored in the arts and sciences and have graduated in the past ten years. We felt they could relate better to the current situation if they were recent graduates," explained Sommers.

The first session will feature such alumni as Albert Sweeney, a UMass graduate in psychology who now works in the Boston Police Commissioners Office. Also standing will be Sara Sellinger, an English major who is now a program coordinator at Danvers State Hospital; Cynthia Olkin, a teacher who majored in political science; James Smith, who was a political science major on the UMass-Boston campus and now a state representative from Lynn, and others.

The second session will bring John Commerford, a political science major who now works in the White House, and will direct the White House Conference on Economic Development to be held next spring. Also coming will be Bob Dallmeyer, a sociology major who is now Director of Public Relations for United Technology.

Sommers said the Placement Office had sent out some 300 invitations to the students and the response has been better than the faculty but "disappointing also."

"We really thought that more students would take advantage of this opportunity to help themselves. We think they could get a lot out of it," Sommers said.

Interested students or faculty can contact Anne Schewe in the Placement Office at Hampshire House or Sommers in the Director of Student Services Office, 229 Whitmore.

Rosalynn Carter dedicates Mailman research center

BELMONT, Mass. [AP] — First Lady Rosalynn Carter said yesterday that "mental health absolutely needs to be included in the national health insurance program.

The president's wife made the comment at a news conference following the dedication of the $3.2 million Mailman research center at the McLean psychiatric hospital.

"For one out of four families who are directly touched by mental illness," the president's wife said at the ceremony, "this center represents hope.

"For the scientific community it marks a major step forward in our quest to learn more about the function of the human mind."

Mrs. Carter arrived at Hanscom Air Force Base Monday afternoon from Washington and then drove to Belmont to dedicate the center, where approximately 1,600 invited guests and news media were on hand.

She was to attend a $500-a-plate cystic fibrosis fundraising dinner Monday night in Boston sponsored by the cystic fibrosis Susan L. Curtis Foundation, named in honor of the late daughter of former Gov. Kenneth Curtis of Maine, current chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Following the dedication, Mrs. Carter met with Dr. Seymour S. Kety, head of McLean's psychiatric research laboratories, and Dr. Shervert H. Frazier, chief psychiatrist at McLean. Mrs. Carter then toured the facility and held the brief news conference.

At the news briefing she was asked how the president reacted to the resignation of Bert Lance, former director of the Office of Management and Budget who left under pressure.

"He (the president) has the unique ability to turn off the pressures at night," she said. "But the Bert Lance affair took its toll on him."

At the Mailman dedication ceremony, Mrs. Carter said, "We're learning more about the causes and treatment of schizophrenia, paranoia, depression and other severe mental disorders. Since I have been involved with the President's Commission on Mental Health, we have had pressed upon us daily the crucial need for research.

"Our report calls for more federal support for research. In fact, research money is the only money that we have asked for at this time."

Mrs. Carter, the honorary chairwoman of the mental health commission, said that while accompanying her husband on his trip next month to four continents, she plans to meet with mental health officials of the various countries.

"We can speak out forcefully about the need to erase the stigma connected with mental illness," she said.

Construction of the Mailman center started two years ago and was completed this spring. The entire cost of the building was raised through private donations, including a $1 million gift from the philanthropic organization founded by brothers A.L. and Joseph Mailman, after which the center was named.

Dukakis deliberately distorted data on new jobs available

BOSTON [AP] — The House Republican floor leader charged yesterday that Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has deliberately distorted data on new jobs created by private industry.

Rep. Francis W. Hatch of Beverly said the governor inflated figures when he said 1,968 new jobs were created by 23 firms. Hatch said his staff discovered that only 296 of these jobs were full-time and 350 were part-time. The rest don't exist, he said.

Hatch, who is expected to announce his candidacy for the Republican nomination for governor soon, said Dukakis' jobs statement was followed by a $2,500 luncheon at the taxpayers' expense. He said the balance of the governor's claim that 132 firms added 4,800 jobs seemed to hold up.

"Don't get me wrong," Hatch told a news conference, "every new job we get is a plus for the state. But the governor shouldn't deliberately inflate the figures just to boost his own image in a statewide advertising campaign."

He compared what he said was the governor's distortion of the new jobs total with the past statements by the governor that there would be no new taxes if he were elected. There was a record hike in taxes in Dukakis' first year at the helm.

Alan Raymond, a Dukakis spokesman said the figures cited by the governor were supplied by the companies. He said the precise figures for a particular company were not so significant. The important issue which the governor was emphasizing, he said, was the jobs commitments made by the firms.

Unemployment rate—the same

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts' seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for August remained at 6.1 per cent of the labor force for the third consecutive month, according to the state Division of Employment Security.

The statewide figure is adjusted to take seasonal variables in the job market into account and provide a figure which can be compared to the national unemployment rate.

Nationally the rate increased to 7.1 per cent from 6.9 per cent in July.

The number of Massachusetts residents who are unemployed decreased by 16,200, a decline of nearly 10 per cent, said DES director John D. Crosier.

The number of people with jobs rose by 9,300 during August.

The preliminary figures were released yesterday.

During August unemployment not seasonally adjusted dropped in all of the state's eight major metropolitan areas. The Worcester rate of 5.1 per cent continued as the lowest, while the New Bedford area was the highest with 7.4 per cent.

Japanese Red Army returned hostages to Algerian authority

ALGIERS, Algeria [UPI] — Eleven Japanese Red Army extremists ended a six-day, 6,000-mile, $6 million saga yesterday by freeing the last 19 hostages aboard a Japan Air Lines DC-8 and turning themselves over to Algerian authorities.

Algerian police whisked the extremists away in three gleaming black limousines. Though the hijackers had threatened wholesale slaughter, the drama of torturous negotiations and cumbersome exchanges of Red Army prisoners and passenger hostages ended without a drop of blood being spilled.

At the airport terminal the hostages — 12 passengers, including one American, and seven Japanese crew members — happily toasted the end of their 135-hour ordeal with orange juice. Algeria discourages public consumption of alcohol.

The end of the six-day, 6,000-mile hijacking cost the Japanese government a record $6 million ransom.

The Algerian government declined to say whether the five original hijackers and their six radical comrades released by Japan had been arrested, given asylum or told they could leave the country. Nor was it clear what would happen to the ransom of U.S. $100 bills extorted from the Japanese government.

In Tokyo, Chief Cabinet Secretary Sunao Sunoda said the Algerians had laid down tough conditions for accepting the hijackers. Sonoda indicated Japan might have to give up hope of recapturing the terrorists or recovering the ransom.

Algerian officials declined to say anything. In the past, they have taken hijackers into custody for questioning but then promptly extended political asylum.

However, Algeria has done well at recovering and returning ransom money, usually within a week or so.

Violence near Johannesburg leaves 1 dead, 7 wounded

QUEENSTOWN, South Africa [UPI] — Police said yesterday they killed a 20-year-old black who was trying to set fire to a black policeman's home. Seven other persons were wounded during a weekend of violence in this farm town 450 miles south of Johannesburg.

Brig. Piet Smal, the local police commander, said the unidentified black man was brandishing a gasoline bomb when police rushed up in a patrol car, drew their pistols and killed him Sunday night.

Two homes of black policemen in the same segregated black quarter of the town were burned to the ground Friday, and more than 50 rioters have been arrested.

Black policemen, symbols of the white government's authority, have been frequent targets in South Africa's nationwide anti-government unrest.

Sporadic violence has erupted in this eastern cape province since the sudden death Sept. 12 in police custody of Steven Biko, the 30-year-old black nationalist who lived in nearby King William's Town.

Smal estimated rioters have caused $70,000 in damage in the past four days, razing a post office in the black quarter, partly burning a government office and wrecking chairs, tables and windows in a hall where a black beauty contest was in progress.

"They turned the place upside down," said a white Queenstown resident, Sandy Greig. A mob of about 150 ran from the beauty show after it broke up in disorder and descended on nearby white suburbs. They smashed windows in two white-owned houses and damaged six shops.

Hotel residents to meet tonight

By RUTH McGORTY
Collegian Staff

All students who have had to live in the Campus Center Hotel at some time this semester will have a meeting tonight at 9:30 in room 922 of the Campus Center.

According to the Legal Services Office (LSO), its staff will talk with the students at the meeting about what the present situation is and what options are available for redressing the students' grievances.

The discussion will include the option of remaining in the Campus Center Hotel. Also discussed will be rebates for those who feel they must withdraw from the University because they are too far behind in their studies from having to move around so many times, said Jim Starr, staff attorney for LSO.

Dean of Students William F. Field last night said rebates would be possible for students leaving the University if there is a valid reason. Each rebate would be examined on an individual basis, he said.

John Ringle from the Housing office last night said he thought the few students who were thinking of withdrawing are now living in a dorm and are fairly satisfied.

Ringle said he cannot attend the meeting because the administration was requested not to come by LSO. He said LSO told him it felt the students would feel uncomfortable and wouldn't open up if members of the administration were present.

Starr said the denial of certain privileges such as access to lounge space, laundry facilities, and student government would also be talked about. He said they will provide legal information pertaining to the situations.

Starr mentioned, "Last week a student left on Friday afternoon for the weekend and when he returned found all of his belongings moved to another room. He had trouble finding things."

The student had heard nothing of the action which was taken to triple up the students because of the bankers coming from a convention. We have advised him of the different options which are available to him to redress this action, the LSO said.

At present, there are still ten students living in the Hotel according to Alice Woynar, Housekeeper. She said, "The moving out is slow. Last week just a few went. I think one is going today."

According to one of the students living in the hotel there are about five students who wish to remain living there. He said, "We like it here. We don't want to go to a dorm where we don't know anybody. We're all settled in, we like our roommates and don't want to move."

Students form anti-union RSO

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

It is "a terrible abortion of justice to push unionization" on the student body, according to a group that is forming to bring the question to a school-wide referendum.

The "Non Unionists Students" organization is attempting to gain Recognized Student Organization (RSO) status. The members have already written their constitution and are close to having the 10 names necessary to gain RSO status.

Student Senator James Potts, who referred to the push for unionization as an "abortion of justice" added it is "an unnecessary clog in an already over clogged system."

He continued, "basically we feel that the job of the student is to learn and the job of the administration is to administer. There should be a mutually exclusive nature to each one."

Freshman Pat O'Donnell, who helped create the organization, opposes unionization because he said he feels that under a union "the quality of education will go down, then the reputation of UMass will go down." He also said that he feels that faculty negotiations "are delicate enough without a third party" of students.

O'Donnell, a business major from Sherborn, last night said he also objected to student empowerment because "students don't have enough experience. I'd rather trust my future to someone with 20 or 30 years more experience."

O'Donnell said he feels the present structure can deal with the problems facing the school. O'Donnell added student apathy would be just as prevalent with a union as it is now.

UMass student dies from gunshot wound

Services for Margaret Silva Boutin, 27, a former UMass student, will be held today in Haywood Mortuary, Haywood, California.

Boutin, of 107 Cliffside Apartments, died Friday in her home of a self-inflicted gunshot wound, according to Franklin County Medical Examiner Dr. Henry A. Rys.

Enrolled in the UMass School of Continuing Education, Boutin was born on Sept. 16, 1950 in Rayham, the daughter of Manuel and Margaret Paige Silva of Clearlake, California.

The burial will be in Holy Sepulchre Cemetery, Haywood, California.

Lecture series begins

The Chancellor's Lecture Series begins its fourth year of operation tomorrow night at 8 in the Campus Center with Bernard Berger, a nationally known specialist in water research.

Professor Berger is director of the Water Resources Research Center here and serves on a number of panels and commissions concerning water resources at the state, federal and international level, including the President's Office of Science and Technology.

Berger served with the U.S. Public Health Service for 25 years before joining the UMass faculty in 1966. He was educated at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University.

The Chancellor's Lecture Series, founded in 1974, is a means of recognizing excellence on campus. Previous speakers in the series include William Heronemus, solar wind expert and Walker Gibson, a specialist in the English language.

★Risks vs. benefits in cosmetics

insecurities and then claim to be providing a valuable service. Ads for vaginal sprays suggest they make the user in some way cleaner. In fact they do the opposite, polluting a naturally clean area of the human body with deodorants, perfumes and propellents.

The human vagina has a natural cleansing process in which waste materials are shed down to the vaginal entrance. A daily washing of this area with soap and water and wearing underwear that allows absorption and air circulation should prevent strong vaginal odor.

A persistent foul odor is often the symptom of a condition that requires medical attention. Vaginal sprays only mask the symptom. They may also irritate a healthy vagina and increase its susceptibility to infection.

Alberto-Culver makes $40 million a year from the sale of FDS, a vaginal spray. Because such sprays are classified as a cosmetic rather than a drug, FDA testing requirements for them are minimal.

FDS was given only three tests before being introduced to the market. One test proved that the spray did no injury to the labias and vaginas of twenty rats over a three-day period. The other two tests involved less than 100 human subjects and were similarly short-term.

Commercial douche preparations have been another big seller for the industry. Douching (irrigation of the vagina) was used in ancient times as a therapy for genital disorders. Today it is associated with cleaning and deodorizing the vagina. There is disagreement amont doctors as to whether douching is harmful or not. Some say it washes away normal secretions that protect the vagina from infection.

A pamphlet put out by UMass Health Services in 1975 suggests that douching be done only when symptoms of a disturbance of vaginal ecology are present. In this case, a vinegar or baking soda douche may be helpful. Commercial douche products contain chemicals which may cause further irritation. The pamphlet says they should not be used.

Many other cosmetic preparations are potentially harmful. The First Ms. Reader (Warner, '73) reports that cream depilitories (hair removers) can cause skin irritation, allergic reactions and eye injuries. Nail polishes can catch on fire if the wearer's finger comes into contact with a flame. Many make-ups, until last year, contained No. 2 Red dye. Bubble baths can irritate the bladder and surrounding tissues.

Realistically, the unnatural standard of beauty for American women is not going to change overnight. Each year, the cosmetics industry sinks millions of advertising dollars into guaranteeing that it won't.

Women have the option of deciding they will no longer endanger their health to look like the "cosmetics giants'" idea of what a woman should be.

The greater the number of women appearing in public with their bodies in a natural state, the faster the unnatural standard of beauty will fall. And the cosmetics industry will come tumbling after.

Indira Gandhi arrested for abusing her position in India

NEW DELHI [AP] — Seven months after her iron grip on India was broken in a stunning election defeat, Indira Gandhi was arrested yesterday and charged with abusing her position as prime minister. She promptly charged the arrest was political.

Authorities said at least 10 other persons, including four former cabinet ministers and Mrs. Gandhi's personal secretary, also were arrested.

Mr. Gandhi, 59, was charged in two cases under India's Prevention of Corruption Act, officials reported.

They said she was accused in one case of "illegally conniving" with others in pressuring two companies to obtain 104 jeeps for campaign work in several election districts including her own.

The second charge alleged Mrs. Gandhi misused her position by awarding a $13.4 million government oil drilling contract to the French firm Consultancy Services de Petroles, despite a lower bid by an unidentified American competitor.

Taken into custody at her family home here, Mrs. Gandhi declined an offer of bail on a personal bond before she was whisked away in a sedan to detention at the headquarters of the Delhi armed police force.

The former prime minister, defeated in national elections last spring, said in a statement that her arrest "is to prevent me from going to the people ... to discredit me in their eyes."

Labor Dept. proposed policy for controlling cancer chemicals

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Labor Department proposed a comprehensive new policy yesterday for controlling the more than 1,500 known or suspected cancer-causing chemicals now found in the American work-place.

The proposal establishes for the first time a systematic procedure for quickly identifying, classifying and regulating carcinogenic substances that threaten workers' health.

In the past, cancer-causing agents have been dealt with on a case-by-case basis — a system which Labor Secretary Ray Marshall described as "trying to put out a forest fire one tree at a time."

Only 17 of the 1,500 to 2,000 chemicals identified as known or suspected to cause cancer have been brought under regulatory action by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration in its six-year history.

The Labor Department proposals were announced as officials of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health reported the results of a survey that estimates nearly one million Americans are potentially exposed to known carcinogens at their workplace.

The survey estimated that another 20 million workers — about one of four in the labor force — encounter potentially dangerous pollutants at their jobs ranging from noise and oil mist to known cancer-causing agents like asbestos and benzene.

Israel angry at conference

[UPI] — Israel was described yesterday as stunned and angry at publication of a joint U.S.-Soviet note on resumption of the Middle East peace conference in Geneva, but an authoritative Israeli source in New York said the conference could resume this year with Palestinians entering by the back door.

Israel remained firm that it would never deal with the Palestinian Liberation Organization as such, but the source said it would be possible for Palestinians to sit in on the conference as members of the Jordanian delegation even if their loyalties lay with the PLO.

"We are not going to check their credentials at the door," the source said. "Their sympathies might be with the PLO, they might have some affiliation with the PLO and they might even be in the pay of the PLO, but if they enter the Geneva conference as members of the Jordanian delegation we will accept them."

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan was quoted in Tel Aviv Monday as saying the Carter administration's policy shift in favor of the Palestinians posed "a great danger" to the existence of Israel, and all indications were that his meeting Wednesday with President Carter would amount to a showdown in U.S.-Israeli relations.

The new crisis in U.S.-Israeli relations arose from a joint U.S.-Soviet statement Saturday by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko which said a new Middle East peace conference should insure "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" and establish "peaceful relations" in the region.

The statement did not mention the PLO by name but in it the United States accepted for the first time the idea of "Palestinian rights." Previously Israelis and Americans have refused to accept the concept that the Palestinians had "rights" although the United States has said the interests of the 3 million Palestinian refugees must be taken care of.

The statement was greeted with pleasure by the Arab nations and rejected outright by the Israelis. Authoritative sources said U.S. Ambassador to Tel Aviv Samuel W. Lewis informed Prime Minister Menahem Begin of the statement last Thursday, and that Begin flatly rejected it in a stormy meeting.

Dayan, in a New York statement to the national Israeli newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth, called the joint U.S.-Soviet statement "pro-Palestinian" and said it "shows an American change of position in this matter."

"I see in the attempt to advance the cause of the Palestinians and the PLO at the expense of Israeli a great danger for the existence of the state of Israel," he was quoted as saying.

Authoritative sources also expressed amazement that the United States would choose this time to bring the Soviet Union back into Middle East affairs. The sources said Soviet influence had been waning in the Middle East and although Russia is co-chairman with the United States of the Geneva conference, the joint action served only to enhance the Russian position.

Some Israeli sources said they believed Carter had acted with the Soviet Union to try to improve deteriorating U.S.-Soviet relations.

UPI State Department Correspondent Jim Anderson said the sharp strains that developed yesterday between Israel and the United States were jeopardizing Vance's attempt to convene the Geneva conference by the end of this year.

10 persons in camper killed

PLANT CITY, Fla. [AP] — Federal investigators gathered Monday at a railroad crossing to reconstruct the collision between a passenger train and a pickup-camper that killed the 10 persons jammed into the truck.

None of the 40 passengers aboard Amtrak's Floridian was injured as the train — on the final leg of its Chicago-to-St. Petersburg run — rammed the pickup broadside Sunday night.

While members of the National Transportation Safety Board met with railroad officials and train crewmen at the accident scene, medical and police personnel teamed at Tampa General Hospital to identify the men, women and children killed in the wreck.

Police Sgt. Ruffin Cain said by late Monday authorities had identified eight of the victims — all of whose bodies were mutilated and charred.

The eight were all from the Dade City area north of Tampa.

The crossing is in a thinly populated section of this rural area, which bills itself as the strawberry capital of the world, about 25 miles east of Tampa in Central Florida.

Policeman's job under inquiry

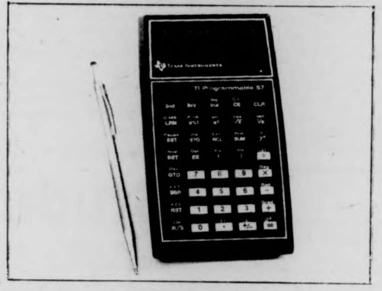
BOSTON [AP] — State Police Detective Lt. James DeFuria opted for early retirement after learning a special Suffolk County Grand Jury is investigating his activities, WCVB-TV reported yesterday night.

DeFuria has been acting head of the investigating arm of the state Fire Marshal's office for the past several months. The office's investigation reports are used as factors in determining insurance settlements for fire losses.

State officials said the grand jury's investigations are the most far-reaching arson inquiry in state history.

Channel 5 reported that the investigation involves the testimony of a secret witness who is currently in protective custody.

The TI Programmable 57.



A powerful super slide rule calculator.

Supplementing basic addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division functions, the TI Programmable 57 provides many advanced mathematical capabilities to simplify problem solving:

- Functions of x — square, square root, reciprocal, factorial*, $y^x$, and $\sqrt[x]{y}$.
- Logarithmic functions — common and natural logarithms and their inverses.
- Trigonometric functions and their inverses (solved in degrees, radians, or grads).
- Statistical functions — mean, variance, and standard deviation, operate on two variables.
- Nine levels of parentheses and the ability to store up to 4 pending operations let you handle even complex equations quickly and easily.
- Eight multi-use memories for storing and recalling values and addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division of data to memory.
- AOS™ algebraic operating system. AOS is more than just algebraic entry. It's a system that allows you to enter problems exactly as they are stated algebraically without rearranging the order of the problem, or resorting to the use of memories to store partial results. This is accomplished by the use of a full algebraic hierachy coupled with multiple levels of pending operations and parentheses. This permits easy left-to-right entry of expressions — both numbers and functions.

AOS provides an incredibly powerful, easy-to-use system for problem solving. And makes the calculator part of the solution — not part of the problem.

News in Brief

"Li'l Abner" creator retires

NEW YORK [UPI] — Al Capp, creator of Dogpatch, U.S.A., that microcosm of Americana, has decided to retire, taking the entire Yokum family with him.

The 68-year-old cartoonist's satirical comic strip, "Li'l Abner," will be run in daily newspapers across the country for the last time on Nov. 5 and in Sunday papers on Nov. 13.

Capp's comic strip began in 1934 and was distributed at its peak to 900 newspapers by the Chicago Tribune-New York News Syndicate.

Nothing was sacred in Capp's cartoons, which rapped everyone and everything from corporate chiefs General Bullmoose to the institution of marriage (Sadie Hawkins Day).

Capp enraged feminists with his portrayal of big-chested, leggy women who ranged from the All-American sweetheart, Daisy Mae, to the "street-wise" and earthy Moonbeam McSwine.

Capp lives in Cambridge, Mass.

Children used as 'guinea pigs'

RADNOR, Pa. [UPI] — Television advertising researchers are using American children as "guinea pigs" in secretive studies to determine their hidden needs, TV Guide magazine reports.

The research findings are used "to develop television commercials calculated to make children grab for supermarket impulse items or nag parents for sponsor brands," according to an article published in the Oct. 8 issue.

It said some manufacturers and ad agencies are doing their own testing but larger projects are assigned to prominent research firms such as New York's Gilbert Youth Research or Child Research Service of Rutherford, N.J.

Abortion upset

NBOS [UPI] — The Massachusetts Senate will consider a 1978 supplemental budget with an anti-abortion amendment substantially weaker than one approved by the House last month.

The $33.4 million supplemental budget contains $16.1 million in state employees pay raises which have been jeopardized by an anti-abortion amendment attached in the House by Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston.

Flynn's amendment would prohibit state funding of abortions except to save the life of the woman. Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has said he would veto the entire supplemental budget if an anti-abortion amendment were attached.

Last week, the Senate Ways and Means Committee voted to separate the anti-abortion amendment from the budget so state employee pay hikes — negotiated to begin last August — would not be jeopardized.

But Monday following an hour-long caucus in the office of Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, the committee met again and reversed itself, voting 7-4 to re-attach the amendment to the budget.

Sen. Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, later said it was determined during the caucus there was not enough support for separating the amendment from the budget.

New plan to eliminate gas price controls in 1987

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With a series of history-making rulings, Senate leaders ended a two-week filibuster on natural gas yesterday, enabling Sen. Henry Jackson to propose a new plan that would eliminate federal gas price controls in 1987.

Jackson said Energy Secretary James Schlesinger isn't opposed to his idea — the first indication yet that the administration might accept eventual deregulation of new natural gas.

Filibuster leaders conceded defeat just hours after the new Senate rules took effect and they blamed their defeat on the White House.

"We have given it the best try we could have and we will call off the filibuster effective immediately," said Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who staged the delay to ward off victory by those favoring deregulation.

"We have had the rug pulled out from under us by the President," said Sen. James Abourezk, D-S.D. The Senate then adjourned for the night.

As the filibuster ended, Jackson's new plan took center stage in the multi-billion-dollar controversy. In the past, the Washington Democrat has supported administration efforts to maintain federal authority over natural gas prices, but his compromise calls for elimination of those regulations on newly discovered natural gas in 1987.

Jackson said Schlesinger knew of the plan and "did not object to it," although President Carter threatened a week ago to veto any natural gas bill with deregulation in it, and Schlesinger noted that position again on Sunday.

Under Jackson's plan, newly produced natural gas would be sold at $2.03 per thousand cubic feet immediately, up from the current ceiling of $1.46. The price could rise to $3.48 by 1985 and controls would be removed Jan. 1, 1987.

The plan was designed to woo the vote switches Jackson thinks he needs to win since key Senate votes in the past two weeks showed deregulation forces with a small majority.

Republicans and Democrats who favor deregulation hailed Jackson for trying a compromise, but did not commit themselves to it.

Jackson was able to introduce the compromise — which could come up for a vote this week — due to history-making rulings implemented by the Senate leadership to crush the filibuster.

With Vice President Walter Mondale presiding, the leadership won approval of four key rulings to eliminate the chief weapon used in the filibuster — amendments.

The rulings allowed the presiding Senate officer to throw out amendments he considered dilatory; to refuse certain time-consuming motions and roll calls; and to allow individual senators to withdraw their own amendments.

Armed with those parliamentary tools, Majority Leader Robert Byrd called up an amendment every five seconds and Mondale quickly ruled them out of order.

The parliamentary moves reduced a stack of 300 amendments to about 125 before Metzenbaum and Abourezk threw in the towel, but there were angry protests from senators that the leadership was abusing its power.

Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., said the effect would be to "establish a dictatorship in the Senate," and Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., called it "an abuse of leadership authority."

Byrd, red-faced and emotional, defended his actions in a seven-minute speech.

"What about the abuse of the rules that every senator has been subjected to for the last 13 days and one night?" Byrd shouted.

He said Mondale was "trying to get the ox out of the ditch," and concluded: "It is time to stop this foolishness."

At that stage, about half the senators got up and clapped. Almost all the Senate's 100 members were present.

The administration, like the filibuster leaders, wanted to maintain federal price controls over natural gas, but it did not support the delaying tactics.

Toxic fumes found in school

KANSAS CITY, Mo. [UPI] — Toxic fumes spread through an elementary school yesterday and sent 160 children to hospitals complaining of dizziness, nauseousness and sore eyes.

Kansas City Superintendent of Schools Robert R. Wheeler late yesterday said authorities had not determined if Marlborough Elementary School would be able to resume operation today.

Wheeler said the fumes possibly were carbon monoxide and had been circulated through the school's ventilating system.

"All children were treated and then released," Wheeler said. "The hospitals report that no child was seriously injured."

He said he has met with representatives from the city's health and fire department in efforts to find the cause of the fumes.

"At this point we have been unable to determine the source of the fumes that made our children ill," Wheeler said. Tests continue today and if the source of the trouble has been located and corrected we will open Marlborough School.

He said if the cause of the trouble is not located today children will be transported to other locations for classes.

Many of the students vomited or fainted when they left the classrooms and emerged in the cool air. Some fell to the ground in tears.

The school was evacuated around 10 a.m. after a furnace was turned on, said Earl Fleer, a spokesman for the school district.

He said the two-story brick school in the southeast part of the city housed about 270 students in three grades — kindergarten, 5th and 6th.

"We've got everything under control now," Fleer said. "We do not have any confirmed serious illnesses — that is we don't know of any student who will have to be hospitalized. We're monitoring them now to make sure there aren't any after-effects."

Fleer said the students were taken to five area hospitals by ambulances. The majority of the students were taken to Baptist Memorial, Research and Children's Mercy.

"They were taken to the hospitals as a precautionary move — we were dealing with sort of an uncertain situation," he said.

An investigative team was at the school Monday afternoon searching for the source of the fumes.

Reminiscing a bad experience

Being at a loss for subject matter this week, I begged my friends for inspiration. One acquaintance, Jean, a Ph.D. candidate at another university, at last provided me with a story.

"Why don't you do a column on nutty professors? That's always good for laughs."

"Great idea, Jean, but I haven't had any nutty professors at UMass."

"You don't know what you've missed, kid. I can tell you a thing or two."

Jean proceeded to describe her experiences with Professor X, teacher of an upper division linguistics course at a prestigious midwestern university. Though the Collegian's editorial standards forced me to delete all expletives and to disguise the professor's identity thoroughly, I present this sad tale approximately as it was narrated to me.

On the first day Mrs. X, a middle-aged apoplectic wearing a tight girdle and sandals, strutted into class and surveyed her twenty prospective victims with a smug grimace.

"Drop this course," were her first words, delivered with a professorial smirk. "If you're like your fellow students, this course will be much too hard for you. Why, most of you probably can't even write a coherent sentence. You should be informed right now that this isn't a 'gut' course. There are going to be exams, papers and homework. If you don't know how to pronounce big words like diphthong, you're in trouble. And if you're smart, you can find plenty of other places to show off. So drop this while you're ahead."

Jean didn't heed the professor's advice. She stayed the entire semester, along with fifteen other stubborn souls. It proved to be one of the worst mistakes of her undergraduate career.

"Don't you forget, language is alive, alive-o!" Professor X would sing out, with the gusto of a theologian citing a choice aphorism. "Words are alive and full of magic, just like the green growing grass."

"I just love teachin' the young!" was another stock phrase of this professor who had no office hours and refused to talk to students after class. In-class discussion was condemned as a rude interruption of X's lecture.

Oddly enough, though, X opened class each day by scanning the students with her bulldog leer and asking: "Does anyone have a question? Or an answer?" Or course, the students knew better than to respond. They sat patiently while X berated them for their lack of curiosity and initiative. "When is somebody going to ask one little question, huh?" she would rant before commencing her lecture.

One day, however, Jean felt compelled to make a comment. X (who knew no Chinese) had made an erroneous remark about the grammar of a Chinese dialect with which Jean, a student of Asian languages, was familiar.

"This is a class in English, not a Chinese grammar course," the professor sneered at Jean's criticism, her watery codfish eyes bulging with annoyance. "And I simply can't teach a student who won't be taught."

After that incident, Jean kept quiet. In the course of the semester she endured many emotion-charged discourses concerning X's rural heritage, her menopausal anxieties, her unhappy childhood and her drinking habits. At one point X confided that she had a lifelong crush on Alfred the Great ("What a Man!"), though she mercifully spared the class the intimate details of her fantasies. By the end of the semester Jean had learned nothing new about linguistics, but she could have written a book-length psychohistory of Mrs. X.

Does Professor X sound familiar to you? Probably not. We UMies are lucky in that our university is relatively free of tenured incompetents. Unfortunately, though, there are a few here. If you are trapped in a course taught by one of these misfits, you are likely to finish the semester with immense frustration, little or no new knowledge, and a bad grade.

You should realize that there's nothing you can do about a professor who has tenure. A full professor cannot be fired or demoted, though he may be as dotty as Daffy Duck. The department head and ombudsman can't help you with that unfair "C" on your transcript at the end of a miserable semester. The only thing to do is to learn to identify a loony before the end of Add-Drop period. To help you to recognize "bad apple" profs, here is a partial list of their characteristics.

1. They have no office hours.
2. They talk incessantly (in class!) about their favorite drinks.
3. They do not allow classroom discussion or criticism.
4. They rant about their nasty third grade teachers.
5. They quote from Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm.

Spirit at Kent State lives

When the FBI comes to visit the Revolutionary Student Brigade it could be for any number of things, never before for "negotiations". But, on the morning of September 24, while buses were pouring into Kent State from New York, St. Louis, Berkeley, Texas etc., the FBI, with the Dept. of Interior came to the office of the RSB at Kent.

They wanted to set up secret "negotiations" about the gym, between the Brigade and President Golding of K.S.U. This was a strange turn of events. Kent State had been an armed camp for a week, the newspapers screamed terrorist and impending violence and the administration warned all Kent students to go home. Yet, now, Saturday morning, few police were to be seen and the F.B.I. wanted to set up secret negotiations? Why?

The truth of the matter was that KSU Trustees and administration and Governor Rhodes had gone all out to bust the May 4th Coalition and the spirit of Kent and Jackson State. They had gone all out to build the gym, white wash the murders of four students and lie about the unjust war the students had stood up against. And it all blew up in their faces.

On September 24 students from Kent and schools all across the country rallied 3000 strong against the gym, proclaiming they were carrying on the spirit of struggle of Kent and Jackson State. 2500 marched against the campus, reasserting the naming of four buildings after the martyrs of 1970. Finally in defiance of court injunctions which have already led to over 300 arrests, about half the marchers smashed through the cyclone fence surrounding the construction site and while others cheered, marched onto the hill, claiming it as territory sacred to the people's struggle in the United States. The ruling class is out to bury this history, but the demonstration shows clearly their bulldozers are digging them a pit they don't like at all.

They were definitely on the run. In spite of a press blackout (or distortion), heavy police intimidation, and threats of suspension 1000 Kent students showed up at the rally to join with the 2000 others from around the country. The call by the May 4th Coalition had struck a chord for students across the country. And it was forcing the KSU administration to tighten the leash on the police and the FBI to scurry for negotiations.

The demonstration on the 24th was a success. The press blackout exploded. Moving the gym is now a national issue. Thousands of students have taken up as this struggle as their own. Many people came into the fight out of anger that the school was in fact planning to desecrate the graves of four innocent individuals, victims of a tragic assault. Anger at the coverup and the arrogance of a government that continues to slap us in the face with such blasphemy.

Now many students realize that they are so intent on burying the memory because, for the rich, Kent is not some moral tragedy but a bitter reminder of the wave of struggle against the Vietnam War and invasion of Cambodia that rocked the country during Kent State. The murder of four students during this upsurge at KSU and two students at Jackson State, a Black college in Mississippi, had fueled the furnace of rebellion. It is this memory — and this example — that they were out to bury.

The demonstration also gave the struggle at Kent itself a shot in arm. Coalition meetings since the demonstration have grown tremendously. The show of support gave Kent students the inspiration to carry on. They again see the possibility of stopping the gym.

The construction goes on at Kent State but the struggle is not over. Many new people went to Kent State (76 from UMass) and are back home to help organize for the future. The RSB has called for a national armband day on October 12 to be followed by another national demonstration October 22nd in the spirit of "what goes up, must come down."

Finally, I urge all students to come hear Al Canfora, a student shot at Kent State May 1970, speak tonight — C.C. Rm. 165, 7:30, on the struggle to move the gym and the rebuilding of a revolutionary student movement.

Dedicate gym — a reasonable solution

By STEPHEN MATHIEU

"Never Forgive or Forget".

Yes, this is one of the many ridiculous slogans being perpetrated by our friends who want to keep alive the horrible memory of Kent State. They are another group that leads me to believe that the only thing that has been learned from history is that nothing has been learned from history.

It is people like this that kept open the wound of the Civil War from one generation to the next, and "kept alive the memory" so well, that today, over 100 years later, there still exists a feeling of bitterness in the minds of a lot of people towards their southern or northern countrymen and women. Yes, I think that that is a very real goal that we should all work toward. Instill our bitterness into as many future generations as we possibly can.

It would have been great if we had said, "Screw you, Germany and Japan" after World War Ii. Yes, Sir, keep that memory alive. I think that we made a terrible mistake in rebuilding Pearl Harbor. We should have left it in shambles to "preserve the memory".

When is all of this stupidity going to end? Will it take another clash with police, more violence, and possibly more destruction for us to realize our stupidity?

To me, there does seem to be a solution that would be logical to end this foolishness. It is one that would "keep the memory alive" and at the same time, satisfy the school's desire for the new athletic facility.

Build the gym, and dedicate it to the four students that were killed there. By doing this, thousands of future students will benefit from the gym, and each time they walk through the doors, a large placque would greet them, and be there to remind them of the historical significance of the place they currently stand.

The protestors, however, of the gym have rejected this idea completely. They seek an unconditional surrender on the part of the administration. "Yes sir, baby, we're going to show those lousy turkeys in the administration what student power is all about."

I can understand the bitter feelings of those people who had a personal stake in the whole incident back in 1970, but I cannot find it in myself to condone what they are doing today.

To carry this hatred and bitterness on into the future will serve no constructive purpose, and to try to breed this hatred and bitterness into the minds of other people who were never involved in the affair is a terrible injustice, as great as what happened in 1970. The victims of this injustice become full of hatred toward people that they might have become very friendly with under normal circumstances.

However, the people who seek to perpetrate these bitter feelings don't care about that. The only way to live is their way, and their own goals and ideals are the only ones that count. You don't have a freedom of choice or the right to express your own opinion when dealing with these people. Any opposition toward their views has the effect of a declaration of war. They don't seem to understand the concepts of diplomacy and compromise, and most important of all, the concepts of love and respect for their fellow man and woman.

Will there ever be an end to the bitterness and hatred that surrounds Kent State? I don't know. There are a lot of narrow minded people who want to dwell upon and live in the past. But there are many more who are interested in building a better future for themselves and those around them. I like to think of myself as being a part of the latter group. I can't help but think that if all of the money and time that these protestors have put in had gone towards a revitalization project in a Springfield or Boston ghetto that far more benefit could have been received by the poor who have to live in them. I think that a greater deed for society would have been accomplished, and I think that efforts of this nature would be much more appreciated than the efforts at Kent State.

But then, again, that is my opinion. You all have to set your own priorities.

Consideration before smoking

By RICH SIDNEY

A Matter of Consideration.

With the appearance of the militant non-smoker onto the set of life comes the suspicion that, perhaps, the non-smoker is correct in his militancy. To a large extent, this is fallacious. All that is required is a certain amount of consideration on the part of both the non-smoker and the smoker. In many instances, a smoker will light up a cigarette, seeking his relaxation, not realizing that there is a non-smoker sitting nearby not enjoying the waste smoke drifting by him.

At this point I feel I have you sufficiently interested to tell you that, while I am a non-smoker, I have no wish to make you a non-smoker in my stead. All I ask, is that when you light your cigarette, take a look around.

If there is any doubt as to the next person's tendency away from your smoke, ask them if they mind. They may want to move, so that the smoke will not bother them, or they may ask you, politely, I hope, to wait a few minutes. There are few instances where the latter is best complied with. Such places as classrooms, where a person cannot leave, or an elevator, which is a very close environment, are two good examples of this sort of consideration would hold true. When it is possible, I always try to do the first if someone wants to smoke. My room-mate is a smoker, and the understanding which we have worked out is that he always sits downwind from me. We always have a window open, and if the room still fills with smoke, one of us, depending on who is more able, moves.

I am extremely allergic to tobacco, although some forms bother me more than others, all forms still do. When there is cigarette smoke in the air, which is not being circulated away from me, I become physically ill. Some of the symptoms are a shortness of breath and hyperactivity. The shortness of breath can be as simple as more rapid respiration, or as complex as not being able to breath at all, as a result of my lungs rejecting the whole breath because of the impurities. Often, my nose will clog, trying to filter the air, and my eyes will begin to water, causing me to lose my vision. Someone lit a cigarette during an exam I was taking, and I was forced to leave the exam and walk, blind, to health services, to have my eyes washed out.

According to State Law, there are certain places where smoking is not allowed. Through two sections, Chapter 465, section 28 of the state fire laws, and Chapter 271, the recently enacted Public Smoking law, the restrictions are listed. They include classrooms, elevators, supermarkets, public auditoriums and the like. In these places, it is more than inconsiderate to light up, it is illegal.

I have no wish to restrict your right to kill yourself any way you deem reasonable, and I favor euthanasia, I would be very appreciative of your efforts to not kill me or disturb my less than well-balanced health through efforts to be considerate of my air. In this vein, I have been questioned as to why I did or did not ask someone to put out their cigarette in a given situation. I follow a basic set of rules, which can be summarized in three questions that I ask myself before asking someone to move or put out their cigarette.

1) I ask myself if I am getting clean air to breath. This keeps me from looking for cigarette smokers when I don't really need to, and allows someone who is not bothering me to continue smoking.

2) I ask myself if there is any territorial factor to take into account. If I am in a professor's office or someone's home or car, I will step out, move, open a window, or take some similar action. I am not out to get the smoker, just because he happens to light up. I am only interested in my own health and well-being.

3) The last factor I take into account is the legal factor. If it is illegal to smoke, I will ask someone to put out a cigarette, whether or not there is another alternative, such as moving, or having the smoker move out of the air pattern bringing the smoke to me.

These are my rules, self imposed, for judging in which cases to ask someone to put out their cigarette, or for me to move. I try to be considerate of the smoker, and his habit. All I ask in return, is the consideration of the smoker for my clean air.

Some of today's letters on unionization are responses to our soliciting student opinion on the subject.

Student Union coverage criticized

To the Editor:

It is encouraging to see that the Collegian has finally taken a stand [of sorts] on the topic of student unionization. Obviously, the time is soon coming when a decision will have to be made once and for all regarding the union: the money will either dry up or be renewed; the professional organizers will either begin to organize students or move on to greener pastures; the rumor of union itself will either bear fruit or take its place as another footnote to student history.

Unfortunately, the Collegian appears to have made some rather elementary breaches of logic in its presentation of the unionization situation on this campus. First, you stated that students ought to organize to defend their interests, as have the faculty. What you fail to mention, however, is that faculty organized for reasons far distant from those contemplated by the Student Organizing Project. Faculty did not organize because they felt an inadequate impact on the governance of the University; they organized because they wanted to negotiate over salary and conditions of employment [student-faculty ratios, teaching load, etc.]. Comparing this with the issues facing students is like comparing apples and oranges. Those who have been waiting [for three years and at considerable student expense] for students to buy this comparison are a sad example of organizing skills.

Second, the Collegian stated that students ought to participate in a union because of the variable job market. The logic seems to go like this: since the University does not really care about student interests [assumption No. 1], and since a student union will change this situation [assumption No. 2], students ought to organize to protect their future jobs [conclusion]. What the Collegian fails to notice is that UMass students have expressed their opinions about the future job market in the most compelling terms: they have changed the pattern of course enrollment. I suppose the Collegian ought to be congratulated for at least attempting to tell the Business and Engineering majors that they have somehow chosen wrong, and that they ought to band together shoulder to shoulder in order to make a decision they have already implemented.

In short, the Collegian seems to have failed to shed any new light on the unionization issue. Perhaps, if the Collegian were to apply the journalistic standards of critical thinking to the issue instead of a mindless public relations instinct, more students would become interested. But as long as the SOP and the Collegian insist on engaging in terminal doses of wishful thinking, students are going to continue to do what they have done for three years: ignore them.

Hector Ames

In support of S.O.P.

To the Editor:

I want to express my support for the Student Organizing Project and their attempts to build a student union. Student government [S.G.A.] is worse than useless, because they are not concerned with some of the real issues facing students.

Decisions are made in the university on the basis of who has the power, and students are powerless. Administrators will have their jobs no matter what students do, so they are not at all concerned with responding to student's needs. Overcrowding in the dorms, overcrowded classes, and academic issues [i.e. putting the F back into the cum] are all reasons for supporting the S.O.P. in dumping student bureaucrats.

The time for the union is now! No more student politicians who think they can represent us! Student Senators are all on the Whitmore payroll, anyhow. Power to the students! Power to the Union!

Diane Morrisey

Students in charge: 'a dead issue'

To the Editor:

Having seen your invitation to respond to the issue of student unionization, I take this opportunity to share my feelings.

Probably the worst thing about student government as it presently exists is that it is students who are in charge. I realize that this may sound odd, but I believe it to be true.

First, it is important to remember that students are transients. They come for a few years, and then leave for jobs or other schools. They have no real lasting investment in individual schools. As a result, student government tends to be run by either wild-eyed radicals or student bureaucrats who really don't give a damn about what the average student thinks.

Fortunately, the current plan to establish a student union offers a remedy to this situation. Under the union, "professional" staff will be in some of the key decision-making positions within the structure. Obviously, students who have had very little experience in the real world cannot be expected to negotiate with hardened faculty and administrators who will probably have high-powered labor lawyers working for them.

Students will have to hire their own negotiators, who will have a tremendous amount to say about what students do or do not get. Students will have to rely on the information prepared for them by their staff. And each year, it will be the staff telling the new crop of students what's going on, not the other way around.

Obviously, this will result in a much more efficient organization. But some people will probably still feel that students ought to be in charge.

Fortunately, this is a dead issue. Students haven't been in charge of student government for three years. Ever since the student organizing project was formed, the student senate has spent more of students' money on "professional" staff every year. As of today, your money is being spent on a "professional researcher" [at $17,000] and his assistant [at $8,000]; two "professional organizers" at $12,000; a "professional Third World organizer" at $12,000; a "professional economic developer" at $10,000; a "professional auto pool manager" [for the student senate's private fleet of eight vehicles, also paid for with your money] at $10,000; and a host of other "professional" video technicians, consultants, and the like.

Fortunately, the students get a piece of the action, as most of the students working in the Student Organizing Project are also on the payroll.

Think about it. With no power at all, "student empowerment" is costing students over $200,000 a year. Real power is much more expensive [with no money-back guarantee].

Ted Curtis

Letters policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Deadline for all letters is 4:00 p.m. the day before publication. Any letters received later will be published at some later date.

Life of a screenwriter can be extremely tedious

HOLLYWOOD [UPI] — Socially and economically the lowest man on the Hollywood totem pole most generally is the screenwriter who catches hell from producers, directors, actors and critics.

Ernest Lehman is in a position to know. He's written 15 screenplays, including such hits as "Sweet Smell of Success", "The King and I", "Westside Story" and "The Sound of Music."

But Lehman is convinced the very best tales are never brought to the screen.

"The stories that go on behind the making of movies are better than anything they put on film," he said the other day.

"I know. You can't believe the flow of blood, ruined lives, broken marriages, neglected children and friends stabbing one another in the back — all to entertain people and make a few bucks.

"Usually the writer finds himself in the middle. I remember once I had to write a new scene for 'Sabrina' in the middle of production. I ran to the set with two copies of new dialogue. I should have had three copies.

"I gave one to director Billy Wilder and one to William Holden. There wasn't one for Humphrey Bogart. Bogey blew up. Foamed at the mouth. He screamed, 'Get this writer out of here and send him back to Monogram where he belongs!'

"It was my first picture and I was horrified. Wilder said there would be no more shooting until Bogey apologized. Bogey took me to his dressing room for a drink and that settled that.

"I wrote 'North By Northwest' for Hitchcock and went on location with the company to Bakersfield, Calif. Cary Grant was the star and he'd sit in a limousine with me and complain that 'This is a David Niven picture, not a Cary Grant picture.'

"Cary is wealthy and like most rich stars he watches a buck closely. He asked me out to dinner one night and we ate in the hotel dining room. He out-fumbled me for the check. I was astonished a lowly screen writer would get stuck with the tab by a rich star.

"Cary assured me by saying, 'Tomorrow night it's my treat.' Next day he suggested we try the coffee shop. I said no. So we went to the dining room with a placard that read, "All You Can Eat $2.65.' Cary was ecstatic. He said, 'That's for us.'

"He was up all night from over-eating. But I love that quality about Cary. He's unique, he doesn't care what people think."

Lehman recalled how he tried to convince William Wyler to direct "The Sound of Music" for producer Richard Zanuck.

Lehman, who was to write the memorable screenplay for the film, took Wyler to see the Broadway production of the musical.

"Wyler hated it," Lehman recalled. "But he said, "Keep trying to talk me into directing the picture."

"We flew to Austria together to look at locations. All the while Wyler was busy working on deals to make other films. I wanted Julie Andrews to play Maria Von Trapp, but Wyler was opposed. Said she wouldn't do at all and he began interviewing unknown German girls for the part.

"When we got back to California he told me Julie would be perfect for 'The Americanization of Emily'."

Alicia Alonso's Giselle is still among the greatest

NEW YORK [UPI] — Alicia Alonso proved her reputation as one of the finest Giselles of the century when she danced the role with her old company, American Ballet Theatre, at a single gala performance Sept. 29.

She won more than 20 curtain calls.

Miss Alonso first danced Giselle in 1943. Her last performance of it in this country was in 1958; since then she has worked in Cuba with the Cuban National Ballet. She now is 55, her vision still marred after four operations for detached retinas and one for cataracts.

But the ageless ballerina proved once again on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House that — like Juliet — Giselle is a role that can only be properly interpreted by an artist of experience and maturity.

Her conception of Giselle is of a young girl reluctant to accept the blandishments of the disguised prince, and once she gives herself to him wholeheartedly she is reluctant once again to believe his betrayal. In the second act, as the dead Giselle risen from her grave to protect Albrecht, she is pure love and compassion, with all the hurts and disappointments of life washed away.

Americans' income rises

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Americans' income grew faster than inflation last year for the first time since 1973 and almost 18 per cent of all families made $25,000 or more, the government said yesterday.

Improved economic conditions during 1976 also meant that the number of persons living in poverty declined by 902,000, the first drop in that category in three years, according to a new study on income released by the Census Bureau.

The study, based on nationwide interviews conducted in March with 65,500 households, said the median family income last year was $14,960, an increase of 9 per cent over 1975.

Since there was a 6 per cent rise in prices between 1975 and 1976, median family income was up $450 or 3 per cent in terms of buying power, the study said.

Median income, in this case, means that half the families in the survey earned more than $14,960 and the other half earned less.

The number of families earning more than $25,000 increased from 16.4 per cent in 1975 to 17.8 per cent last year, a figure reached only once before in this decade in 1973.

Overall, it was the first time since 1973 Americans did not lost ground to inflationary pressure. Family income decreased by 4 per cent, after adjustment for inflation, in 1974 and declined another 3 per cent in 1975.

The increase last year, the report said, "reflected the recovery of the economy from the recent recession and the abatement of high-level inflation.".

Defense witness testifies in T.V. intoxication trial

MIAMI [UPI] — A teen-age defense witness in the murder trial of Ronny Zamora — in which the defense claims Zamora was "intoxicated" by television — yesterday testified the defendant never talked to her about television.

But the witness, Tina Steiner, 16, also testified that two prosecution witnesses told her they would do "all they could" to put the 15-year old defendant in prison.

Miss Steiner, a slender, soft-spoken girl who said she met Zamora several months before he allegedly killed his 82-year-old neighbor, Mrs. Elinor Haggart, was the third defense witness as the trial entered its second week.

The case has drawn national attention because defense attorney Ellis Rubin has built Zamora's defense around claims the junior high school student was addicted to television violence. Rubin contends Zamora was under the influence of "involuntary subliminal television intoxication" when he shot Mrs. Haggart June 4.

Before Miss Steiner testified, the jury was sent out of the courtroom. Rubin told Judge Paul Baker he hoped the girl would contradict testimony from two prosecution witnesses who testified last week Zamora never discussed television and only watched one program, the pro basketball playoffs.

But when the jury returned, the girl, apparently to Rubin's surprise, said Zamora had never discussed television with her.

Rubin pressed her and asked again: "He never talked about TV?"

"No," she replied. When asked if Zamora acted normal, Miss Steiner said he was "very on and off."

"Sometimes he was very nice," she said, "and sometimes he was very withdrawn and kind of moody."

But Miss Steiner also testified the two prosecution witnesses, Paul Toledo and Timothy Cahill, "told me they would do all they could to put him away for as long as they could."

Toledo and Cahill accompanied Zamora on a two-day spending spree to Disney World following the slaying. The prosecution last week presented several witnesses who linked Zamora to a car, cash and other items stolen from the victim's home.

Rubin told the court actor Telly Savalas would testify Wednesday. In opening remarks to the jury last week, Rubin said Savalas' program "Kojak" was Zamora's favorite.

Senator Lowell Weicker Jr. possible Presidential candidate

HARTFORD [AP] — Two Connecticut Republicans have begun initial work in other states for the possible presidential candidacy in 1980 of Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr.

Former state GOP Chairman J. Brian Gaffney of New Britain, expected to be Weicker's campaign manager if the senator decides to seek the nod, said he has assigned state Sen. John A. Gawrych of Torrington and James F. Donnelly of Southington to lay groundwork in New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island.

Donnelly, former executive director of Republican state headquarters, said yesterday he and Gawrych were still working unofficially because Weicker is not a formal candidate.

"We expect word on Weicker's availability in the next three or four months," he said of the Greenwich Republican.

"We've begun to talk to people in New Hampshire," Donnelly added. After returning there within the next couple of weeks, "we expect to make an exploratory visit to Vermont and Rhode Island."

Goodman, Cararet at homecoming

Tickets for the musical "Cabaret" and the upcoming Benny Goodman concert are on sale at the Fine Arts Center.

"Cabaret," winner of eight Tony awards including best musical, will be at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Oct. 13 at 8 p.m. Benny Goodman, the King of Swing, will perform Oct. 15 at 8 p.m.

Cabaret is set in early 1930s Berlin, just before stormtroopers took over Germany. The musical blends a feverish period of history with the vibrancy of modern song and dance.

Peter Boynton, a 1977 UMass graduate, will play Cliff Bradshaw, a poor American writer. He has been performing in regional theatre and summer stock.

Benny Goodman, a leader in American and international music for more than 40 years, will play selections from his popular and jazz hits, including "Sextet." Goodman is indelibly identified as the one man who started the "Big Band Era" in the 1930s.

Tickets are on sale now at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4 — Born today, you are one of those deeply affectionate persons who is far more able to sustain physical than emotional pain. Nor need you love in order to feel hurt. Even relatively distant friends can cause you emotional upheaval; all they have to do is give some sign of displeasure either with you or with your work. You are a highly sensitive individual who must be careful that that sensitivity does not do you emotional damage.

Although you enjoy people and have no difficutly working with others, you are fully capable of taking the initiative when left to your own devices. In fact, you at times surprise yourself with the facility with which you take command when the situation calls for it. Because you never offend or feel superior to those under you, you don't create enemies. Even your followers are your friends.

You enjoy doing your work well and receiving just praise for it. On the other hand, you find it difficult to concentrate on work which does not interest you at a "gut" level. You are considerate of all with whom you come into contact — but suffer continual disappointment that the reverse is not the case.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — The wise Libra will bend with the wind. There is no percentage in bucking majority opinion — at least for the time being.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Cooperate with others in an effort to "nail down" promised benefits for effort earnestly exerted. You can win your points by evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — This could be an exceptionally fine day for the Sagittarius who is willing to allow friends and family members their own chance at gain.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — You will do well to keep up your enthusiasm for a newly launched project. Don't allow others to think you've grown disinterested.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Act as a conciliatory agent when others take after each other hammer and tongs. You can bring peace to a chaotic situation.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) What applies to the "other fellow" may not apply to you today. Make every effort to realize what the pattern of present activity is.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — An unusual day sparks an interesting, exciting evening of adventure. Friends bring a new dimension to an old project.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — This is a good day for the natural-born peace maker. Arguments seem to develop out of the most innocent of remarks at this time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If you can keep both your wits and your health, you should be able to end this day with both spiritual and material gain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Talent is essential to a successful day. Charm and wit help things along, but they cannot bring about success all by themselves.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — It's the early bird that catches the worm. At the same time, he may also antagonize those who prefer to take a more leisurely course.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Pleasure and duty need not be contradictions in terms. Make an effort to enjoy what you have to do, and to do what you enjoy.

Stickers seek revenge, take on Mt. Holyoke

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team is prepared to take on the Lyons from Mt. Holyoke today in a 3:30 game behind NOPE.

Coming off an impressive 2-0 win over Northeastern on Saturday, the Minutewomen are hoping to continue their excellent play and avenge last year's 3-2 loss to Mt. Holyoke.

UMass coach Judith Davidson is "not looking for an easy game" referring to the fact that Mt. Holyoke recently trounced Wellesley 6-1.

But the Lyons should be wary of the Minutewomen, for their accomplishments are equally impressive. UMass has to its credit three straight shutout wins over formidable opponents.

The most revealing statistic which clearly shows UMass' domination is not in the scores. It is, however, in penetration time which has been heavily in UMass's favor in its past games.

While the stickers have only scored five goals in three games, that has proven more than enough because they have controlled play.

Every aspect of the Minutewomen's play has improved since the beginning of the year which is very encouraging as the team heads into the bulk of the toughest part of their schedule. UMass is 3-0 on the year.

Maddox out for playoff opener

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — The Philadelphia Phillies received some disheartening news Monday on the day before their first playoff game with the Los Angeles Dodgers when it was learned that centerfielder Gary Maddox probably will miss the first two games because of a knee injury suffered Sunday.

Maddox, who hit .293 this season and is considered one of the premier defensive outfielders in the majors, fouled a ball off his left knee while batting in the second inning against the Montreal Expos and, according to team doctor Dr. Philip J. Marone, he suffered a contusion of the kneecap.

"It caused fluid to build up on the knee joint which limits his ability to walk," said Marone. "We have been applying ice to it and he has been doing some work on the pressure machine to try to reduce the swelling. I would doubt if he could play up to his ability, if he is able to play at all."

Booters face Harvard

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass Soccer team will take on Harvard this afternoon behind Boyden at 3:30. UMass enters the game with a 3-1 season log while Harvard checks in at 1-1.

UMass is still feeling the sting of defeat at the hands of Vermont on Saturday. Now that they've lifted much of the pressure off of themselves, i.e. no goals against in addition to no defeats, they should be a looser, more potent bunch come this afternoon.

Harvard is in the midst of a rebuilding process. Their main strengths are their goaltender, Fred Herold, and junior forward Lee Nelson.

Herold played well in the Crimson opener against Columbia, despite letting in three goals. It was 1-1 going into the second half, when the Harvard defense collapsed into a state of suspended animation. Without Herold, Columbia might have approached double figures. Herold also played well in Harvard's only win, a 5-2 decision over Wesleyan.

Harvard's other asset, Lee Nelson, is a fellow with whom the UMass defense will have to reckon. He popped in two goals and added an assist in the Wesleyan game.

After Nelson and Herold, Harvard has a crop of unknowns who shouldn't present that much of a problem. Rebuilding years tend to be rather painful, and the Crimson have a rocky road ahead.

"Harvard's big problem is recruitment, their team used to be like the UN," said coach Kidd. Co-capt. Larry Aronson feels that UMass has to win big to have any real effect on the final New England rankings.

FOOT-NOTES: It's been a tough season for co-capt. Ed Niemiec, who's been plagued with nagging injuries ... Halfback Andy Moore continues to earn plaudits from both teammates and coaches ... While observing the Vermont videotape, the conversation was punctuated with "ifs" ... PR dept. has enlisted Mickey Dolenz to solo during halftime, future guests include Jimmy Carter, Farrah Fawcett-Majors, and Francis the talking mule.

Sports Notices

WRESTLING — All candidates must attend an important meeting today at 4 p.m. in the Boyden wrestling room.

INTRAMURALS — The intramural cross-country meet will be held on the Orchard Hill course (located between the two green water towers) Oct. 12. The meet will begin at 12:30 p.m. Entries are due in to the Intramural office by Thursday at 5 p.m.

| 18. Florida (2-1) | 5 |
| 19. Louisiana State (2-1) | 4 |
| 20. Wisconsin (4-0) | 3 |

Note: By agreement with the American Football Coaches Association, teams on probation by the NCAA are ineligible for Top 20 and National Championship consideration by the UPI Board of Coaches. Those teams currently on probation for 1977 are: Kentucky, Michigan State, Redlands (Calif.), Western State (Colo.).

Bing arrives; C's prepare

By CURT P. KOHLBERG
Collegian Staff

Last week Red Auerbach of the Celtics signed Dave Bing, a seven year All Star, after Bing had announced his retirement because of a coaching change in the Washington Bullet organization.

Bing, who in his prime was one of the quickest, smoothest shooting guards in the N.B.A., joined the Celtics on Tuesday. He cited the reason for his retirement as "Dick Motta was hired and K.C. Jones was fired, and that was the problem in a nutshell. It was my decision not to return to Washington. I informed (general manager) Bob Ferry that I had no intention of going back there."

As a guard for the Syracuse Orangemen, he averaged 28.4 points a game in a three year varisty career which saw him named to the All-American first team in both 1965 and 1966. He re-wrote the Orange record book and still holds the Syracuse scoring and assist records for guards.

After an illustrious career with the Detroit Pistons in which he was named to the N.B.A. All-Star team six times, Bing joined the Capital Bullets in 1975 and played as a third guard behind Tom Henderson and Phil Chenier.

He suffered a detached retina during the 1972 season that required surgery, and his playing time and scoring average have been on the downswing since then, when he was still one of the premier guards in the league.

Bing will join starters Jo Jo White and Charlie Scott in the Celtic backcourt, and with the recent signing of forward-guard John Havlicek to a new, one year contract, the green's playmakers' look older and more experienced than ever.

Cedric "Cornbread" Maxwell and Norm Cook are promising prospects to rebuild what used to be the Celtics strength, the forward line.

Curtis Rowe will be back for another year but holdout Sidney Wicks might find himself with another team. Dave Cowens is happy again, and the Celts will try to put the Doctah and Co. in the emergency ward, and regain the Atlantic Division crown.

Sox '77: What they were

The last of the ninth inning Saturday afternoon at Fenway Park was a tribute to the '77 version of the Red Sox in itself. The Sox showed us that there was still a spark of the '75 version that took the "Big Red Machine" to seven games in the World Series.

As well as the Yankees played since the All-Star break, the Sox did not roll over and play dead, They never once gave us a sign that they were abandoning the fight. Don't label them "bums" or "talentless, money hungry losers" just because they won't be hoisting the American League pennant above Fenway Park next year. They gave it their best shot.

I think few people realize how much the injury to Dwight Evans affected the Sox. Evans was off to his most productive season when he tore up his knee which put him in hibernation for the rest of the season. Perhaps what the Sox missed most of all was Evans' play in right field and his strong arm. I feel that Evans' presence in the lineup could have made the difference between first and second place.

One player who comes to mind when discussing big plays is Bernie Carbo. Saturday Carbo came through with heroics again with his one out, two-run homer in the last of the ninth to bring the Sox within one run of the Orioles. The thing that made the homer even more incredible was the fact that everyone in the ballpark was expecting him to hit it.

One popular misconception about the 1977 version of the Red Sox is the constant chatter about the Sox home run power. Granted, they are one of the most powerful Red Sox teams to come along in several years, but what most people forget is the effect of Friendly Fenway on the home run statistics.

One only has to look at these statistics to see what I mean. One statistic, in particular, stands out. That is home runs hit on the road. Looking at this you will find that the Sox are only slightly ahead of the Yankees in home runs hit on the road. The total difference is determined by the fact that the Sox play 81 games in a telephone booth and the Yanks play 81 games in an airport. Don't have a coronary, I am not saying that the Sox are a non-powerful team, they are just not the barrage that most sportswriters crack them up to be.

It doesn't take much imagination to figure out that the Yanks would have a far greater amount of homers if they played their home games in Fenway. Conversely, if the Sox had to play in the Stadium 81 times a year their home run output would probably approach mediocrity. In Fenway Park the ordinary fly ball becomes instant heroics, a la the six balls the Baltimore Orioles clouted out Saturday afternoon.

But don't condemn the Sox because they were unable to take the American League East flag. Don't throw darts at your '77 Sox team picture in hopes of revenging the culprits. But look at the Sox season as a successful one. I mean, they kept you interested in baseball while the foliage was beginning to change color. They kept you in front of the tube when you should have been reading your Philosophy book. But most of all, they gave the Yankees a pennant race they aren't likely to forget for a long, long time.

Spikers prepare for SCSC

By LEO PELOQUIN

Still recovering from a tough, four set loss to Bridgewater State on Friday night at NOPE, coach Dianne Thompson's volleyball squad must match up tonight vs. Southern Connecticut, a perennial volleyball power. Again, it is a home contest and will start right after the J.V.'s from each school tangle at 6 p.m.

Southern Conn., under the direction of second year coach Joan Barbarich, took to the court for the first time this season last weekend at Central Connecticut. They placed third in a tournament involving teams from all over Connecticut and Rhode Island.

They were 10-0 last season and were the third ranked team in the East based on their victory in the consolation game of the Eastern Regionals Tournament. UMass gave them a tough match in the regular season, losing 12-15 and 9-15.

The good news for the spikers is that Southern Conn. lost about nine of their regular players from their 1976 squad. However, Coach Barbarich claims that, although she has a less experienced group, the players on the 1977 squad are more skilled individually than those from last year's undefeated crew.

Thompson plans to go with the same group that came so close on Friday night. She said that the team has been working mainly on backcourt coverage and blocks and that she expects Southern Conn. to be very strong in the hitting department. She also said that she hopes that her squad is able to gain an early lead in the games and hold on to it.

Despite the team's 0-3 record and Southern Conn.'s impressive credentials, she remains confident.

She said, "It's going to be a tough one for us but I think we're in the mood to finally get in the win column."

Fallon player of week; 2 others on star team

UMass quarterback Mike Fallon was named co-Player of the Week on the fourth weekly Eastern College Athletic Conference Division II All-Star team, it was announced yesterday.

Linebacker-kicker Jim Vallis of American International College was the other pick.

Fallon completed 12 of 18 passes for 210 yards and five touchdowns in the Minutemen's 54-13 romp over Youngstown State Saturday at Alumni Stadium. He played just 36 minutes during the rout.

Other UMass players named to the honor roll were tight end Kevin Cummings and middle guard Phil Puopolo.

Cummings had three touchdown receptions in the UMass rout, while Puopolo was in on eight tackles and caused two fumbles.

Fallon was also named co-recipient of offensive player of the week laurels in the Yankee Conference All-Star picks announced yesterday.

Fallon shared the honor with New Hampshire tailback Bill Burnham, who rushed for 114 yards and scored four touchdowns while the Wildcats were routing UConn, 42-7. The four TD runs gave Burnham a career total of 35, which is a New England as well as UNH record.

Rhode Island linebacker Tom Marhefka was named defensive player of the week for his 12 unassisted tackles and two assists in his team's 28-0 win over Maine.

Rookie player of the week honors went to UConn quarterback Maron Clark, who ran for 60 yards and completed eight of 19 passes as his team was beaten by the Huskies. Clark set up UConn's only touchdown of the game with a pass reception early in the action.

Honorable mention: Puopolo, Cliff Pedrow (UMass-HB), Rich Moser (URI-FB).

Netmen vs. Terriers...

The UMass men's tennis team will conclude the fall regular season this afternoon when it meets Boston University on the lower Boyden Courts at 2:30.

The Minutemen will be attempting to raise their record to 2-2, which coach Jay Ogden feels is key going into the Yankee Conference matches this weekend.

"If we are 1-3 going into the seeding meetings, it will be harder to get a good draw for the tournament," said Ogden.

According to Ogden, BU looked "impressive" at the ECAC championships in New Jersey two weeks ago. The Terriers also beat UConn, 6-3. The Minutemen lost to the Huskies, 5-4.

"It should be a pretty good matchup," said Ogden. "BU was not very strong last year, but apparently they've picked up some new, good people."

Ogden will have his number one singles player, Al Green, for the first time this year. Green has only played one doubles match all year (a defeat vs. URI), and his timing may be off, Ogden said.

"It'll be good to have him back," said Ogden. "He needs the work."

Rick Sharton, who has been "playing well and putting out a consistent effort," according to Ogden, will be at second singles. The coach said he has been having trouble with his backhand volleys, but worked on them yesterday in practice and should get them under control.

Playing at number three will be Jim Barnhart, who Ogden said is a little weak after coming off a sickness over the weekend.

Newly elected captain Steve Heyl will be at fourth singles.

"Heyl seems to be peaking," said Ogden. "He played a good match at number three against UVM, and I expect another good match from him. He's been improving immensely."

Freshman Keith Hovland and Dave Nowak will play fifth and sixth singles, respectively.

The doubles combos will have Green and Barnhart at number one, Sharton and Heyl at number two, and the freshman duo of Hovland and Mark Huetteman, undefeated this fall, at third.

Golfers re-take Toski

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team successfully defended its Toski Invitational Tournament title Sunday and yesterday at Hickory Ridge Country Club in Amherst as it shot a 613 to beat 20 other teams.

Trailing Southern Connecticut by four strokes after the first round, the linkmen came back yesterday under windy and cold conditions to shoot a 310 and overtake both SCSC and Salem State, which also led UMass after one round.

Southern (615) ended up second, with Harvard (622) third, Salem (625) fourth, Central Connecticut (627) fifth, Providence (628) sixth, Siena (630) seventh and URI (631) eighth.

"I'm very, very proud of the fellas," said coach Ed Vlach, "They were four shots down after the first day, but they felt they could come back — they never gave up."

Highlight of the tournament was a new course record (67) from the championship tees by Billy Day of SCSC.

Day and Richard Belanger of Salem tied for tournament medalist at 147, with Day winning a one hole playoff to take individual medalist honors.

UMass's brightest point, other than the victory, came when co-captain Jim McDermott scored an Eagle on the 11th hole, which "certainly helped us on our way back," according to Vlach.

Low man for the Minuteman floggers on Sunday was Vic Lahteine, who shot a 74. McDermott and John Lein both shot 76's, while co-captain Flynt Lincoln shot a 77 for the fourth scoring round.

McDermott shot a 75, Lincoln a 77, Jeff Orr a 78 and Lein an 80 as UMass made its comeback yesterday.

"The scores were higher than I anticipated," said Vlach, "but so were everyone's. The weather was wet and sloppy Sunday and windy and cold yesterday, and the scores reflect this.

"Everyone was looking to clean our clock, since we've won this three out of four times, but all my men came through pretty solid."

Of summer and second place

From the Peter Pan bus I could see it as we cruised along the Mass. Turnpike. The lights towering above the park... the shamrock green paint of Fenway's outer exterior... the Citgo sign.

Yet the walls hid nothing. It was as though I had x-ray vision.

I envisioned the field; free of litter, and neatly mowed. Missing were ball players, fans, concessionaires, etc.

The season had ended unofficially three days ago (Saturday).

But it seems like yesterday... the season was opening. The Sox got off on the wrong foot while teams like the Dodgers got off to flying starts.

And those summer games; four first inning homers off of Mr. Hunter led him to an early shower... bleacher fights, the scoreboard's instant replay, torrential downpours followed by a Texas Ranger doubleheader sweep (which ended at 2:30 a.m.), 20 oz. Labatt beers, and almost passing out (from the sun or the beers?).

Fenway Park — a fun place to be.

Well, it's closed now. No more replays, screaming fans, home run innings.

As the world knows, the Orioles and Red Sox executed each other while the Yankees grabbed the pennant.

But let's face it; the Yanks have a better team. Over the past fifty-two games, they went 41-11. That's baseball.

The Yankees can hit, run, and have decent pitching for the most part. Just because their fans have to wear binoculars to see who's at bat doesn't mean a thing. Fenway may be a better park but the Yanks have a better team.

It was an interesting season for the Sox. Winning streaks and losing streaks. But that's baseball.

Excuses will be coming forthwith from the mouths of Sox fans on why, when, how come, and when the Sox failed to climb into first place.

They will vary from the lack of timely hitting, inconsistent pitching, atrocious managing (added with a lack of communication); to Yankee Stadium being too big, not getting the breaks, and the weather.

But the only rational reason the Sox ended up in second (could've just as easily been third) is that the Yankees won more games. That's all.

They don't deserve credit for finishing second because second means nothing in baseball. Second's no better than third or fourth.

Maybe they deserve credit for staying in the race for as long as they did. They could have been out of it months ago like some other supposedly 'major league' teams (Mets, Braves, Expos).

And the fans who hung in rooting for them down to the last out, unlike the ones (myself included) who threw in the towel back in Baltimore a couple of weeks ago, deserve something.

New Englanders can turn now to the Patriots (unless they lose one more game) and soon the Celts and B's.

As Paul Simon's song goes "...there were three men down, and the season lost. And the tarpaulin was rolled, across the winter frost..." or something like that.

Fenway will be closed up.

But if you need something to keep you going through the cold winter nights here in Amherst (they're on the way) just comfort yourself with this thought:

Spring training is only five months away.

Canfora calls for mass action

By DAVE OLMOS
Collegian Staff

Emphasizing that the May 4th Coalition can through "militant mass action have a chance to stop the gym and put a halt to the final criminal cover-up of the murders," Alan Canfora, a leader of the coalition, spoke last night before a sparse but solemn-faced audience at the Campus Center.

Canfora came to UMass as part of an east coast tour of campuses sponsored by the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

"We have not lost, we plan to continue our struggle," he said. Canfora, who was shot in the Kent State incident of May 4, 1970, explained the struggle by putting it into an historical perspective recounting the Vietnam War and the events which led up to the shootings.

He explained how the board of trustees at Kent State changed their plans to build the gym on land which they specifically purchased and made plans in 1973 to move the gym to the shooting site without informing the public until November 1976.

He also told of how the board of trustees refused to show plans of the gym, rename four buildings after the dead students or close the school on May 4. Canfora called these actions "all part of the cover-up of the lessons of the struggles of the 60's and the truth about the murders".

The May 4th Coalition would still like to see some lawful action taken against Gov. Rhodes of Ohio and the guardsmen who did the shooting, Canfora said.

He also explained the problems of some of those who were injured during the incident but have received no compensation from the state for the medical costs. "I don't care if any money is given, just that they get the criminals in court," he said.

Over the years, Canfora said he has given up hope on the "crooked judicial system in this country." He told how he sat listening to court testimony by the National Guard such as "Students throwing tons of rocks and golfballs with nails, apples with razorblades, and bags of waste products."

Some guardsmen, he said, testified they were hit by 50 to 100 rocks and that the rocks darkened the sky. All this testimony, Canfora said, was lies, because he was there and he saw none of it.

About the shooting by the guardsmen Canfora said he feels either a specific order was given the guardsmen to fire or that the members of Troop G, which fired made the decision by themselves. He explained how all the guardsmen but 12 went up the hill above the parking lot and how those 12 picked out targets, turned and started to fire on the students.

Those targets were the students who were most vocal and active in the demonstration. Canfora told how he was hit in the wrist by one of the guardsmen's high-powered rifles while trying to take cover behind a tree.

Students scrambled to hide behind cars as the guardsmen fired for 13 seconds into the crowd with rifles having a range of two miles. "These 13 seconds seemed like two or three minutes," he said.

During the last part of Canfora's prepared speech he explained how he feels the need for some sort of total change in the American system of government. He said a socialist system is the solution.

The second featured speaker was Cliff Cornfield, a national member of the RSB who spoke about the goals of the organization and the formation of a "Young Communist League" at the RSB national convention to be held at Kent State Oct. 22-24.

Cornfield said, "Kent State has raised many fundamental questions about this society." He said he feels the goals of the communist organization would initially face the tasks of righting wrongs such as the gym at Kent State and the Bakke decision, with the long range goals being socialism and revolution.

During the question and answer period following the speeches, a question was asked concerning the combining of the Kent State issue with political opinions such as socialism. Canfora explained he feels incidents such as Kent State happen because of problems rooted in the capitalist system of government such as the rich people controlling the decisions of government.

Cornfield spoke on the question and said he also felt Kent State is a product of the capitalist system but emphasized one doesn't have to be a communist to demonstrate at Kent State.

Canfora expressed a lot of hope for the upcoming demonstration at Kent State. A survey taken recently at Kent State showed 70 per cent of the students as opposing construction of the gym. Canfora expects a larger turnout of Kent State students this time because they were scared off and told to go home for the weekend by the administration during a September demonstration.

Even some of the dormitories were put under a 24-hour lock-up keeping students from entering or leaving during the demonstration.

Trustees to decide future of Golino

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass Board of Trustees today may decide whether or not 64-year-old Carlo L. Golino will remain as chancellor of the UMass-Boston campus.

Although the trustees last month rescinded a six-month old mandatory retirement age for University administrators at 65, there appears to be a feeling among the Boston campus community that Golino should step down, a confirmed source said.

Golino last night declined to comment when contacted by the Collegian.

Amherst campus Student Government Association co-President and Student Trustee Marion L. Batiste yesterday said "some people think he (Golino) is not doing his job properly.

"There will be heavy discussion which will revolve around whether he should leave," Batiste said, adding the trustees may not decide what to do with Golino today.

The trustees last June lowered the mandatory retirement age for administrators from 70 to 65, but rescinded the policy at last month's meeting and decided to deal with Golino's status today.

Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night said the six month old University retirement policy was rescinded last month by the trustees because they felt it was inconsistent with the national trend to use people's productivity to its fullest extent.

The June vote lowering the age to 65 "should not have been tied so closely to Chancellor Golino."

Bromery also said he could not comment about the age situation because he said he felt he had nothing to do with the matter.

Batiste also said she will question the one million dollar renovation plans at the University building on Arlington St., Boston, to accommodate the president and other University administrators presently at One Washington Mall.

"Personally, I think this (one million dollars) is too much money to spend for renovations," Batiste said.

The trustees last month decided to move the president's office to 100 Arlington St., after the state legislature this summer refused to allocate money for renewing the least at One Washington Mall in the present University annual budget.

The five year lease expires this month. The University paid $143,000 annually to rent One Washington Mall.

The trustees are also expected to discuss policies at the Worcester University hospital and name five people for honorary degrees for the 1978 commencement. Among those being considered for honorary degrees are television news broadcaster Barbara Walters, actress Bette Davis, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations Andrew Young and the author of Roots, Alex Haley.

You are getting sleepy...

By B.K. NELSON
Collegian Staff

"Hypnosis is not sleep, and it's not a state of unconsciousness. It is a state in which a person is very deeply relaxed, a state in which he is not actively thinking about anything in particular. It's a state where his conscious mind is off on a cloud, so to speak, and his sub-conscious mind is there acting as a receiver, receiving all information, all impressions, all stimuli from a source, and in this case the source is a guide or a hypnotist. I prefer to call myself a guide."

— Hypnotist Ken Morse

Morse, a certified professional hypnotist from Holyoke, demonstrates hypnosis in this manner in a series of sessions this semester in the Campus Center. He has practiced hypnosis for 13 years. He received his master's degree in education here at UMass, where he also received his bachelor's in psychology. He is presently pursuing the field of educational psychology through hypnosis.

The hypnotist, or "guide", outlines his process of hypnosis to about 30 people seated in a meeting room during a weekly session. The group focuses its attention on a blue disk affixed to a wall as he speaks. Morse then asked the people to close their eyes. He turns on a tape deck playing a steady, metronome-like beat, and resumes speaking.

".... At times you will hear me use the words permit, allow, and let as I speak to you. You must allow me to help you relax; you must try not to help me. Listen to my voice, and think of the muscle groups you will be relaxing... permit yourself to relax, deeper and deeper, down and down...."

Before the 30 minute demonstration of hypnosis through "progressive relaxation" ends. Morse has induced a very deep state of relaxation into his participants. He also asked them to picture a goal they would like to pursue, and "let it turn about" in their minds. "Believe it will come true, and it will come true," encourages Morse.

Morse will begin teaching a 10-session non-credit course on learning through hypnosis and self-hypnosis tonight and tomorrow nigt at 7 and 8:30 in the Campus Center 805 and 809. Enrollment is still open.

The course is primarily designed to increase learning abilities in areas as reading, concentration, and listening comprehension. However, once self-hypnosis is mastered (through a three-step-practice procedure), one can direct one's self toward any realistic goal, from better athletic performance to breaking habits according to Morse. He says "Your particular goal is your only limit" with self-hypnosis.

Hypnosis unleashes abilities through what Morse refers to as "an implanting of suggestions, which stick via reinforcement." Reinforcement following the ten-week course takes the form of three daily five-minute practice sessions in self-hypnosis. Morse points out there is "absolutely no danger" to self-hypnosis, stressing "You are always in control, you are completely capable of awaking yourself at any time."

Icebergs could be help for dry Arabia

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Icebergs equipped with sophisticated versions of Mississippi River boat paddlewheels may soon be the manner in which the parched Arabian peninsula gets its supply of water.

Arabia's Prince Mohamed Al Faisal yesterday proposed in a paper to the First International Conference on Iceberg Utilization the installation of paddlewheels with huge arms that would propel 100-million-ton icebergs from the Antarctic continent to the Arabian peninsula or any arid nation.

His plan calls for the paddle "arms" to be attached to both sides of an iceberg, with powerplants situated on its top.

UMass professor of geology Joseph H. Hartshorn said last night in a telephone interview the idea "has been suggested by very serious scientists," and "looks feasible," although the exact method is obscure.

Hartshorn explained that the icebergs of Antartica are large, flat pieces of floating ice shelf, and are tabular, which would be easier to transport. He suggested that if a plastic sheet was placed over the icebergs, the main problem encountered would be that of getting them into the Red Sea because of its shallowness.

Faisal's proposal contrasts with more traditional plans for large-scale iceberg transport and use, most of which have involved conventional tugboats or even nuclear powered "supertugs".

Faisal said that by equipping both sides of the iceberg with paddlewheels rather than placing the propulsion system at the rear, the ice mass could be easily navigated.

He said paddlewheel propulsion would begin with the iceberg being towed by conventional tugboats from its location to an area that provides better preparation conditions. Then the propulsion "arms" would be attached to cables surrounding the iceberg and placed below the surface of the water to provide maximum thrust.

Hartshorn said the idea has been studied by Code Regions Research Engineering Laboratory in Hanover, N.H., and that it isn't all that far-fetched. "We were going to make aircraft carriers out of ice in World War II."

Matlack asks SWA for teaching assistant money

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

James Matlack, master-director of Southwest, last night asked the Southwest Assembly (SWA) to allocate $3,600 for the salary of a new teaching assistant who would help train resident assistants in Southwest.

The assembly tabled the motion until next Tuesday to provide time for assembly members to speak with constituents and consider the motion.

The SWA is operating under a tight budget this year due to an $11,000 cut during the summer; a main consideration for the assembly, according to Gregory Maynard, SWA co-treasurer.

Maynard said he was not in favor of Matlack's proposal because the $3,600 could be better spent on other Southwest activities.

Matlack, who was introduced to the assembly for the first time last night, said there are currently 190 resident assistants in Southwest that would be enrolled in a counselor training program should the motion go through. The new teaching assistant would work with Winifred Noel, assistant area director of Southwest, who is in charge of staff development.

Matlack said he would like to meet with assembly members regularly to establish strong working relations.

Police Beat

Meal tickets stolen

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

Meal ticket books are being eaten up all over campus, according to campus police.

Last week campus police reported three separate incidents involving meal ticket book thefts, two of which were taken out of dormitory rooms.

A robbery involving $500 worth of meal tickets, travelers checks, stamps and a watch was reported Sept. 30 by owners Tom Warnick and Paul Queeney of 305 D Cashin. Two Springfield men, Tim D. Le Clair of 64 Timothy Circle, and Stephen M. Ethier of 48 Clydsdale Lane, were charged with the theft.

In another incident, meal tickets valued at $312 disappeared Sept. 30 during a floor party, according to owner Phillip Holland, 1602 John Adams. Holland said he left the room during the party and later discovered his meal tickets were gone.

Hampshire Dining Commons was the scene of another meal ticket rip-off valued at $100, campus police reported.

In other news, a $200 Underwood typewriter was stolen from the University Power Plant sometime between Sept. 17 and Oct. 3, campus police said.

CC Hotel residents to seek negotiations

By RUTH McGORTY
Collegian Staff

About 25 students who had to live in the Campus Center Hotel at the beginning of the semester met last night with staff members Marie Gutierrez and Jim Starr from the Legal Services Office (LSO) and after discussing their grievances drew up points of negotiation to be presented to the administration.

They are as follows:

1. That rent rebates appropriate to the amount of time and inconvenience we experienced be given.
2. That students who are no longer able to continue trying to cope with the problem be allowed to leave the University for the remainder of the semester and receive refunds, excluding food costs.
3. That if any students in the future have to accept temporary or otherwise inconvenience on-campus housing for reasons within the control of the University, they shall be given refunds from their housing bill at a rate of [negotiable] per day that they are inconvenienced for the first three days and [negotiable] per day for every day thereafter.
4. That students who wish to remain in the C.C. Hotel be allowed to do so and that others who were in the hotel but have moved, be allowed to move back if there is good reason for doing so, such as: roommates who smoke to the detriment of a student's health; having roommates who are understandably hostile because of being disrupted this late in the semester; being the only freshperson among seniors in a suite; having roommates with incompatible lifestyles.
5. That students who had to live in the hotel be given first priority for any open room assignments next semester.
6. That any students who had to live in the C.C. Hotel for more than three days be allowed to move off-campus next semester if they choose to do so.

Answer to your questions: The Ombudsman

By DARLENE LORKIEWICZ
Collegian Staff

A question frequently asked of the people in room 821 of the Campus Center is "What is an Ombudsman and what does he do?"

The job of Educational Policy Studies professor and University Ombudsman Robert R. Wellman is to "assist any petitioner in the procurement of a just settlement of a grievance."

The idea of the Ombudsman was born in Sweden in an effort to aid anyone who held a reasonable grievance against the government and had access to no other avenues of appeal. It was officially established there in 1809 and has since spread internationally to areas including corporations and university campuses.

UMass adopted the concept of 1970 when Prof. Ellsworth Barnard was appointed to the office.

The Ombudsman is independent of administrative and student control and has no decision making powers. According to Wellman, the whole idea of the Ombudsman is to handle grievances "objectively and neutrally."

The office exists to serve any member of the university community, including students, faculty and staff. It handles problems ranging from grades, credits and waivers to housing, towing and personnel actions.

The Ombudsman, who has access to people and information, can help when conventional avenues of appeal have been exhausted or reach a dead end.

According to Phylis Foster, assistant Ombudsman, the office handles from 500 to 600 documented cases per year. This number does not include the numerous unrecorded requests for information and help.

The office caseload is roughly 90 per cent students, five per cent faculty, three per cent staff, and two per cent people off the street.

According to Wellman, the Ombudsman is a tenured faculty member and is allotted release time from teaching duties to serve. The Ombudsman serves a two-year-term and may be reappointed for a second two-year term.

The candidate is chosen by a selection committee consisting of members appointed by the presidents of the Faculty Senate, the Undergraduate Student Senate and the Graduate Student Senate, and is appointed by the University chancellor and president. Removal from office requires requires a two-thirds vote of each senate, meeting separately.

Approximately 100 institutions of higher education in the United States have established Ombudsman offices. The UMass Ombudsman's Office is relatively unique, said Wellman, because it deals with the entire University community, while many of those established deal only with students' problems.

New elections to be held

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The Government Affairs Committee met Monday and chose to hold new elections today and tomorrow from 4 to 8 p.m. in the 12 dormitories where voting irregularities in last week's elections occurred. Board of Governors (BOG) elections were tentatively scheduled for next Monday and Tuesday from 12 to 6 p.m. in the dining commons.

Challenges had to be submitted in writing and only two were turned in. Challenges from Patterson House and the Board of Governors were accepted.

The Patterson challenge was based on returns rather than voter irregularities. Steve Ross won the election with 120 votes. Stuart Abrams tied Luann Johnson with 51 votes. David DeManche received 49 votes, and Barry Feldman, who had withdrawn one week earlier, received 19 votes.

DeManche protested since Feldman's votes could have put him into the run-off with the other two candidates.

The BOG elections were repeated due to missing BOG ballots at the voting tables or that some BOG ballots were not delivered until the second day of voting.

BOG elections will be held at Franklin dining commons for Orchard Hill and Central residents, Worcester for Northeast and Sylvan residents, and Southwest will be split into two precincts, with elections held at Berkshire and Hampshire. These locations are pending dining commons approval.

Sirica reduces Watergate terms

Judge John Sirica. (UPI)

WASHINGTON [AP] — U.S. District Judge John S. Sirica ended his long involvement in the Watergate case yesterday by drastically reducing the sentences of the biggest fish netted in the scandal.

He reduced the two and one-half year to eight-year sentences of John N. Mitchell, H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman to a period of "not less than one nor more than four years."

Ehrlichman, who went to prison without waiting for the outcome of his appeals, thus becomes eligible for parole from his Watergate cover-up conviction after Oct. 28.

He still is under a 20-month to five-year sentence for his conviction in the so-called Watergate plumbers case but it was expected the judge in that case would reduce the time to conform with that handed out by Sirica. For Haldeman the magic date is June 21 next year and for Mitchell, June 22.

Sirica made his decision after hearing tape recorded requests for leniency by the three men, and eloquent pleas by their lawyers.

Sirica was chief judge of the U.S. District court in the District of Columbia when the seven Watergate burglars were indicted on Sept. 15, 1972. He assigned himself to hear their trial and that began an involvement that ended only yesterday.

"I'm glad it's the last major decision I'll have to render in this case," he told a reporter before entering court. "It's a long, difficult case, in many respects a sad case. I'm glad to see the end of the tunnel."

There are no more Watergate prosecutions pending and it is expected that Sirica will soon voluntarily take the title of senior judge, which will free him from day-to-day courtroom responsibilities. He is 73.

Mitchell, Haldeman and Erhlichman were convicted of conspiring to cover up White House involvement in the Watergate scandal and of lying about it afterward. They found their conviction and sentences up to the Supreme Court without success and there were no judicial remedies remaining other than Sirica's action.

Ehrlichman, 52, formerly domestic counselor to Richard Nixon when he was president, has been in the federal prison camp at Safford, Ariz., since last Oct. 28. Mitchell, 64, who was Nixon's attorney general, went into prison at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama on June 22 and Haldeman, the Nixon chief of staff, entered the prison facility at Lompoc, Calif., the day before.

If Sirica had failed to reduce their sentences their only other recourse would have been intervention by President Carter.

More concern for Third World corridors

I thought when a person wrote an article in a newspaper, the information gathered was to be based on actual fact and-or personal experience? If so maybe someone should learn the rules of writing a newspaper article. I always learned to write what you know and not what you heard from Johnny's friend's cousin's sister's boyfriend.

I'm referring to the article that was written in Friday, September 23, 1977 Collegian, Black Affairs section by Terrell Evans, entitled "Third World corridors detrimental," I would like to know, have you ever actually lived on a third world corridor? I don't think so, if you had you would not have written this article.

In the article you say "There is no set up for tutors or any other academic avenues." I beg your pardon, come again? I see you don't come up to Orchard Hill very much if you did you would know that there is a third world cultural center located on the first floor in Emily Dickinson and is open from 7-11 for anyone, not only third world students but for anyone who wishes to study. It has been in operation for the past three weeks and has three coordinators, not only that but gives workstudy students a chance to work there for workstudy. On Sundays the facilities are used for OHAG (Orchard Hill Area Government) meetings. Also available to students from the center are lecture notes, a library and a typewriter that has Spanish keys (N N). Tutors are available thru the center for Spanish, zoology and other subjects.

You say in the article students are prevented from having to "deal with non-third world students" as long as we are on that subject why don't we talk about CCEBS and the Afro-Am dept.? Are they using an old dorm for their offices because they don't want to deal with non-third world people also? NO. The reason CCEBS doesn't get offices in Whitmore with everyone else is for the same reason the Afro-Am dept. doesn't emerge with the rhetoric, history, and art departments, because when you have unity you have strength and they don't want to lose it for when you have strength you have POWER. You feel there is no longer a need for such unity, for such strength, for such power. I strongly disagree there is as much need now as in the 60's, only difference between them and now is the 6 has turned to a 7 and that's about it.

You write "In order for students to live in this type of setting they must have a certain degree of discipline about themselves." Well this is as true for people on third world corridors as it is for anyone if a person doesn't discipline themself then they might as well not go to school. What's the use of coming to college if there is no self discipline?

Finally you say the primary reason for the corridor is social, that "the more socializing a student does, means less studying he or she will do." Is that not true for any dorm, or any floor the more a person socializes the less studying, but who's to say what too much socializing is? How do you know that someone isn't studying? What gives you the right to assume? You go on to say "With the right kind of people, the corridors can be noisy and distractive." What do you mean by that statement it has me puzzled. I'm sure you have never been on one of these corridors before if you had you would know that our floor is quieter than most of the other floors that are all non-third world. And then most other dorms I have visited this semester.

I hope the next time you choose to write an article you make sure you have your facts straight, and they are facts and not someone told me that ... because that's not going to do.

Sincerely,
Wilma Eileen Tynes

High Notes...

'HIGH NOTES' is another 'first' for Black Affairs. It is a column that has been established in The Black Affairs section of the Daily Collegian. Mario Barros is Black Affairs' literary critic. Look for his column to appear every Wednesday in Black Affairs.

Yes, Richard Pryor does have a TV show, and yes, I was one of the people who thought it would never come to pass. When you listen to his recordings, you don't get the feeling that he's family viewing time material. Not necessarily because of the vulgarity because I feel that vulgarity is the furthest thing from the essence of creativity (yes, in Mr. Pryor's case too). I think the message that the man delivers has a little to do with it too. The vulgarity just adds a little more fire to his already biting comments about life, sex, death, society and yes, white folks.

In softening things up for the tube, Pryor hasn't copped out, so to speak, on us by going down to a more "acceptable" type of black humor. Instead of protraying a waiter who can't get an order of steak and baked potato right, he plays a member of an expedition of scientists studying the Egyptian pyramids who's locked in a tomb upon finding evidence that it was Black people who discovered music, medicine, art, etc. To some people, it's a strong thesis, but some people aren't really ready to deal with that and would have locked him in the tomb too! Yet in essence, many stations last week "locked him in the tomb" by removing him from his "Family viewing" time slot.

Admittedly, Pryor may not be long for the television world, but I advise you to watch if you can. The man in his complexity and controversy does have a lot to offer. As usual with his material, one can laugh or one can learn — hopefully (and again, usually) one can do both.

Before I go, let me tell you that Pleasure (Fantasy recording artists) are coming to our fair campus and they are definitely worth the price of admission. I'll have a little more to say about them next week. I'll end with a congratulations and best wishes Nick Caruso, he knows why and those of you who don't should find out. I'll see ya' next week, 'til then, try to be happy.

— Mario

New Civil Rights Movement, more jobs

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Asst. Editor

The Chairman of the congressional Black Caucus, Rep. Parren Michell (D) of Maryland, is signaling the move towards full employment for all Blacks and poor persons willing to work. The civil rights movement for the last twenty years has centered its energy on equality in education. Now Black leaders are pushing for more jobs.

Corretta Scott King, the latest delegate to the United Nations, now says "full employment is the No. 1 issue." She made this announcement following an announcement to join Andrew Young as part of this nation's official UN delegation.

The Humphrey-Hawkins bill mandates that the government reduce unemployment to 3 per cent among adult Americans within four years. Blacks have been pressuring congress to pass this bill.

August report indicates that Black joblessness peaked 14.5 per cent, equaling the post WWII high. Unemployment among Black teenagers hit over 40 per cent.

Black leaders have been pressuring Carter to live up to his promises for Black employment. Carter was almost forced to meet with Black leaders and spell out his plans. Carter did say that "currently, 35,000 jobs a week are being added in urban centers, where many low income Blacks live."

Mr. Mitchel, along with Senator Shirley Chisom and other caucus members has called for a nationwide series of demonstrations for jobs, to culminate in a march on Washington in the Spring.

As Black people, or just concerned people, we have to watch the future of this movement and our leaders, and participate in this effort to unify our people.

Craemen Gethers: Is his case still alive?

By EARL BROWN
Black Affairs Staff

Two weeks after the appearance of Craeman Gethers, at the UMass campus, one has to wonder if his case is still alive. This question is relevant when we consider that Gethers was a student at UMass trying to receive an education. He was stolen from this community for supposedly participating in the August 7, 1974 robbery of a McDonald restaurant. He waits, after twenty-six months spent in Norfolk State Prison for another chance to appeal his case before the Superior Court.

The case of Gethers is one of old hat. Where white witnesses (three), identified two Black males after police lured their identification. The claim Craeman was a participant because they remember his facial features, even though the robber that night wore sunglasses, had a red belt across his hairline, and pointed a shotgun at their faces.

This is odd that the witnesses could remember the robber three weeks later, with limited view of the candidates. Secondly, the state added another weakness, the police showing of a single picture of Gether. The normal procedure is for witnesses to view a spread of different pictures.

The Court has refused to acknowledge two positive polygraph test, would verify Gethers claim that he did not participate in the robbery. Finally, Craeman had numerous witnesses to verify his whereabouts. Yet the legal representatives have only brought fourth one witness to state where Gethers was that night. All these events have allowed a free man to spend twenty-six months in jail, while allowing less than thirty hours on the outside for three furloughs. I ask, when will this injustice be rectified?

From the view of his co-defendant, I have to say I am disappointed that in twenty-six months Gethers has not moved from Norfolk. He is no closer toward reversing this injustice on him. What does it take to tell people he needs support? Support to write letters to get him a parole, pardon or on release programs, while he fights to clear his record. If people are serious about Gethers freedom, support him in his struggles. This could be a letter, or come to the Craeman Gethers Defense Committee, October 13th at 4 p.m. on the second floor of New Africa House.

Malcolm X Center sponsors tournaments

The Malcolm-X Center is sponsoring Table Tennis and Pool tournaments. Trophies will be awarded to respective winners. Advanced class winners will receive larger trophies. Get involved in the tournament. We are encouraging men and women. There will be men and women divisions in each event. Participate, socialize, and enjoy.

Each tournament, pool and table tennis will have two levels of expertise, novice and advanced.

Deadline for applications is October 14. Entry fee is 50 cents to be paid on or before your first game.

Carter meets with both Israeli and Egyptian leaders

NEW YORK: President Carter meets with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dyan in the U.N. Plaza Hotel yesterday. During their meeting, Carter, assuming a direct role in Mid-east negotiations, told the Foreign Minister, "We've made some very good programs." (UPI)

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — President Carter assumed a direct role in the Middle East negotiations yesterday appealing for "good faith negotiations" on both sides and reaffirming the U.S. commitment to Israel's security.

He later held separate private meetings with the Israeli and Egyptian foreign ministers.

In his address to the General Assembly, Carter attempted to define the American Mideast role and to reassure the Israelis that a joint Soviet-American call to convene a Geneva conference was not an attempt to impose a settlement.

"We do not intend to impose from the outside a settlement on the nations of the Middle East," he said.

But, he warned, "of all the regional conflicts in the world, none holds more menace than the Middle East. War there has carried the world to the edge of nuclear confrontation... So true peace — peace embodied in binding treaties — is essential. It will be in the interest of the Israelis and the Arabs. It is in the interest of the American people."

A senior White House official, later expanding on Carter's speech, repeated that the United States commitment to Israel "remains unshakeable."

Carter's speech tried to answer some of the criticisms raised by the Israelis to the joint U.S.-Soviet statement.

One was that the statement does not mention U.N. Security Council resolution 242, which recognizes the right of Israel to exist within secure borders and treats the Palestinian question as a refugee problem and which has been the basis for the Geneva conference.

"The United Nations Security Council has provided the basis for peace in Resolutions 242 and 338, but negotiation in good faith by all parties is needed to give substance to peace," Carter said.

Another criticism said the statement readmits the Soviets to the Middle East, something that the United States and Israel have worked to prevent in the past.

"We are staying in close contact with the Soviet Union, with whom we share responsibility for reconvening the Geneva conference."

And a third criticism pointed to the joint statement's reference to "legitimate rights" and said it gives the Palestinians something that should be negotiated in the final conference.

Mass Senate turns down strict anti abortion bill

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate yesterday voted down a strict abortion ban, opting instead for a bill that would permit state funded abortions in cases of rape, incest or where the health of the mother is endangered.

A move to substitute the language of the House-passed Doyle-Flynn amendment was defeated by a 20-18 vote of the Senate. The Senate must still vote to accept the more liberal language adopted by the Senate Ways and Means committee.

That vote is likely to come Wednesday when the Senate returns to work on a $33.4 million supplementary state budget. The budget includes a pay raise for state employes and an amendment banning the use of state money for elective welfare abortions.

Senate President Kevin Harrington, D-Salem, adjourned the session quickly Tuesday after the language change was voted down.

The vote followed more than an hour of wrangling in the Senate President's office over parliamentary maneuvers involving the abortion amendment.

Those opposed to the Doyle-Flynn bill picked up three more Senate votes Tuesday. Sen. John F. Parker, R-Taunton; Sen. Denis L. McKenna, D-Somerville, and Sen. B. Joseph Tully, D-Dracut, all voted with previous opponents of the abortion bill.

Tully and McKenna, both members of Ways and Means, voted for the language recommended by the committee.

Parker, explaining his vote, said, "I believe firmly these are two very important issues that should not be tied together. These people state employes have waited a long, long time for their pay raise... It is dead wrong to tie these issues on there."

Dole claims U.S. right to intervene in Panama

WASHINGTON [AP] — A Panamanian negotiator said U.S. officials should stop saying the new Panama Canal treaty gives the United States the right to "intervene" in Panama's affairs, according to a confidential diplomatic cable released yesterday by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Dole claimed the cable proves Panama does not accept the United States' right to send military forces into the Canal Zone to defend the canal's neutrality.

But the cable did not specifically address the military question.

The cable, received by the State Department Thursday from the U.S. embassy in Panama, summarizes a conversation between an American political counselor and Panamanian negotiator Carlos Lopez Guevara.

The cable said, "Any assertion which seems to claim a right to intervene in Panama's domestic affairs is almost sure to be challenged here."

The cable says Lopez was "disturbed over some of the testimony before the committee."

The cable, signed "Gonzalez," said: "He said that Article 4 means nothing more than what it says. 'Intervention is simply forbidden by international law,'' he said. 'Panama cannot agree to the right of the U.S. to intervene.' He urged that U.S. officials stop using the term 'intervention' in describing its rights under the treaty."

Panamanians protest U.S. intervention

PANAMA CITY, Panama [UPI] — Scores of leftwing university students demonstrating against the new Panama Canal treaties yesterday stoned and then set fire to U.S. Ambassador William Jorden's car which was parked in front of the University of Panama campus, a U.S. Embassy official said.

American Charge D'Affaires Raymond E. Gonzalez said no one was in the car at the time and there were no injuries in the incident but the vehicle was destroyed.

Ambassador Jorden currently is not in Panama. Gonzalez declined to say where he was.

Gonzalez said he used the car to go to the campus, on the invitation of the university and the Mexican government, to attend the opening of an exhibit of Mexican architecture.

"While I was watching the exhibition, some students started stoning the car. I was told they were from the school of law where there had been a rally — probably an anti-treaty rally — earlier in the day," he said.

Gonzalez estimated that about "50 to 100" demonstrators were involved in the incident.

He said he was driven back to the embassy by university officials who told him he "could pick up the car after the crowds thinned out. Unfortunately they got out of hand and set it on fire."

When firemen arrived to put out the blaze, the demonstrators smashed the firetruck's pumping mechanisms, and the firemen were unable to quench the flames, authorities said.

A government spokesman said no arrests had been made. The university campus is off limits to members of Panama's National Guard.

Gonzalez said the embassy had advised the Panamanian Foreign Ministry of the incident and that "they expressed regret that this was happening."

Leftwing student groups have been a focus of opposition of the new canal treaties, which would grant Panama ownership of the waterway by the year 2000.

Senate rejects 50-46 Carter's energy plan

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate voted yesterday to lift price controls from newly discovered natural gas, rejecting President Carter's proposal for continued regulation of the scarce fuel.

Breaking a 2½-week deadlock, the Senate approved the deregulation proposal by a 50 to 46 vote, then went on to pass the overall natural gas bill by voice vote.

A House-Senate conference committee now must decide the final form the bill will take. The House passed a comprehensive energy bill in August that contained the President's proposal for continued price controls.

In New York, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell quoted President Carter as terming the Senate legislation "unacceptable" and declaring "I will not sign an unfair bill." "It is an injustice to the working people of this country ... " the President said. "I hope and expect that a reasonable bill will emerge from the conference committee and be approved by both houses.

"I look forward to signing legislation that provides adequate production incentives while protecting the interests of American consumers. I will not sign an unfair bill."

Deregulation would increase gas prices, with the cost of immediately deregulated gas rising at a faster rate than that remaining under federal price controls. The Senate bill contains a clause that would require gas pipelines to give homeowners the first chance to buy the cheaper gas still under government price controls.

Under the Senate's deregulation measure, there would be a lid on prices of new gas of about $2.48 per thousand cubic feet for the next two years until controls are removed. The price limits would be removed from newly discovered onshore gas after two years and from offshore gas after five.

Natural gas, which has increased four-fold in price since 1973, is now unregulated if used in the states where it is produced, but controlled under a $1.46 ceiling when shipped in interstate pipelines.

Carter, and the House, want to end this dual market by extending controls to the interstate markets while lifting the price lid to $1.75 for newly discovered gas.

The Senate's action was a major setback to Carter's energy program. But it was expected after three previous trial votes showed deregulation forces had the upper hand. The Senate passed a similar decontrol measure in 1975, but it failed by four votes in the House.

Congress compromises on Tenn. breeder reactor

WASHINGTON [UPI] — House-Senate conferees agreed yesterday on a compromise $80 million authorization for the plutonium-producing Clinch River breeder reactor project in East Tennessee, making major concessions to the Carter administration.

Conferees expressed hopes the action would satisfy President Carter, who opposes the project, and avoid a presidential veto.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said Tuesday's action "certainly ought to be viewed at the White House that we want to cooperate as much as we can."

Agreement came after less than a hour of debate and a rejection by Senate members on a 6-6 tie vote of a $97.8 million figure.

The agreement would prohibit construction or site preparation activity during the 1978 fiscal year.

The Senate-passed version of an authorization bill for the Energy Research and Development Administration included $75 million for the project at Oak Ridge, Tenn., to keep it in a status quo situation for a year. The House voted $150 million for full-scale continuation of the project, including initial construction.

Carter asked Congress to cut the funds to $33 million, just enough to finish design work, then phase out the project.

That proposal last April came as Carter asked world leaders to join the United States in a moratorium against proliferation of plutonium, a vital ingredient in nuclear weapons. International reaction since then has been to continue production.

The $80 million figure was suggested by Sen. Wendell H. Ford, D-Ky., shortly after the slightly higher, $97.8 million substitute of Rep. Walter Flowers, D-Ala., was voted down by the Senate. Despite objections by Rep. Barry Goldwater Jr., R-Calif., the House went along with Ford's figure and the Senate followed suit.

No worry about Legionnairs in Vt.

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — State Health Commissioner Marshall McBean says there is no reason for tourists or parents of Burlington area college students to be worried about an outbreak of Legionnaires' disease in Vermont.

The outbreak has resulted in at least 12 deaths in Vermont since Aug. 1, but McBean said Tuesday there is no evidence the disease is contagious. He said none of the people who have contracted the disease were college students.

Oil tanker makes it through bridge

BOSTON [AP] — the oil tanker Mobil Fuel made it through McArdle Bridge on her second try yesterday, about 12 hours after the ship struck the drawbridge and knocked out direct highway access between East Boston and Chelsea.

The Coast Guard reported no oil was spilled, despite a crack in the forward hull of the 649-foot tanker.

City crews restored service on the drawbridge about 5:15 p.m. yesterday authorities said. Boston Public Works commissioner Joseph Cassaza said the tanker bent a support to the bridge's drawspan but that the hydraulic life system had not been damaged.

Boston's assistant city attorney, Harold Carroll, said the city would seek to recover the cost of repairing the damaged bridge, and was ready to file suit in federal court to seek funds for the repairs.

At a news conference, Cassaza said no estimate had been made on the cost of the repairs. But he said the damages could run as high as $250,000.

Holyoke man identifies killer

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — A Holyoke man told a Hampden County jury yesterday he found Steven Carey hiding in the cellar of a Holyoke home several days after a real estate agent was killed in Springfield.

Roger Beaudoin testified he was standing on a bucket when he found Carey, 29, hiding in a crawl space in the cellar and "he yelled something at me like 'freeze' and shot a gun, and then I flipped off the pail."

Carey is accused of murdering Margaret Rossow, 62, of Longmeadow who was stabbed and strangled in September 1976 while showing a vacant Springfield house.

Police said Carey allegedly fled to Holyoke where he lived in the crawl space of the home for several days eating candy bars, beer and some meat he found in the building.

Ex-senators appeal extortion conviction

BOSTON [AP] — A three-judge federal panel yesterday heard the appeals of two former state senators who contend their conspiracy and extortion convictions violated their right to legislative privilege and immunity.

Lawyers for Ronald C. MacKenzie of Burlington and Joseph J.C. DiCarlo of Revere argued their case for an hour in U.S. Appeals Court before Judges Frank M. Coffin, Bailey Aldrich and Elisha Avery Crary.

Francis DiMento, lawyer for DiCarlo, claimed his client was entitled to the same legislative-privilege as U.S. senators.

"There is no reason to believe state legislators require less protection than federal legislators," he said. "All we're asking is equal treatment with U.S. congressmen."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Edward Lee claimed there is no such privilege for state legislators.

"In addition, this conviction was not based on legislative acts, but on the extortion of $40,000," Lee said.

MacKenzie and his wife, Jan, were present in the courtroom during argument on the appeal, but DiCarlo was not there.

The two former lawmakers were convicted last February of extorting $40,000 from the New York consulting firm of McKee-Berger-Mansueto in 1971. The payments were allegedly made to assure a favorable report on MBM's work by a legislative committee headed by DiCarlo.

The two men were sentenced to one year each in federal prison and $5,000 fines.

MacKenzie resigned his Senate seat. DiCarlo was expelled by a vote of the Senate.

Earle Cooley, MacKenzie's lawyer, argued, "If the convictions are tained by improper admission by DiCarlo's legislative acts, then a new trial is required.

"The government never suggested that DiCarlo acted alone. The whole theory was one of joint action — If DiCarlo's conviction must be reversed, then because of the way the cases was presented fairness requires a new trial be granted to Senator MacKenzie," he added.

Lawyers for the two former senators also contended the government made unfair use of hearsay testimony. The testimony was that of MBM vice president Anthony Mansueto about alleged conversations with Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford. Mansueto testified Kelly told him DiCarlo could solve his problems for $100,000.

"From the very first day the spector of Sen. James Kelly hung over these proceedings," Cooley said.

Kelly was named an unindicted co-conspirator, then later dropped from the case.

Lee countered that Mansueto's testimony about the conversation was admitted only to show his state of mind and how he had been put in fear of the pending legislative probe.

Cooley said later he may also file a motion for a new trial based on possible prejudice in the jury. That appeal would differ from the appeal on legal issues heard Tuesday.

Indira Ghandi released in India

NEW DELHI, India [AP] — A judge freed Indira Gandhi yesterday after 16 hours in police custody and she promptly resumed her political comeback campaign. But the government appealed to a higher court and said it would press for her trial on corruption charges.

Demonstrations erupted in more than a dozen cities as supporters of the 59-year-old former prime minister protested her arrest.

Tear gas fumes penetrated the packed courtroom in Delhi as police battled pro-and-anti Gandhi demonstrators outside.

Mrs. Gandhi dabbed at her eyes with a handkerchief and leaned toward the judge to hear his ruling above the noise of the demonstrators.

Police reported 111 arrests and more than 15 injuries at the Parliament Street courthouse and another violent protest outside the home of Prime Minister Morarji Desai.

Scattered violence and hundred of arrests were reported in other cities.

One of the largest demonstrations was in Calcutta, where a leader of Mrs. Gandhi's Congress party urged 3,000 supporters to launch a campaign of civil disobedience. He later was detained by police.

At Madras, authorities halted a demonstration by taking 1,500 Congress party workers into protective custody.

In an interview after her release, Mrs. Gandhi charged that "hundreds and thousands of people have and are being arrested and are being tortured ... " She did not elaborate. Many thousands were reported jailed during a period of emergency in her own 11-year rule. Asked if she was worried by the sequence of events, she replied: "Fear and Indira Gandhi do not go together."

Magistrate R. Dayal declared that on the basis of evidence presented there "are no grounds for believing that the accusation against Mrs. Gandhi is well founded." He ordered her released with no restrictions on her movements.

A government source said the ruling political leadership had pressed for Mrs. Gandhi's arrest despite warnings from India's Central Bureau of Investigation that charges and evidence were not ready.

In a speech to the United Nations General Assembly in New York, Indian Foreign Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee defended the Desai's government and said its election victory last March "lifted the pall of fear that hung menacingly over our people."

It was an unprecedented appearance in the dock for the woman who ordered the jailing of an estimated 100,000 political foes during the 21 months of emergency rule that capped her 11-year reign as prime minister. Many of those jailed opposition leaders later helped forge the Janata party coalition that defeated Mrs. Gandhi and her Congress party in parliamentary elections seven months ago.

Soviets develop new "killer satellite"

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Defense Secretary Harold Brown, speaking on the 20th anniversary of Russia's triumph in orbiting the first earth satellite, disclosed yesterday the Soviets now have "operational capability" of destroying some U.S. satellites.

Brown also struck a more pessimistic note than President Carter on prospects for an early strategic arms control agreement with the Russians.

His disclosure was the first that Soviet "killer satellite" vehicles, previously described as only partially successful in five tests since last year, are poised for potential use should hostilities break out.

Brown told a news conference that some U.S. satellites are vulnerable.

"That's my judgment — they have an operational capability that could be used against some kinds of satellites," the secretary said when questioned.

Defense officials said later the Soviet system — which maneuvers the killer satellite close to its target and destroys it by use of explosives — was judged effective against some U.S. spy and communications satellites which operate at lower altitudes, but that higher space vehicles are considered safe at present.

The United States has started development of its own space weapon that would home in on Soviet satellites and crash into them to destroy their effectiveness. But Brown described that effort as "preliminary exploration and design" of the technology.

Noting many military uses of space — such as intelligence, early warning and communications — are non-hostile and contribute to deterring war, Brown said, "I would hope we could keep space from becoming an area of active conflict."

Carter has suggested to the Soviets a ban on anti-satellite weapons — a proposal on which they have not acted.

Brown said "significant" progress had been made in the latest round of arms negotiations with the Russians, but added, "we are sufficiently far from agreement that I cannot forecast when it might come or what its nature might be."

He voiced hopeful reductions in weaponry could still be achieved in the next strategic arms limitation talks, but "we may very well have to settle with the Soviets on a more restricted and less far-reaching agreement in SALT II" than the 1,500 launchers for each side proposed by the United States last March.

On Carter's statement Tuesday at the United Nations about use of nuclear weapons, Brown said that in past "I think the U.S. has not faced up to having a policy on this... It does not say that we might not be the first to use nuclear weapons. It says we would not use nuclear weapons without being attacked."

GSUE: now more than ever

By the GSEU EXECUTIVE BOARD

Now in its third year, the Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) welcomes all new and returning graduate students. We recently completed legal hearings with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Board which will determine if the GSEU will be the legal bargaining agent for graduate employees in contract talks with the university. While over 500 graduate employees have signed cards supporting our case, the university administration has disputed it by claiming our work is mainly financial aid and not vital to the functioning of the university. As we confidently await the MLRB's decision, many have asked why a graduate employees union is needed and what a union can do for graduate employees. A brief history of graduate employee cuts underscores the need for a union.

Recent years have shown a drastic act in the number of graduate employee positions at the university

In the spring of 1975, the university attempted to eliminate hundreds of teaching assistant (TA) positions. In the wake of many positions being cut, graduate employees organized and created the GSEU.

Another threat to graduate employee job security occurred last spring when the administration attempted to cut over a hundred graduate employee positions. In response to this threat, hundreds of graduate students met at GSEU meetings and worked with other groups to prevent the cuts. As of the start of the 1977-78 academic year, most of the slated cuts were restored!

However, recent years have shown a drastic cut in the number of graduate employee positions at the university. Between the 1974-75 and 1976-77 academic years, the university has cut 396 teaching and research assistant positions! This disturbing trend illustrates our job insecurity and highlights the need for a union. In addition, a graduate employee union can address the problem of under-paid graduate student labor!

According to the Graduate School Bulletin (1976-1977), TA contracts involve 20 hours of work per week, at a rate of $3600 for the academic year. However, According to the Graduate School Factbook 1976-1977, the average TA-RA receives less than $2600 for the academic year, and for work requiring over 20 hours a week! The GSEU maintains that the university should adhere to its publicly-stated guidelines with the development of higher guidelines for compensation.

Besides striving for job security and compensation commensurate with our work, we are doing many things to promote the interests of graduate students. We have an active grievance procedure, where individual graduate employee grievances are dealt with in an effective and efficient manner. Within the last month, we have held a social hour in the Campus Center and a dance at the almost internationally famous Quonset Hut so that graduate students can meet students outside their individual departments.

In order for the GSEU to be a strong and effective union, we need the active support of all graduate employees. We invite you to our next general meeting which will be on Thursday, October 6 at 4 p.m., in Campus Center 804. We have some openings on our executive board and need help in the areas of publicity, departmental organizing, fund-raising, research, or whatever your heart desires! Join us Thursday so that we can all have a good time. See you then ...

Wicked bummed out

bill sundstrom

It seems as though everyone is writing about "language" these days. One recent editorial discussed the definition of "reverse discrimination". Another one talked about the use of pronouns like "he" and how they affect our attitudes toward women in society.

What I could never figure out is whether our language determines the way in which we think, or if it's the way in which we think determines our language. Before I reached a final decision, I decided to give a couple of friends a call to discuss the matter.

"Hey, Dave, this is Bill".

"What's happening?"

"Well listen, I want to write this article about language and how it affects our attitudes...."

"Oh, wow. Fuckin' intense."

"Really. But what did you think about that editorial the other day?"

"Wicked bummed me out."

"For sure," I agreed. "Could you elaborate on that?"

"I dunno, Bill. I'm kinda mellowing out right now. How 'bout I give you a call tomorrow?"

"For sure, for sure. Take it easy."

My next conversation wasn't going much better. Mary was relating the story of cleaning up her apartment after Saturday night's party.

"Wicked rude," she sighed. "Really grossed me out after having such a good time, y'know?"

"For sure. But about that article..."

"Really. Well, I thought it was kind of off-the-wall."

"For sure. But what would you say if some guy called you a 'babe'?"

"Oh wow. I'd be bummed, wicked pissed."

"Yeah, I see what you mean. Well, listen, I'll catch you later."

"Bye".

By this time I was having doubts about the column. If my friends couldn't articulate their views any better than this, maybe I should quit. Then again, maybe this was the very proof I needed. Ultimately I was totally confused — I couldn't decide if I was really into it or just wicked out of it.

I had to get my head together, so I dropped in on my friend Dan. We both spent the evening smoking controlled substances.

"Man, am I spaced..."

"For sure," I smiled.

"How's your column for this week coming?"

"Bogus — I'm really bummed."

"Hey, listen, man, if you wouldn't get so wicked intense about writing, you could really mellow right into it."

Ultimately I was totally confused — I couldn't decide if I was really into it or just wicked out of it.

"Oh wow," I said, as it suddenly began to come clear. "That's unreal. You mean, if I just get kind of laid back I won't feel so wicked stultified?"

"For sure, for sure. Even if it comes out kind of off the wall, it will be your own trip."

"Hot shit," I cried. "I'll go type it right away."

"For sure, for sure...."

Meet the "press"

By VINCENT BISCEGLIA

One of the many definitions offered in Webster's for the word "press" is "to harass; oppress; trouble." Assuredly, this definition of the word is meant to describe "press" in a different context: however, in the manner in which I wish to use it, that of the country's newspapers and journals, I believe it still applies.

It appears evident to me that this country cannot continue without a spectacular scandal, a political crisis or any story short of sensational. It simply will not sell newspapers!

Since the ending of the Vietnam conflict, a good headline was hard to find. Sure, your "Governor Signs Bill" still appeared but nothing of substance or anomaly surfaced. So, the reporters dug in the sewers of society to retrieve "Watergate", "Son of Sam", and last and least the "Bert Lance Affair". Who and-or what will be next? Has our much feared "Big Brother" finally reared his ugly head in the form of the American free press? Is it, in fact, wrong to assume that the crime Richard M. Nixon committed, that of the coverup, would not have come to pass if his fear and hatred of the press, which is common knowledge, was non-existent?

Is any public official safe? Will the press resume its fanatic for filth in the past of yet another political figure? Surely, Jimmy Carter has sowed some wild peanuts in his day!

It bothers me that world opinion of the moral and ethical character of this country is gutter level at best. To thank for this we have the almighty press. Instead of informing objectively, the press spews its own ideologies and accusations of credible government figures on the fertile minds of the hitherto uninformed public. Assuredly, these accusations are, to a degree, somewhat substantial. However, that is not the point. These cases receive such an abundance of recriminatory and imputative press that the public cannot decide on a stand in an unbiased manner. Thus, we are told the facts instead of being informed objectively.

Until the American public realizes that the newspapers and magazines of this country are only a facet of the overall information structure currently available, they will continue to be manipulated in their opinions of current issues and events. This leads to the conclusion that ours is not a "Free Press" that is vacant of subjection and bias, but rather an opinionated journal that should be read "between the lines" into the true heart of the matter at hand.

Bump, bump, bump

By STEPHEN A. MODENA

I think that there are some undergraduates on this campus who are going to get into a bind in the next year or two. I'm talking about an academic logjam that may stretch UMass into a five — or even six — year degree program.

Some of my acquaintances among undergrads have complained about not being able to satisfy this or that requirement. Well, that's no big deal: there is always a course or two that can't be scheduled because of conflicts.

Suppose, on the other hand, that you had already been bumped out of Rhetoric for your freshman year, bumped out for your sophomore year, and now — three strikes you're out — there is just no room this fall either?

In the case that I am thinking of, the person wised up and got out — straight to a private college in Springfield where he got into that Rhetoric course and two other mandatory courses that also had been put into a holding pattern in the meantime.

Two points to consider: 1) he may have been an isolated case which is statistically insignificant, and 2) wasn't he lucky that his father could afford to pay the higher tuition?

I'm not trying to pull out all plugs and yell "fire!" If you department is fairly nebulous about requirements, as for some interdisciplinary degrees, there's no problem. One need only pick and choose from just about everyone else's curricula.

However, some people have confided to me that they are worried. There are departmental requirements to be met, such as total number of in-department credits to be taken. Due to over-subscription problems, certain courses can't be taken until junior year and even senior year. (I'm not concerning myself with multi-prerequisite, high-level courses.)

But the crunch may come when trying to plan ahead in order to design in a coherent and thoughtful manner, just which courses would compose a worthwhile specialty. In other words, when your prospective employer looks at your record, you don't want him to say: "Whydja take all this junk?" It's toooo late then.

Have you been refused entrance to a course due to "over-subscription?" Did you ask if there were an unusually large number of students signing up that year, or if there are the same, usual number of students without enough courses to be signed up for? Budget cuts and job freezes have to be translated into a reality or two, somewhere.

I noted with interest the very recent faculty controversy over language requirements for CAS. Dean Allen had said, "This (abandonment of exemptions) will increase the number of students enrolled in a foreign language by about 3000 a semester."

Three thousand more per semester sounds like a lot to me. And you had problems getting into Rhetoric! Does the college have the money or staff to implement this? Could it wipe out advanced level foreign language courses in the respective departments? Does this mesh with Puryear's Plan to redistribute some CAS monies?

Do you remember that housing problem a few weeks ago which was somehow related to a record size incoming freshman class? It is entirely possible that this campus is getting top-heavy with students. That's right, I said top-heavy with students relative to prevailing and projected capacity and money. And what are projections worth? The money voted by the legislature is the primary yardstick.

I have not intended to point any fingers of accusation. I am not leading up to a formulated solution which I would like to sell.

Just take a moment and consider your scheduling plans. How many years will it take you to finish a four year program?

Which "white America"?

To the Editor:

Concerning certain statements in Angela Thomas' commentary [9-28] such as, "It is going to hurt, White America," and "White America deciding to hurt along with the rest of her citizens" — Ms. Thomas, which "White America" are you talking about? Is it one which lives in fine, big houses, owns two cars and a camper, goes on a vacation every winter and summer? Maybe this is the image that comes to mind whenever you think, "White America". Then perhaps you need to be reminded about another "White America", that of Appalachia and of urban slums, of white cultural minorities, that of persons from immigrant-laborer and rural-sharecropper backgrounds, that of people working overtime [or extra jobs] just to keep their heads above water, and other people who have become middleclass only recently. These people have traditionally [and still now] faced the "possibility of losing employment" anytime the economy went slack.

The question posed to you, Ms. Thomas, is WHICH whites are going to end up "tasting the bitter pill," as you say? The ones with the real clout and a long background of real privileges and high-level benefit from this racist society? Or will the ones who have already "tasted the bitter pill" be again carrying the brunt of the burden?

To fight and defeat affirmative action would be a very bad mistake, as it is a worse mistake for the more vulnerable, disadvantages and powerless whites to continue to use society's racism, as they had in the past [and at times with brutality], to keep people of color in an even more desperate situation [which only works to their own detriment in the long run]. But to discount all expressions of anxiety by the economically-politically more vulnerable whites as maliciously motivated and racist is also wrong.

What is needed is not dog-fighting, but cooperation.

Joseph Bazan

Language requirement at issue

To the Editor:

The decision over how to determine language proficiency, recently undertaken by the Faculty Senate, took too much for granted in the very concept of having a language requirement at all. There is no doubt that retaining a language requirement justifies many more positions in those departments than would otherwise be necessary to handle those interested in the subject. In other words, packing a few departments in such a way with very respectable talent does not broaden the university's offerings, but rather narrows the total possible courses that might otherwise be offered.

To counter this charge of the university predetermining how the student will spend his-her money [possibly four semesters of language or an entire semester's load, roughly $400.00], one might point out that this requirement adds to the university's national integrity and therefore to the academic "quality" of its graduates. There should, then, be an effort to determine if a certain language is particularly essential to a given major. This may occur, for example, if a large percentage of work in the field has been published in a foreign language and remains, on the whole, untranslated. This would mean a major-dependent [if necessary] rather than a college dependent language requirement.

If taking a specific language does not qualify one as having a better background in his-her major then the question must be asked: why does a foreign language broaden one's world view any more than a good course in history, philosophy, sociology, art, or literature? Each of these areas have received cultural input from the entire world, and one might be equally broadened by its study, though I would not suggest that the university test proficiency or place requirements in any one of these areas.

The university language requirement, in its present form, limits the options the student may avail him-herself to and not necessarily [even in a majority of cases] for the long run benefit of the student. Before the Faculty Senate continues in its quest over how to administer the language requirement, I suggest that a reexamination of its bases be made.

Lost in the SOP show

To the Editor:

I have read a lot lately about the student union in the Collegian. I have one question. I have lived in the dorms for over two years, and I have not once seen an organizer from the Student Organizing Project. My roommate has never seen an organizer. None of the people on my floor or on the floor below have ever seen an organizer.

This is my question: who are the organizers organizing if they don't organize the students? Do they organize themselves? How much have they gotten paid for it?

I may not know much, but I know when I'm being snowed. And I don't like it.

Fred Jennings

Remember the past

To the Editor:

This letter is directed to Stephen Mathieu, and his article "Dedicate gym — a reasonable solution." Mathieu seems to believe that to forget what happened in the past is the best way to enter the future. But I see differently. One doesn't progress in school by forgetting the previous lessons, and so it is in life. We cannot progress towards a more perfect society unless we remember the bitter lessons of the past, and to try to prevent them from happening again. We cannot forget what happened at Gettysberg, lest we fall into the pit of slavery again. We cannot forget Viet Nam lest our leaders take us into another war of conquest that murders our youth. We cannot forget the Civil Rights movement lest decisions like the Bakke Decision set us back in our struggle against discrimination. We cannot forget Kent State, lest we lose our right to protest oppression and injustice to the horror of National Guards' bullets.

That's what we're fighting. Ever since the tragedy at Kent the Administration and the Trustees have been working to rob us of this valuable lesson paid for with students' blood. Soon after the event the Administration put up several small trees to obscure the site. In 1971, they attempted to bury the site under a parking lot, but were stopped by student action. Now in 1977, the Administration is trying again to rob us of our history. They plan, and have begun to bury the lesson of Kent under the concrete and brick of the gym. Well we intend to fight that gym. We intend to keep the lessons of Kent and Jackson State alive and well. We intend to stop and move the gym, and show the people that we do not forget.

Poll shows opinion on public health care

CHICAGO [AP] — A pollster who advises President Carter says there is only one program for which the American public is willing to have its taxes raised — national health care.

Patrick H. Caddell said yesterday that support nationwide for raising taxes for a federal health care program has increased from 46 per cent in 1975 to 51 per cent in 1977. He said only 16 per cent favor the current health care delivery system.

Speaking before a symposium on National Health Care sponsored by Blue Cross and Blue Shield, Caddell said, "Health care is the exception to the rule that the public's perception is that the government is not working well, that it is spending inefficiently."

Caddell, Carter's official pollster during the campaign and now an unofficial Carter adviser, said he expects the President will use data from his survey to develop a plan that will expand the government's role in health care and insurance.

"National health care is perceived by the public as the last great initiative on the social agenda," said Caddell, who is president of Cambridge Survey Research Inc.

The most serious concern of Americans, other than becoming unemployed, is a serious illness in the family, especially one involving a family breadwinner, he said. "Most people feel they don't have resources to pay for a medical catastrophe."

Caddell said two-thirds of the people are "very concerned" they won't be able to pay for future medical care unless the government takes steps to guarantee full health care service to every American.

He said 51 per cent of the public favors higher taxes for government health programs, while 43 per cent is opposed. "In view of the anti-Washington, anti-government, anti-tax mood I think this is surprising and I think support for government involvement in health care and for higher taxes will continue to grow."

He said Americans increasingly blame hospitals, drug companies and insurance companies for rises in medical costs.

Caddell said his survey showed that 16 per cent of the American public want to keep the current health care system, 26 per cent want the federal government to pay insurance premiums for the poor, 34 per cent want a national health care program that guarantees medical treatment for all and 18 per cent want a totally nationalized medical system.. The rest of those questioned were undecided.

Carter has promised to come up with a national health insurance program ever since the campaign and Joseph Califano, secretary of health, education and welfare, is committed to making his recommendations to Carter by early next year.

"T.V. Intoxication"

MIAMI [UPI] — Attorney Ellis Rubin's "TV intoxication" defense in the Ronny Zamora murder trial suffered a setback yesterday when the judge refused testimony from a psychologist on the effects of television violence.

Rubin, calling it "the heart of my defense," sought to question Dr. Margaret Thomas, a Florida Technological University psychologist, about the general effects of television violence on teenagers.

"How can I equate the effect of television on Ronny Zamora without showing what the effect of television is on everybody?" he asked.

Rubin contends the 15-year-old youth was under the influence of "involuntary subliminal television intoxication" when he killed 82-year-old Elinor Haggart last June 4.

Judge Paul Baker questioned Dr. Thomas for more than an hour with the jury out of the courtroom.

Dr. Thomas told Baker, "Television violence is positively associated with aggressive behavior." But then Baker asked, "In any of your tests or scientific journals, have you ever conclusively linked any particular television program or amount of television violence directly to a homicide or any crime?"

When Dr. Thomas answered no, Baker said, "The testimony is excluded."

Baker had told Rubin before the trial he would only allow testimony about the effect of television on Zamora and not on all children.

Dr. Thomas was the second witness barred by Baker Tuesday. He also excluded the testimony of psychologist Jack Jacobs because of his doctorate in education, not psychology.

Earlier in the day psychologist Walter Reid testified Zamora was a "fairly classical sociopathic personality." Rubin said he wanted to show through Dr. Thomas' testimony that sociopaths "are more affected by violence on television than any other category of human beings."

Reid said Zamora displayed "little remorse or guilt" when interviewed 25 days after killing Mrs. Elinor Haggart, who had caught the youth burglarizing her home.

Zamora may be able to tell you "why something is wrong", Reid said, "but that doesn't seem to affect his subsequent actions." A sociopath, he explained, knows right from wrong, but doesn't care.

Under cross-examination, however, Redi said Zamora showed no sign of a major mental breakdown or psychosis and admitted to the prosecutor: "I think he can distinguish right from wrong."

Earlier the 15-year-old defendant's mother, Yolanda Zamora, told the court that Ronny once said he would "memorize everything on television so maybe someday I'll get to Hollywood."

National health binds economy

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — National health insurance could end up bankrupting the U.S. treasury unless there are strong controls on its implementation, Maine Human Service Commissioner David Smith said Tuesday.

"The skyrocketing costs of medical care need more attention from the public," Smith said in an interview. "People need to realize where medical costs come from, they have to realize those costs come out of their pockets and out of their paychecks."

The Boston office of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare will hold public hearings in Augusta, Portland and Presque Isle Thursday to hear recommendations for initiating a national health insurance plan.

Smith said many people are not aware of the high cost of medical insurance because it is paid for by their employer. Some firms spend more on medical insurance than on raw materials, he said.

"General Motors, the largest corporation in the world, spends more for health insurance than for the steel used to make its automobiles," said Smith. "It's incredible — but true."

A national health insurance plan modeled on the existing medical care programs for the poor would be expensive to the point of straining the national economy, the commissioner said.

The present system for billing provides no incentive for the provider of the services — either a doctor, hospital or other medical facility — to hold down costs, Smith said.

"We need to change that system as it now applied to Medicaid and Medicare," he said, "because it's already a problem in those areas."

Smith said because providing nearly free medical care to everyone would cause severe financial problems for the government, he favors instituting a national insurance to protect persons from catastrophic illnesses, where the cost of treatment is so high it can bankrup a family.

Hospital exempt from liability for sterilization

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — A federal judge will exempt a state hospital from liability so that it can sterilize three blind and mentally retarded girls, the hospital's lawyer predicted Tuesday.

The judge has already indicated he will allow the operations.

Parents of the three girls, aged 12, 13 and 15, have asked a federal court to allow their daughters to be sterilized because the deaf, mute, blind and retarded children would not be able to cope with pregnancy and childbirth.

The names of the girls from three different families and the parents have been withheld by the court.

The parents, who had been turned down by several private hospitals, asked the court to force the University of Connecticut's John Dempsey Hospital to perform the sterilizations. But the hospital felt it might be sued if it undertook the operations.

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON – After three years of harrying Soviet and Japanese whaling fleets in the Pacific, the ecological pressure group Greenpeace is swinging its attention to the North Atlantic.

The aim is to protect dwindling whale stocks in waters around Iceland and Norway by sending a trawler to the area and launching small boats with orders to position themselves between whalers and their quarry.

The 485-ton Sir William Hardy, moored near London, has been earmarked as the Greenpeace command vessel and a campaign is now under way in Europe to purchase it and have it ready for operations as soon as possible next year.

Like the campaign in the Pacific, Greenpeace's European crusade on behalf of whales is based on the conviction that too many whales are being slaughtered and that international conventions designed to protect species in danger of extinction are not working properly.

Icelanders pursuing the giant fin whale will be a prime target of the expedition vessel, but there are plans also to limit the killing of sperm, Sei, and Minke whales in North Sea waters.

When the Greenpeace vessel steams into an area where whaling is taking place, rubber dinghies will be launched over the side, and crews will seek to get between whalers and whales and so prevent harpooning.

One of the organizers, Allan Thornton, says the method, though sometimes hazardous, has worked well in the Pacific. He says the operation will be in the form of a peaceful protest with no attempt on the part of Greenpeace to use violence or threats.

Worldwide, whales are being slaughtered at the rate of one every 20 minutes. There is a total ban on killing the giant blue whale, now down to a mere 1 or 2 per cent of its original numbers.

The fin whale, second largest species still in existence, is under heavy pressure from whalers seeking its oil and other byproducts, all of which Greenpeace claims could be replaced by synthetics.

Earlier this year, the International Whaling Commission reduced by over one-third the number of whales that can be legally caught, bringing the permissible total down to under 18,000. Greenpeace thinks that figure is too high and wants a total moratorium on whaling for an extended period.

To back up claims that whales are being overexploited, the organizers of the new European campaign intend to have the command vessel carry a group of biologists who will conduct their own survey of whale stocks and catch rates.

The current legal limit for the North Atlantic is just under 4,000 a year, and if Greenpeace finds evidence of greater numbers being taken, it will lodge a complaint with the International Whaling Commission.

I wish I could study like my sister Kate

At most universities in the United States, if you were an undergraduate student who felt that you had a serious problem with reading, organization of research materials, or even taking notes, you would have several options you could try. You could invest your money in worry beads, try bribing the professor, or quit and pump gas. The hysterical discovery of the obvious is that most universities don't care whether you can cut it or not. All too often the prevading thought is that you should have mastered all the "necessary" educational skills before you ever got to college. Unfortunately, that response serves the speaker, embarrasses the listener, yet really answers nothing.

Out of the small number of universities that are concerned with the learning problems that its students may have, UMass is one of the most aware. It's Communication Skills Center (CSC), located in Goodell, not only has a well-trained staff, but virtually any learning device you might need. It's specially designed labs, advanced learning techniques, and one-on-one sessions with students who need personal consideration, all point in one direction: a candle in the window if you feel you're getting lost or behind in your work.

With a population of over seven hundred, the CSC student body ranges from those who have physical handicaps, such as dyslexia or the hearing-impaired, to those who would rather be dragged by a horse than write a research paper. Established in the Spring of 73, through the Provost Office in response to a Faculty Senate mandate, the Communication Skills Center was no accident. While there have never been as many undergraduates as there are today, it is also a fact that one-quarter of them have a reading comprehension level par for an eighth grader, and S.A.T. scores have never been lower. We get so much of what we know from tube and transistor that we are rapidly becoming a society of the "almost" read, the "almost" educated. The idea that we need to retain or sharpen our learning skills isn't as much a discovery, as it is pragmatic assertion.

George Benson performs at Curry Hicks Oct. 13th

The 1976 Grammy Award winner, George Benson, will perform at the Curry Hicks Cage Oct. 13.

Benson has been recording for more than 20 years and has won jazz polls nationally and internationally. Tickets are now available at TIX on the main level of the Student Union, and cost $5 for UMass students with a valid student ID, and $6.50 for general admission.

Tickets are also on sale at Faces of Earth, Sun Music, Backroom Records, and Sound Room in Northampton.

UMass version of the traditional Octoberfest

UMass' version of the traditional German Octoberfest will hit the Fine Arts Center Friday with a "boom — boom, boom."

The annual Octoberfest, where the main attraction is tuba music instead of beer and sausages, will be held beside the reflecting pond of the Fine Arts Center from 4 to 7:30 p.m. on Oct. 7. It is open to the public; the only charge will be for food. Beer, Octubawurst and sauerkraut will be offered.

"The real purpose of the Octubafest, said George Parks, director of the UMass marching band, "is to have a nice festival and yet show what the tuba can do," which is more than just make noises. It can also be used to play a sonato or concerto.

"It's a very mellow instrument, very melodic," Parks said.

The UMass Faculty Oompa Band and the U.S. Coast Guard Tuba Quartet will perform oompa and classical music. The event will end with a mass tuba ensemble.

Other musical participants in the Octubafest will be the Town and City Four, a barbershop quartet, and the UMass Minutemen Marching Band.

Unexpected visit by Carter's sister to hospital

COLUMBUS, Ohio [UPI] — Ruth Carter Stapleton, sister of President Carter, accompanied by her husband and Hustler Magazine Publisher Larry Flynt and Flynt's mother, made an unexpected visit to Children's Hospital Monday.

Flynt said he invited the Stapletons, who spent the weekend at his home in suburban Bexley and left Monday night for Los Angeles, to visit him.

Hospital Administrator Stuart Williams said Mrs. Stapelton, an evangelist, was interested in the hospital's neonatal intensive care unit.

Williams said Mrs. Stapelton, whose husband, Robert, is a veterinarian magazine publisher, arrived at the hospital with only a half-hour's notice and did not want publicity.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEDNESDAY, Oct. 5, 1977

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5 — Born today, you are a slow, methodical individual who seldom makes a rash or impulsive move. This does not mean that you don't respond quickly to events or situations; only that you do not act without first weighing the consequences. Your feelings may run quite as deep as those of the most sensitive – but your reactions rarely become observable. Because you are careful to base your behavior upon specifics rather than the general picture, you are usually both accurate and practical.

A good organizer and natural-born leader, who considers his followers before himself, you are capable not only of achieving success for yourself but of leading others to it, asking only that they cross that threshold on their own. Such responsible concern is admired and, by those whose good fortune it is to be the recipients of that concern, greatly appreciated.

One for whom first things come first, you can be counted upon to keep promises, carry out duties, and to perform in such a way that no one can find fault either with you or your work. Yet you are not so serious about life that you lack humor. Indeed, your humor saves many a situation from becoming either boring or overly difficult.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Make an effort to delay a decision until late in the day. Make your excuses such that no one can deny an extension.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.22) — A duality of interests must not result in a duality of effort. Select an activity for the time available and stick to it.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — You should be able to work out the details of your next project without too much difficulty. Consider a past effort for clues.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — A family enterprise can be combined with an employment activity so that all ends are served.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Be ready with an alternate plan just in case. This is a good day for testing your own ability to adapt to new situations.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Mediocre effort yields mediocre gains. Do what you can to reinstate yourself in the esteem of one who can work to your good.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Don't be surprised to find yourself in conflict with a business associate. Tact makes the difference between success and failure.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Improve your position on the home front and on the employment scene. Make it a point to get along with those in authority.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — The decision-making process keeps you busy today. Don't waste time trying to make up other people's minds for them, however.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — The time spent in preparation for the day's work may take up most of your energy. Rest your mind and body at evening.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — A professional association may keep you hopping today as you try to keep up with changes in the status of your position.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Changes may be required at a moment's notice. Be prepared and it will be easier to reap gains from seeming losses.

Hannah, Gray reunited with Pats

FOXBORO [UPI] — All pro linemates John Hannah and Leon Gray returned to the New England Patriots yesterday, 23 days after they walked out on the team, and said they will stay for the rest of the season and resume contract talks after the final game.

The return marks a major victory for club owner Bill Sullivan, who felt he would be letting all national football owners down if he caved in to the demands of the two players, who are in the midst of long term contracts.

"I'd like to say Leon and John have made the decision to return to the ballclub under terms of their previous contracts and the conditions of the hearing," said Coach and General Manager Chuck Fairbanks, as the nervous linemen sat alongside the coach.

"From my point of view, I am very pleased they're coming back, both for my personal welfare and the welfare of the ballclub."

At the end of the season, Fairbanks said, "we will negotiate their contracts in good faith."

Gray, under contract through the 1979 season, said after last week's hearing in Washington he would return to the team if he was assured new contract talks would be started immediately.

Hannah, who reportedly had asked to be traded, showed up in the Schaefer Stadium parking lot at 4:27 p.m., and went right into the meeting with Fairbanks and Chuck Sullivan, the club's legal counsel. Hannah, who returned from his Albertville, Ala., farm, is under contract until 1980.

Gray arrived at 5:04 p.m., four minutes after the stated deadline, and also went quickly inside the club's offices.

Absent from the 45-minute meeting was agent Howard Slusher, who became the two linemen's representative last spring after Hannah and Gray returned from their first pro bowl game. At the pro bowl, the two learned that other all pro linemen were making much more money than Gray's reported $60,000 and Hannah's estimated $65,000 salaries.

Hannah, a fifth-year veteran from Alabama, and Gray, also in his fifth year from Jackson State, reported to the club's training camp in July, saying they wanted their contracts renegotiated. Sullivan refused "to budge by one dime" from the contracts that are in effect.

They left the squad Sept. 11, one hour before the club's final exhibition game against Atlanta at Schaefer Stadium.

Even after the walkout, Slusher met with Sullivan, his son Chuck and Fairbanks.

Slusher left Fairbanks' house in the early hours of Sept. 12, telling the players that the Patriots had refused to open contract extension talks.

Hannah went home and Gray stayed in the Boston area. Stories circulated that Hannah had insisted on being traded to Denver and that Gray would sit out the season.

The two were reunited last Wednesday in the Washington offices of the NFL management council, which ruled the players could return to their team — without fine or loss of pay — if they reported by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

The Patriots, expected to be an AFC powerhouse this season, have lost two of their first three games. The team's problems, however, have been traced to a shoddy defense rather than poor play by fill-ins Pete Brock and Shelby Jordan.

Sports in Brief

Ali to defend title

NEW YORK [UPI] — Muhammad Ali will defend his heavyweight title early in February against the winner of the Leon Spinks-Alfio Righetti bout, Bob Arum, President of Top Rank, Inc., said yesterday.

Arum said he has signed contracts with Ali and his manager, Herbert Muhammad, plus Spinks and Righetti calling for the champion to receive $3.5 million and the challenger between $200,000 and $300,000.

Tehran, the capital of Iran, is the leading site, Arum said. Other potential sites, he said, are New York's Madison Square Garden and Las Vagas' Hilton Hotel. Arum added negotiations are underway with all three networks for home telecast of the bout.

Arum said he expects to announce an exact date and location for the bout by early next week.

The fight between Spinks, the Olympic Light Heavyweight Champion from St. Louis, and Righetti, the unbeaten (26-0) Italian Heavyweight, will take place in November, said Arum. The bout, also promoted by top rank, probably will be held in Las Vegas, he added.

Arum said the contract with Ali and his manager was signed on Aug. 19 and prevents the champion from signing for another bout in the interim. Spinks and Righetti signed a week later, he said.

House eyes NCAA

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A house subcommittee has opened an investigation of the National Collegiate Athletic Association in connection with its penalties against the University of Nevada-Las Vegas and other universities.

Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., chairman of the House Commerce Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, said yesterday the panel already has started its inquiry. He said the probe was prompted by a request from Rep. Jim Santini, D-Nev., and 67 other house members from 33 states.

Santini, a member of the Moss Subcommittee, made the request after the NCAA put the Nevada basketball team on probation for two years and ordered the suspension of its coach, Jerry Tarkanian, for alleged recruiting violations.

Moss said his panel has "received evidence from (Nevada) concerning alleged abuses of authority by the NCAA as well as reports of similar problems from other major universities."

"The Subcommittee will attempt to determine such things as whether the NCAA is violating any antitrust laws, whether the investigative methods of the NCAA provide for due process, and whether the penalties assessed to violating institutions, athletes and coaches are fair and equitable," he said.

Gate records set

NEW YORK [AP] — A record total of more than 38.7 million fans attended major league baseball games this season according to unofficial figures released Monday by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

The total of 38,746,723 represented an increase of 24 per cent and shattered last year's record of 31,318,331. The 1977 figures include more than three million fans who attended home games for the American league's expansion franchises in Seattle and Toronto. Seattle drew 1,338, 511 and Toronto attracted 1,701,039.

Eighteen of the 24 established franchises showed increases led by Los Angeles, which set an alltime record of 2,955,087, an average of 37,406 for 79 playing dates.

Philadelphia attracted 2,700,070, the third highest total in major league history and Cincinnati's two-time world champions drew 2,519,670. The New York Yankees drew 2,103,092 and Boston set a club record with 2,073,529.

Cosell mouths off

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson yesterday took umbrage at ABC sportscaster Howard Cosell for saying a former University of New Hampshire football player "came from nowhere."

Thomson sent a telegram to the sports announcer regarding Cosell's remarks Monday night aboout Kansas City Chiefs linebacker Dave Rozumek, captain of the 1975 UNH football team.

Thomson said Cosell said Rozumek "came from nowhere" when the linebacker tackled an Oakland Raider. When sportscaster Don Meredith corrected Cosell and said Rozumek came from New Hampshire, Cosell repeated, "he came from nowhere".

A weekend to remember

The weekend of October 1 and 2 is one that I'll never forget.

My roommate was almost thrown out of the dorm; my neighbor was; the supposed Super Bowl bound Pats lost to the Namathless Jets; the Red Sox let the Yankees sneak in the back door to win the American League Pennant; the UMass offensive discovered Knute Rockne's brainstorm — the forward pass (rumor has it that some of the pass spiraled) and the most incredible phenomenon of all — the Minutemen buried a midwestern football team by a score of 54-13!

Oh yes! I almost forgot about Rick Dempsey. The Baltimore catcher stood shoeless atop the pitchers mound in Fenway Park Sunday, while leading the faithful in a rendition of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady", during the rained-out seasons' finale.

But that's another story.

I want to talk about the only positive note of the weekend, which was the impressive UMass annihilation of the Youngstown State Penguins. The UMass aerial attack was incredible, to say the least. Mike Fallon did his best to imitate Ken "the Snake" Stabler with four touchdown passes in the first half, as the UMies raced out to a 33-7 halftime lead.

Fallon eventually established a UMass single-game touchdown passes record by completing his fifth touchdown pass in the second half to Kevin Cummings. Coincidentally, that same 22-yard strike to Cummings gave him the record for the most touchdown passes caught in a single game (three).

The defense, led by the likes of defensive ends John Willis and John D'Amato, bottled up the Youngstown attack. Middle guard Phil Puopolo made his presence known with eight tackles. Overall, the Big "D", coming into the Youngstown contest with two straight whitewashings, played like wounded bears (or Minutemen?; and continually presented the offense with excellent field position by pouncing on Penguin mistakes or by just plain stinginess.

It was an overall team effort, but the passing game was just so unexpected, so unbelievable, so surprising, and so efficient that I still can't believe what took place on the turf at Alumni Stadium last Saturday.

Somebody pinch me!

I still can vividly recall those giant titans from Boston College burying little Brian McNally in the mud last fall.

I still can remember burly Bill Burnham busting through the UMass defensive wall as if it were paper. Giving UNH another Yankee Conference title last year was comparable to losing to Harvard, Holy Cross, and Smith in the same day. What a bitter pill!

... and I'll never forget losing to the underdog Huskies at home last fall. I lost five bucks to my big-mouth cousin.

But somehow, Saturday, October 1 made one forget about the past and gave hope for the future.

Forget about Leamon Hall's arm and Army — the Minutemen have now surged to three straight wins, but more importantly they have outscored their opponents 99-13 in their last three outings! Incredible! The offense, besides gaining 243 yards via the air Saturday, was also aided by a strong running attack that produced 297 yards (Bill Coleman contributed 124 yards). The defense, which has been a bright spot all season, caused five Penguin turnovers last Saturday, of which four were converted into paydirt.

Ned Martin would have to say — "Mercy, Mercy, Mercy."

Despite all the hooplah surrounding the UMies victory, one forgets that last Saturday's 54-13 thrashing was pinned on a midwest 11 and not on North Adams State. That's right — The Minutemen humiliated a team from the state that houses the most gracious coach of all time — Woody Hayes. What's more — the UMies befuddled a team that hails from the powerful Big Ten area; a team that's from Jim Thorpe's breeding ground and from the home of Pro Football's Hall of Fame. WOW!!!

After reading Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream, I'm afraid that it's all a dream.

When was the last time you saw a UMass football team refuse three points (successful field goal but Youngstown St. penalty on kick gave UM a first down) to try for a touchdown?

When was the last time you saw 54 points shining brilliantly under "HOME" on the scoreboard at Alumni Stadium?

When was the last time you saw five touchdown passes in one game?

When was the last time you witnessed a UMass quarterback establish a passing record?

When was the last time you saw a UMass aerial and ground show that each produced over 200 yards?

WHEN WAS THE LAST TIME YOU LEFT ALUMNI STADIUM IN THE THIRD QUARTER WITH UMASS AHEAD?

"Do I wake, or sleep?"

MISSION, Kan. [UPI] — South Carolina State has replaced Montana State in this week's NCAA Division II football poll, according to the latest ratings released yesterday.

Montana State (3-1) suffered its first loss in 14 games, dropping a 26-0 decision to Boise State to fall to fifth in the poll. Boise State (3-1) is fourth in its first poll appearance this season while South Carolina State (4-0), rated second the past two weeks, jumped into first following its 31-7 win against Alcorn State.

New Hampshire (4-0) moved into second by virtue of a 42-7 win over Connecticut and Jacksonville State (5-0) took over third with a 14-10 decision over Southeastern Louisiana.

JV gridders prepare for Friday opening tilt

By KIRK MACKEY
Collegian Staff

With the UMass junior varsity football season slated to start Friday at Dartmouth, coach Clarence Brooks has been polishing up his 65-man outfit into what he termed as a "good solid team."

The subvarsity has been practicing together for four weeks now, and has been mainly working on the new players' adjustment to the UMass system.

From what the coach has seen, a number of incoming freshmen have the potential to figure keenly in the UMass future. As Friday looms closer, though, the gridmen will be practicing for that precision which is necessary for a solid team effort.

The nucleus of the club will be centered around a number of players who also suit up for varsity action. Both freshmen and sophomores are included in this group and will mainly be used in getting in some playing experience, because of the fact that these players are needed to fill any varsity gaps.

Some of the more prominent names among them are: QB Jack Kraham, fullback Steve Milkiewicz, offensive guard Mike Halpin, nose guard Ray Benoit, and defensive back Tony Jesi.

The JV's will be depending on sophomore defensive back Jack Mula to hold that unit together. Joining him as a promising freshman safety is Bob Manning, who has looked impressive in practice.

Defensive tackles John Defusco and Mark Foley have also opened a few eyes. Other exceptional freshmen are QB's Dave Atkinson and George Scullane, and backs Pete Barrar, John Seccorso, Joel Etter, and Brian McCutchon.

So with the development of personnel in mind, Brooks will attempt to mold these players into varsity material.

Court backs appeal on basketball ruling

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Controversial Tennessee high school girls' basketball rules, attacked as being sexually discriminatory for imposing half-court restrictions on all girls and keeping half the team from shooting, were upheld by a Federal Appeals Court Monday.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the earlier decision of U.S. District Court Judge Robert Taylor, who had declared the girls' rules represented sex discrimination and and violated the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment.

Decided the Appeliate Court, "there is no evidence of any intent to discriminate between the sexes."

Tennessee officials said the rules are to "protect weaker students" and to "provide the opportunity for awkward and clumsy student athletes to play defense only."

The rules were attacked in court by Victoria Ann Cape, a student at Oak Ridge, Tenn., high school, who complained the rules were too confining and made it virtually impossible for her to obtain a basketball scholarship in college, where women play the same unrestricted rules as men.

"No challenge is made here to the most apparent sex-based classification in this case. Entirely separate basketball leagues for males and females are maintained on the basis of sex. Whether plaintiff would be precluded from competing for a berth on the boys' basketball team, we do not know. She does not complain of it.

"It must therefore be assumed, for the purposes of this case, that this classification by gender is valid....

"When the classification, as here, relates to athletic activity, it must be apparent that its basis is the distinct differences in physical characteristics and capabilities between the sexes and that the differences are reflected in the sport of basketball by how the game itself is played.

"It takes little imagination to realize that were play and competition not separated by sex, the great bulk of the females would quickly be eliminated from participation and denied any meaningful opportunity for athletic involvement.

"Since there are such differences in physical characteristics and capabilities, we see no reason why the rules governing play cannot be tailored to accommodate them without running afoul of the equal protection clause (of the 14th amendment).

"There is no evidence of any intent to discriminate between the sexes," concluded the three-judge panel in its unanimous decision.

The Umass sub-varsity soccer team, continued its winning ways yesterday by shutting out a spirited Harvard team, 3-0, on the Boyden fields.

It marked the second consecutive shutout for UMass, a tribute to the solid defense, backboned by goalie Mark Marilla, who stopped 12 Crimson shots.

After the game UMass coach Joel Dryer said that his team played about the same as it had last week when it beat Keene St., but that its passing was not as crisp because the field here was muddy and wet.

UMass came away with 1-0 lead after a relatively uneventful first half. The lone goal came from Peter Dionne in the closing minutes of the opening period. Dionne found the range from about 20 yards out on a direct kick. The low hard shot deflected off a Harvard defender and sped past the helpless goalie.

With the wind at their backs, the Minutemen came out much stronger in the second half. The immediate pressure they applied resulted in many scoring attempts and also an injury to the Harvard goalie, who had to be removed from the game.

Continuing to mount an attack, UMass' best scoring chance came on a breakaway by Will McEnroe, who was thwarted by a good save. McEnroe got quick revenge, though, when minutes later he was awarded a penalty shot which he calmly put by the sprawling Harvard netminder into the right corner of the cage.

The final Umass tally came from Bill Call, set up by John Heslin, with about 10 minutes to go in the game.

Booters bumped by Crimson, 2-1

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

Lee Nelson's goal with 2:29 to go in the second overtime period gave Harvard a 2-1 victory over the UMass soccer team in a home match played yesterday. It was the Minutemen's second consecutive overtime loss.

UMass got on the board first. Tommy Koutsoukos headed in his eighth goal of the season, 13:59 into the first half on a pretty play. He was assisted by Willy Sorensen.

But that was to be it for UMass on the day. Harvard came back fighting, with goalkeeper Fred Herold stopping several clean UMass breaks. The Crimson forwards continuously peppered the Minuteman goal area, but the UMass defenders consistently thwarted them.

Harvard put it all together in the second half. The Crimson tied it up at 10:52 of the half when freshman Walter Diaz, who had an excellent game, scored from point-blank range. UMass never recovered, as afterwards it was all Harvard.

By this time, the UMass offense had completely collapsed. The defense, particularly Larry Aronson and Mike St. Martin, plus goalie Mark Hodgdon, prevented a total Harvard rout. Regulation time ended at 1-1.

Overtime was not better for the UMass offense, as it was totally unable to blend together. But Harvard fared little better. The few shots that it could manage were all stopped by Hodgdon.

Nelson's winning goal came after a pileup in front of the UMass goal. But it was all that Harvard needed, as it ran down the little time left on the clock.

The Minutemen, though, looked terrible. Nothing they tried seemed to have any effect, as they were badly outplayed by a fired-up Harvard club. UMass looked as if it had been just dragged out of bed, while Harvard seemed chock full of enthusiasm.

If it hadn't been for the scoreboard, one would have thought that it was 8-0 Harvard, instead of a 1-1 tie. The UMass bench had a funeral atmosphere, as though it was awaiting defeat, while Harvard was on fire, constantly pumping up its teammates with cheers from both the field and sidelines.

Umass brought itself down to the level of an inferior team, and Harvard simply does not compare, talent-wise, with UMass. Harvard's victory was not just on the scorebaord.

If the Minutemen want to return to their winning ways, the offense will have to improve. Yesterday was mass confusion. The UMass offense can't ride on the backs of two big scorers. It has to be diversified.

UMass coach Russ Kidd echoed the disappointment. "We missed a lot of opportunities. The team looked dead out there. We couldn't buy a goal."

Harvard coach George Ford was kind. "UMass was the most agressive I've ever seen them, I was impressed. We're two even teams. I feel great."

Southern stifles spikers in thriller

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

A gutsy and determined UMass volleyball team battled its way back from a two game to zero deficit, only to fall to a powerful Southern Connecticut State squad by the final scores of 11-15, 6-15, 15-12, 17-15, and 6-15 in NOPE gymnasium last night.

Southern Conn., a perennial volleyball powerhouse, used its height advantage and an overpowering offense to win the first two games of the match. The games pitted the heavy hitting of Southern Conn. vs. the strategic placement shots of the UMass team.

UMass was most effective when, instead of trying to match up to the bullet-like spikes of the visitors, the Minutemen resigned themselves to placing soft shots in between the players on the opposing squad. Meanwhile, in the first game, Southern Conn.'s spikes landed in downtown Amherst as often as they landed inside the red lines and UMass picked away, before bowing, 11-15.

In the second game, Southern Conn. was warmed up and its previously misguided missles began to find the range. UMass was only in the game up until the score was 6-5 in favor of the enemy. From that point on, Southern Conn. showed no mercy as they romped to the 15-6 decision.

A bit of coach Dianne Thompson's strategy may have paid off in the third game as she substituted Kathleen Higgins for Chris Kelley in order to get some more height into the line-up. At first, UMass didn't respond as it fell behind early but they finally took the lead at 7-6 and were never headed.

Southern Conn. played lethargically until the score reached 14-6 but they rallied to close to within two at 14-12. Heidi Dickson save the spikers with a gorgeous line drive serve that no one from Southern Conn. get a hand on.

The fourth game was definitely the game of the year up until this point — in the young season. UMass could have written a book on the art of playing volleyball based on its performance in the first three-quarters of the game. The Minutemen were hitting, blocking, and switching from offense to defense so smoothly that even Southern Conn. looked shocked.

They built up a lead of 14-3 and then did a complete turnaround. Southern Conn., a sleeping giant up until this point in the game, began to peck away at the lead and as the wide margin diminished, the spikers appeared to lose confidence in themselves.

Umass had seven serves for the game point but they couldn't click on one of them and Southern Conn. came back to tie the score at 14. The visitors then went ahead at 15-14 and appeared to have the game and the match won on a blistering spike shot, but one of the officials ruled that a Southern Conn. player had committed a net violation. UMass took advantage of the break by scoring the next three points to win the game 17-15.

But the fifth game proved what was already obvious to most of the spectators. The momentum had shifted in favor of Southern Conn. UMass appeared to buckle under the pressure as its opponents ran up a quick 5-0 lead.

UMass came back briefly to close the gap to 5-3 but a slew of mental errors (missing easy shots, bad serves, going after shots that were headed out of bounds) proved to be its downfall as Southern Conn. turned it on to win the game 15-6 and the match, three games to two.

Stickers edge Lyons, record fourth victory

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team continued its winning ways yesterday with a 1-0 squeaker over Mt. Holyoke on the NOPE fields. It is the fourth straight shutout victory for the stickers.

The Minutewomen, playing without three starters (Sue Kreider, Ginger Bulman, and Gayle Hutchinson) because of health and medical reasons, had trouble with the Lyons. The visiting team applied some early pressure but came up short.

As soon as UMass gained control, it in turn had the pressure on. The only score of the game came on a penalty corner on a beautiful shot by Cheryl Meliones, her fouuth goal of the young season, ten minutes into the game.

Reviewing the score Jody Wickman, on the side of the goal, passed the ball out front to her sister Lynsie. She caught the ball and laid it down for Meliones, who lifted a shot high over the outstretched arm of Lyon goalie Sally Farr.

The first half ended with UMass in the lead in the score as well as in statistics. The Minutewomen led in shots, 9-5 and in penetration time, 5:45-3:25. Farr for MHC recorded seven saves and UMass goalie Kathy Gipps made four.

As the second half got under way, penetration time was becoming more and more important. Mt. Holyoke was closing in and just missed a few rare opportunities. One time, Lynsie Wickman made a great save of a waist high shot which appeared to have tied the score.

"It seems we have trouble even in practice when trying to put the ball in then net," she said.

Summing up the game, Davidson recalled, "In the first half, we weren't anticipating and we didn't move. We were controlling play for the most part but we weren't playing as well as we should have. We came alive, however, in the second half and played better. The passes were sharp and we were anticipating. We are very pleased to walk away with a win today," she added.

The win ups UMass' record to 4-0 while Mt. Holyoke falls to 1-1-1. UMass travels to New York this weekend to play a pair of games at Cortland against Colgate and Cortland, on Friday and Saturday.

But the time was running out for Mt. Holyoke because the Minutewomen were beginning to control the ball more often. Penetration time for the second half was 5:30 for UMass compared to 2:24 for the Lyons.

UMass coach Judith Davidson credited the second half spark to Judy Kennedy. "Judy made the team come alive in the second half with her hustle," Davidson said.

Laura O'Neil was also credited with playing an excellent game by Davidson. She said, "Laura is very fast and proved it today; she started many breaks."

Goalie Gipps recorded her fourth shutout, making five saves on six shots.

Davidson said she was pleased with the way everyone responded and filled in for the missing players but also mentioned a little concern for the team's inability to score.

Phils take playoff opener

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Ron Cey of Los Angeles hit one of the most dramatic home runs in National League playoff history last night, a grand slam which tied the score in the seventh inning, but a plain old single by his rival Mike Schmidt broke the deadlock in the ninth and enabled the Philadelphia Phillies to score a 7-5 victory over the Dodgers in the first game of the National League championship series.

The Phillies, an underdog despite winning 101 games during the regular season, now need only two more victories in the best-of-five series to win their first pennant since 1950. In last year's league championships, Philadelphia was swept in three games by the Cincinnati Reds, who went on to become the world champions.

The Dodgers, who seemed hopelessly out of the game after six innings, lent some high drama to the opening game when Cey cracked the first grand slam homer in NL championship series history to knot the score at 5-5 in the seventh.

It seemed after that blast that the Dodgers would take charge, but the Phillies refused to surrender and put together three straight singles in the ninth to break the tie, then got another run when reliever Elias Sosa committed a balk.

Netmen upset Terriers

By DAVE RODMAN
collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team evened its record at 2-2 and tuned up for this weekend's Yankee Conference championships with a 6-3 win over previously undefeated Boston University yesterday.

The Minutemen took four out of six singles matches and needed only one of three doubles contests to insure the victory.

Rick Sharton and captain Steve Heyl provided it in short order as they took second doubles in straight sets; 6-3, 6-3, over Shippen Howe Alex Kaminoff of BU.

In singles, Al Green made a successful return to number one as he beat BU's Texas import Vince Mouer, 7-5, 6-4. Sharton dispatched the Terrier's Glenn Stylides in straight sets; 6-3, 6-1, to take second singles.

"He didn't have much," said Sharton of his opponent. "this was quite a change from playing at number one, though — the competition is different — not as tough."

Sharton had played first singles most of this fall in Green's absence. He played fourth singles last year.

Heyl fulfilled coach Jay Ogden's prediction by downing Steve Wright, again straight sets; 7-5, 6-4, for the win in fourth singles.

Dave Nowak, despite breaking a string on his racket in warmups, took sixth singles, also in straight sets; 6-3, 6-4, over Harold Hirshon of BU.

"I had to use one of Jimmy's (Barnhart) rackets," said Nowak. "It was different than mine by a lot, and the wind was really kicking up, but it was a good match."

Besides Sharton and Heyl's match-clinching doubles win, Green and Barnhart looked awesom at times in winning first doubles; 7-6 (with a 5-4 tiebreaker), 6-4.

Before the match, Ogden said the pair's timing might be off, but that it would be a good tuneup for the YanCon's. At times, Green showed the effects of the lack of match play, but sparkled at others. Meanwhile, the far-ranging Barnhart made several near-impossible returns.

"Jim's an unbelievable retriever," said Sharton, "and Alan's a great shot-maker, so they make a good team."

Another undefeated streak came to an end when UMass' freshman third doubles team of Keith Hovland and Mark Huetteman took Stylides and Mike Ralby to three sets before bowing, 6-2, 6-7, 6-1.

Hovland and Huetteman won a tiebreaker, 5-4 in the second set to win it after a comeback, but the hard-hitting, big mouthed Ralby and the less able but equally mouthy Stylides overpowered the frosh in the third set.

While the singles wins were all in straight sets, both UMass singles losses went three, as Barnhart lost; 6-2, 3-6, 6-3; and Hovland; 7-5, 4-6, 6-3.

"The nubmer one doubles win was big," said Ogden, "because that team (Mouer-Wright) made the semi-finals of the ECAC's."

The team will have a practice match with Amherst College today at 4 p.m. at the upper courts at Amherst.

A sexist setback

It's a good thing the members of the UMass women's basketball team didn't play their high school hoop in Tennessee.

For if they had, chances are good that this school would not be fielding a highly-rated team.

A United Press International story, which is printed on page 22 of today's Collegian, just proves the point that most of society has a long way to go in eradicating sexism in sports.

Long ago and far away (a little over seven years ago, to be exact), United States high school girls' basketball was played with six players per team. Rules varied from state to state. In Tennessee, for example, three players are 'shooters' (offensive players), while the other three are 'defenders' (defensive players). Other areas had a 'rover,' one player per side who could roam the length of the court.

Variations existed, but the basic premise behind the difference between men's and women's basketball rules was that since women did not have the stamina of men, they therefore could not play full-court basketball for an entire game.

. Anyway, around 1970, people saw just how foolish they had been, and most school officials changed their state's girls' high school hoop rules.

The rest, as they say, is history. The five-player a side, unrestricted rules worked out like a dream. High school and collegiate women's basketball is now a fast-paced and exciting game to watch.

The crime of the rule changes was that they didn't come sooner. In Tennessee, they didn't come at all.

Upon seeing how limited her state's rules were, Victoria Ann Cape, a student at Oak Ridge High, brought a suit against the school rules, complaining that the confining rules also made it virtually impossible for her to obtain a collegiate basketball scholarship.

Cape's case was upheld in U.S. District Court by Judge Robert Taylor, who declared the rules did, in fact, represent sex discrimination.

But on Monday, the sixth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed Taylor's decision.

"There is no evidence of any intent to discriminate between the sexes," the three-judge panel said in its unanimous decision.

Oh really? All the court need do is examine what Tennessee school officials said was their rationale for the rules.

"To protect weaker students" and "to provide the opportunity for awkward and clumsy student athletes to play defense only," the officials stated.

This is hard to believe. They are saying that women are 'weaker students,' and they must be 'protected.' This smacks of the sexism which female athletes have tried so hard to erase.

And the second part of the statement plainly makes no sense. By saying they are giving 'clumsy and awkward student athletes' an opportunity to play defense only, they are indicating that either there's a helluva lot of klutzy female athletes in Tennessee, or that the male population in the state are all a bunch of Pete Maraviches.

But all that aside, the strangest statement came from the appeals court when it said, "since there are differences in physical characteristics and capabilities, we see no reason why the rules governing play cannot be tailored to accommodate them .... "

Tell that, court, to the members of any collegiate women's basketball team. I'm sure they'd balk at a switch back to the old rules, when they couldn't play fullcourt.

Tell that to high school kids, who would be deprived of using their full athletic abilities if they were forced to change back to the way it used to be.

Without the rules changes, female hoopsters never realized their full potential. Either they could shoot or defend, but not do each save for the token rover.

It's almost scary to wonder how many superb female basketball players went to waste in the past few decades because of lack of a viable means to utilize their abilities.

And, what's even sadder to ponder, is how many female hoop players will atrophy in Tennessee this year.

Women's collegiate basketball has taken root and really begun to bloom in the past five years, due in large part to the rule changes and the addition of a 30-second clock.

It's too bad Tennessee can't seem to see the light. With the decision of the court, it appears as though sexism has found a friend.

50 candidates want Wood's job

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday was informed that there are 50 candidates for the recently-vacated University presidency. Robert C. Wood last June announced his resignation effective January, 1978.

The trustees also voted to send a delegation to the state legislature to seek money needed to renovate space at 100 Arlington St. for the University's president's office; approved a $13.5 million capital outlay budget for fiscal year 1979; and approved the September graduating list for 1,496 summer students.

Presidential search committee chairman Stephen G. Breyer reported on the current status of the search committee findings. He was criticized by several board members on the way his committee was going about its business.

"I am disturbed that we are making probably the most important decision we've made in many months without knowing the direction we're taking," said Trustee Haskell Kassler.

Breyer told the board "the faculty and student committees have been setting up meetings ... 40 persons have been nominated for president, and ten have applied. We have received responses from some others." He added he would continue to make contacts through other universities.

Breyer has received three letters from trustees responding to requests on thoughts about the type of person they would like to see as the new president. He then made an appeal to the trustees to respond more to his request.

Breyer's committee by November should be ready to go to the three UMass campuses to listen to the people about their ideas of presidential candidates. On Oct. 21, Breyer said "we will begin to focus on the criteria (the qualifications of the individual) for candidates.

"We have obtained criteria used at Tufts," said Breyer. "We have, as a beginning, criteria suggested by the ad hoc Committee."

Breyer said his committee will take all suggestions to compile for the board to discuss at the Nov. 2 board meeting.

"We will continue throughout to solicit names," Breyer said, "there is no cutoff date at Nov. 1, yet we'd like to have names before then."

Kassler also commented there should not have been any sort of deadline put on candidate applications, because it should depend on the time when the standards for candidates are decided upon.

Trustee Sylvia Burack said she would like to discuss the criteria with the full board and to make an agreement on the job description of the president. She said the board should hold a special meeting before the scheduled Nov. 2 meeting to discuss the presidential matters. She added she felt it important to find a new president immediately.

Breyer replied he believed it would be a mistake not to take applications before deciding on the criteria, for he said he felt it would be wasting time.

The committee searching for an interim president is dealing mainly with procedures, and is conducting a "closed, brief, rapid but

Golino vote tabled

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The fate of UMass-Boston Chancellor Carlo L. Golino was further delayed in yesterday's Board of Trustees meeting at the Columbia Point Harbor Campus.

The trustees, trying to decide whether Golino should be asked to step down, voted in executive session to form an ad hoc committee to review the Chancellor and make a recommendation for the Board to vote on.

The question of Golino's resignation began last June when the Board voted to lower mandatory requirement age for University personnel from 70 to 65. Golino is 64. The controversial policy was rescinded in the September meeting, but feelings on the Boston campus that Golino should step down continued.

Golino, who was not present during the closed executive session, sat through the remainder of the board meeting visibly upset.

He refused to make any comments after the meeting or during a telephone interview last night. He also refused to say whether he will cooperate with the committee or not.

There has been speculation the mandatory retirement age was first proposed by the board as a way to remove Golino — who would be immediately affected.

UMass-Amherst chancellor, Randolph W. Bromery, recently stated the June vote that lowered the age to 65 "should not have been tied too closely to Chancellor Golino."

Trustee chairman, Joseph P. Healy, said he believes the committee. which will be formed by the end of next week will "review some of the views and opinions on the Boston Campus as to Chancellor Golino's performance."

Inside

Boston in dark

Boston was blacked out last night after a power failure knocked out three to four square miles of the city. Police reported no immediate incidents of looting. For more details, see page six.

Porno debate

A debate on whether or not to censor pornography ended in a victory for two UMass debators last night. The UMass team argued for no censorship of pornography, while a British team argued in favor of censorship. See Moira Kovary's story on page two.

Senators, reps sought

The Undergraduate Student Senate still has openings for Third World senators and for certain dorm senators. Meanwhile, the Commuter Collective must hold elections once more after a ruling by the student attorney general. For more details, see the stories on page three.

Greeks make news

The UMass Greek community is in the news after holding their annual "Mr. Greek" contest. Also in the news is a story on why Greeks don't think sororities are sexist. Turn to page four for details.

Weather

Partly sunny today. High in the mid 60s. Clear and cool tonight. Low from the upper 30s to low 40s. Mostly sunny tomorrow. High in the low 60s. Chance of rain 20 per cent today, 10 per cent tonight.

Nader to talk on political process

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian

Consumer activist Ralph Nader will speak at 8:00 tonight in the Fine Arts Center on student participation in the political process, and citizens' initiative petition campaigns.

Nader will specifically address the campaign of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) to establish a Telephone Consumers' Action Group through the initiative petition process.

A reception will follow the speech and Nader will field questions from representatives of the press.

Nader has recently joined forces with Speaker of the House of Representatives, Thomas 'Tip' O'Neill, to sway a favorable vote on a bill before the House to establish a Federal Agency of Consumer Protection (ACP).

In one lobby effort for the bill, Nader asked voters to send letters with five cents enclosed to their representatives to dramatize the contrast of millions of dollars being spent by big business to defeat the legislation.

Even though President Carter publicly announced his support of the legislation this past summer, sources in Washington indicate eight more votes are needed to pass the bill.

According to President Carter establishment of the ACP will eliminate 13 other government offices, employing about 180 people, and net a yearly savings of about $10.4 million.

Lobby efforts from both consumerists and big business have intensified since Senator Robert Byrd (D-W.Va.) announced in June that the Senate wouldn't even consider the bill unless passed by the House.

According to Karen Meenan, PIRG spokesperson from the Amherst bureau, Speaker O'Neill will not bring up the bill for vote until he's convinced it will pass.

Other ongoing efforts by Nader include mandatory requirement of safety air bags in automobiles, and an attempt to form a union of sports fans.

Of the latter, according to Meenan, Nader is attempting to unionize sports fans who he feels are being victimized by expensive player trades and multi-million dollar contracts.

Debators win fight—no censorship of porno

By MOIRA CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

UMass debators, Robert De Fruscio and Mary O'Malley, last night convinced their audience pornographic films and magazines should not be censored by the U.S. government.

The UMass team faced a British team on the negative including R. Victoria Schotfield and Philip Engleman. UMass worked on a plank of four arguments to prove censorship of pornography is unnecessary and unworkable. Firstly, pornography is impossible to define. Secondly, pornography causes no harm to society. Thirdly, censorship of pornography will abuse freedom of expression as guaranteed by the First Amendment. Fourthly, censorship will cause unsolvable problems by denying the rights of those who wish to read pornography from doing so.

The British did not effectively prove pornography causes degredation of women as a group, or that it abuses the rights of the public not to see it.

One main argument rebutted during the debate was the claim that all people who read pornographic materials do not become deviants. It would be a totalitarian move on the part of the United States to deprive the publishers their freedom of expression and the public its freedom of choice, the teams argued.

The negative attacked this arguments by pointing out all women are effected by pornographic scenes of women, whether or not they read them. The British team theorized that due to the socialistic society in which they live, there is no freedom or isolation from what goes on around them. Therefore, pornography cannot help but influence all people contained within that society, they said.

The debate contained little else that was expected in formal debate tournaments. Evidence for both the affirmative and negative teams consisted of such nuggets as De Fruscio's claim that had pornographic censorship ruled in past centuries the reading public may never have read such novels as Joyce's Ulysses, Lawrence's Lady Chatterly's Lover or Homer's The Odyssey.

O'Malley's charge that pornography is not selling sex — although it "arouses masturbatory and copulatory impulses" — raised some doubts as to whether pornography and prostitution really are not the same thing. She said she believes they are not.

Another of O'Malley's memorable statements against censorship provided that, censors (depending on individual fettishes) would be banning photos of sexually arousing feet to bras if given a chance.

During cross-examination, Engleman succeeded in persuading his opponent, De Fruscio, he would be offended to see his sister or mother posing in a pornographic manner. O'Malley said although she had no morals, she did have scruples, and therefore would not pose for such pictures.

The debate closed with a question and answer period in which the audience raised questions as provoking as the debators themselves.

Arguments not brought up during the debate but apparently on the minds of the audience included the child pornography and the evidence proving that it is detrimental to children and society. Also raised was the question of pornography and prostitution being the same thing, regarding the monetary motivation which drives women to engage in such occupations. Following from this issue is the question of what pornographic models would do for a living if their livelihood were censored.

Such issues as these should have been dealt with by the negative team in rebuttal to the affirmative stance that pornography is an almost wholesome form of entertainment, one debater remarked.

Amherst Briefs

Amherst man to jail

An Amherst man was convicted Tuesday in Hampshire District Court of assault with a dangerous weapon and larceny of less than $100.

The conviction stemmed from an incident last month at UMass.

Bernard S. Chase, 26, of the Village Inn, Amherst, was sentenced to two, six month jail terms by Judge Alvertus J. Morse.

UMass police said on the morning of Sept. 27th Chase was seen rummaging through a woman's pocketbook at the Fine Arts Center. Police were notified and Chase was apprehended at Whitmore.

DNA vote this fall

Growing concern over the potential hazards of recombinant DNA research at area colleges and Universities has sparked public interest.

An article preventing further research in Amherst until proper studies are completed will be presented to the fall town meeting on Oct. 17th. The board of selectmen announced earlier this week a public file on recombinant DNA research would be established in the Jones library. In addition, an evening forum sponsored by the UMass zoology dept. will be held tonight in Bowker auditorium.

Town looks for water

The search for water in Amherst continues. The Amherst Board of Selectmen earlier this week voted to support three warrant articles dealing with new water sources for the town.

An article dealing with the appropriation of $63,000 for further testing of new water wells in Lawrence Swamp caused particular controversy among board members.

The two remaining articles were unanimously supported by the Selectmen. One supports the transferral of $3,000 from available water funds to conduct additional studies. The other authorizes continued consideration of water purchase from the town of Hadley.

Final decisions concerning all warrant articles will be made on Oct. 17th at town meeting.

Booze requests OK'd

For those of you awaiting a day of wine, beer, and high spirits, your day has come. Amherst Selectmen at a meeting earlier this week approved seven requests for one-day wine and malt licenses in the area. Permits were approved for: Cashin House, 10-6, music department, 10-7, Dwight House, 10-14, Cape Cod Club, 10-14, Cance dorm, 10-15, Thatcher house, 10-15, and Delta Mu Chapter of Alpha Chi Omega, 10-15.

Tax increase a reality

Amherst taxpayers will have to swallow their first tax increase in two years, bringing the FY 1978 rate up to $44.50 per $1000. Town Manager A. Louis Hayward says the $2.50 increase does not reflect an ongoing town revaluation. The increase comes as no surprise, as town officials predicted the hike at last May's town meeting. State officials verified the increase earlier this week.

Boy struck, hurt by car

An 11-year-old North Amherst boy was injured Tuesday when he was hit by a car in the Mill Hollow Apartments Parking lot.

According to Amherst Police, James Bricken, of 36 Mill Hollow Apartments, was playing in the parking lot when he was struck by a car driven by Cydney Champoux of 24 Mill Hollow Apartments.

Bricken jumped on the moving vehicle's hood, fell off and contacted a rear tire with his right ankle, police said.

Police said Bricken was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital where he was treated for a bruised ankle and released.

Lovers of Zionism forms; teaching goal

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

A new student group announced its creation at a meeting in the Campus Center last night. At the first meeting extensive plans were made.

Lovers of Zionism is a non-religious group within Hillel and Resources Judica. Hillel is the religious aspect of the organization and Resources Judica is the cultural and educational aspect, organizers said.

Special programs are going to get under way to educate the student population at UMass and also benefit Israel. There will be lectures, films, and literature available as an effort to enable students to understand Zionism, and issues in the Middle East.

"Often headlines are read and some knowledge is picked up, but it is not fully understood," said Jeff Santis the acting chairman. "There are a lot of Anti-Zionist groups on campus that have very strong voices, and we need to get the facts to the students," he said.

"Often Zionism is equated with racism. There is proof of just this in the way that posters advertising the meeting were defaced. There is no policy in Israel limiting non Jewish immigration. As policy Zionism is not racist or discriminatory," Santis said.

Zionism was started by Theodore Hertzel, an assimilated Jew who claimed he had no Jewish identiy after he saw Charles Dryfus publicly humiliated and found guilty of a crime because he was Jewish. It was at this time Hertzel found his Jewish identity and formed the Zionist movement.

Zionism is a political doctrine restoring, and maintaining a Jewish homeland in Palestine. Israel is the foundation of Judaism and to return, or go to Israel is a dream to many, said Santis.

Zionism was began after years of persecution, humiliation, and strife. It took 2000 years of endless expellations, inquisitions, and crusades before the movement was started.

To help UMass better understand the culture there will be an Israeli Expo in the Cape Cod Lounge November 20-21. The expo will feature handicrafts, educational material, kibbutz programs, food, and movies. There will also be fund raising for the Israeli Emergency Fund Nov. 7-21. The money will be sent to community centers, schools, books, and day care centers in Israel, organizers said.

An important aspect of the meeting was if members of any of these groups are formed they can pass the knowledge to others. Discussion groups for self education will be taking place in the next two weeks, Avi Lev a member said.

In the weeks to come, and throughout the winter, many speakers, and lecturers will be sponsored by the Lovers for Zionism as well as through Hillel and the Resources Judica.

Santis is also involved iith Aliyah, a group that helps those wanting to immigrate to or visit Israel. John Davis, the director of the organization in Boston, will be speaking on campus in the future.

The help of Israeli students are needed in the discussion groups, but so far few have responded. Anyone in the five college area interested, are urged to contact one of these groups.

Senate seeks Third World, dorm reps

By JON KLEIN
AND DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

Business was slow at the student senate last night as the 1977-1978 session began with the seating of newly elected senators.

Numerous seats are still empty as several dorms are holding rerun elections, and some Third World seats were contested and remain unfilled.

The senate turned down a request for funds by a student group called the People's Organization for Religious and Civil Liberties. A spokesman for the group said their purpose is to challenge compulsory education laws so as to give parents more options for educating their children. Calling public schooling a form of social control, the group's spokesman said the current laws would be challenged in the Supreme Court.

The Senate passed a motion supporting National Armband Day on October 12th which has been organized in support of the May Fourth Coalition at Kent State. Thirty dollars was given to the Revolutionary Student Brigade to make 1,000 red armbands to be distributed to UMass students on Oct. 12th.

In other business, the senate elected members for the nominating subcommittee of the Governmental Affairs Committee. The chosen members are senators Betty Doyle, Jack O'Toole, Paul Cronin, and acting chairperson Carolyn Yee.

Some controversy, however, arose in the senate, after the third world caucus challenged the seating of two white students elected last week to third world seats. The pair, Richard Soldone and Angela Valu, were elected as write-in candidates in the contested election held September 26th and 27th. Each received three votes. Following a debate and meeting with the third world caucus the pair resigned their seats.

The Third World Steering Committee will appoint the remaining six seats—which must be approved by the Senate.

Another white third world candidate, Craig Sherwood who received 110 votes, was unchallenged and seated last night.

Stan Kinard, Coordinator of third world affairs, said Sherwood was not opposed because "a significant number of people voted for him."

Collective reps can't sit

By SUSAN O'NEIL
Collegian Staff

The student government association judiciary yesterday prevented the commuter collective, pending a full hearing Tuesday, from seating new members elected earlier this week.

A temporary restraining order was ordered because election advertisements September 26th and 27th listed the wrong dates for nomination deadlines and elections, according to student attorney general Paul Yanowitch. "Because of these mistakes," Yanowitch said, "some people were denied their right to vote."

Reaction from the Commuter Collective was negative. Commuter Collective staff member Lucian Bruno called the attorney general's ruling "a publicity stunt". "What Yanowitch is doing is totally unnecessary," Bruno said. "We would have been more happy to sit down and discuss any irregularities." Bruno said she was unaware of the decision until contacted by the Collegian last night.

The advertisements stated that nominations closed Friday, September 29 and elections were to be held Monday, October 4 and Tuesday, October 5.

"The injunction was ordered at 6:30 last night, so we couldn't get in touch with anyone from the Commuter Collective," Yanowitch said. The order will affect twelve seats in the Commuter Collective.

In addition, all SGA elections require six days between nomination closings and elections, and a Commuter Collective spokesperson to be elected at large.

"None of these procedures were followed and that may constitute illegalities. The Commuter Collective Constitution isn't on file in the SGA office, so we don't know what procedures they followed, if any," said Yanowitch.

The judiciary will either order new elections or let things stand as they are, Yanowitch said.

Frederick Thompson, a Freshman operations major, was elected Stockbridge Senate Vice-president at the regular biweekly senate meeting last night.

Kevin Walsh, chairperson of Ways and Means, informed the Senate of a possible Stockbridge Fair to be held this fall. Every major in the school must submit their proposal for a representative booth to the Senate office, Rm. 432 Student Union Building by Oct. 12th. All profits will be used to support future Senate activities, he said.

"I hope this fair will build in the coming years," said Geoff Macduff, Senate President. He urged the Ways and Means Committee to follow through with this endeavor.

The Educational Qualities committee is collecting addresses of possible employers for use by freshman requiring placement jobs next spring. This job reference file should be available for use by January intersession.

Tickets for the Stockbridge Halloween party, Oct. 27th in Grinnel Arena, go on sale Tuesday, Oct. 12th in the Senate office.

The Stockbridge Fall Picnic held September 29th, netted a profit of $135.

Time of the next Senate meeting, scheduled for Oct. 19th was changed to 7:30 p.m. the STOSO committee will meet prior to it at 6:30, 174 CC.

MIT prof says Soviets will copy new missile

By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff

An M.I.T. physicist said yesterday it is "foolhardy" for the U.S. to build additional cruise missles.

Dr. Kosta Tsipis, speaking as part of the Dept. of physics and astronomy series, told a crowd of about 50 persons in Hasbrouck auditorium that continued production of the missile would force the U.S. into building a defense system against the missile.

Because the Soviets have always duplicated American defense efforts, Tsipsis said, they would likely begin construction of their own cruise missiles. America would then be forced to build a defense against the Soviet missiles, he said.

The cost of building such a system, he said, would be between $30 and $40 million dollars.

There are two kinds of cruise missiles, explained Tsipis: "strategic" cruise missiles (those that can travel long distance) and the "tactical" cruise missiles (those that are designed for short range). They are identical in shape and appearance, said Tsipis. Because they are identical there is no way of limiting one without limiting the other, he said.

Another stumbling block in limiting the missiles, said Tsipis is they do not need a specific launching pad and therefore are easily concealed. The missiles can be launched from submarines, land, or aircraft.

Another stumbling block in limiting the missiles, said Tsipis is they do not need a specific launching pad and therefore are easily concealed. The missiles can be launched from submarines, land, or aircraft.

Tsipis said when cruise missiles are launched from a sub its position can be detected for about 60 miles due to the noise, smoke and surface disturbances they make upon leaving the water.

Tsipis said, "to me it is foolhardy to take a sub, our most vital defense mechanism and shoot these missiles from it."

A sub can only launch four of these missiles every 30 minutes. The same sub could fire up to 16 ballistic missiles in the same amount of time and it would not have to venture into territorial waters to launch the ballistic missiles.

Cruise missiles must be powered and guided for their entire flight he said as opposed to ballistic missiles which only need power and guidance for the first five minutes. This, he said, makes for a greater chance of deviation from target with the cruise missiles.

Ballistic missiles can travel a greater distance in 20 minutes than cruise missiles can in nearly six hours, he said.

Tsipis said a cruise missile attack is uncertain because of their slow speed. The attack would depend on the defense capabilities of the attacked nation.

A ballistic attack in the absence of an anti-ballistic system cannot be prevented from reaching its target, he said.

Tsipis said if the U.S. launched a primary cruise missile attack against the Soviets they may very well act with a ballistic attack against us. Not only would they be likely to do this, expecting the worst, but they would have time to "think and sweat" about it before they decided.

Greek takes contest crown

By STEVEN POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

Dana Cohen, a 19 year old business major from Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity is the winner of the 4th annual "Mr. Greek" contest held at Sigma Delta Tau sorority.

Cohen, competing with five other contestants at SDT was crowned as part of entertainment for the SDT rush program.

Rush Chairperson Arlene LaRette, who organized and produced last night's show said that the contest, now in its fourth year was a real success. "We had over 30 people here watching and everyone seemed to have had a great time."

Each contestant, from area fraternities had his chance to charm the audience through song and a short question and answer session.

"I was shaving last night when I thought of my song, along with cutting my face," Cohen said. "At first I thought the show was intended to be a joke, but it really isn't. I had a great time out in front of the group of sisters, as did the other guys who were in the program," he said.

The men enjoyed refreshments before their debuts while the women rushing the house had another chance to see the sorority.

Cohen was crowned before a throng of cheering people, and shared his prize, a 6 pack of Heineken beer with the other five contestants.

Accompanying Cohen was PKA's social chairman Cary Benjamin. He was on hand to lend support and watch his house member win. "The show ran well; it was fun. It's always good to see the crown come home to PKA," he said. Dan Smith from Beta Kappa Phi won the contest last year.

Greeks—sororities aren't sexist

By SHARON STENTIFORD
Collegian Staff

Sororities at UMass attacked by some feminists as sexist are actually fostering feminist principles, according to recent interviews with "Greek" women.

"How can you call a group of 40 or 50 women living together, developing such qualities as leadership individualism and love anti-feminist? Sisterhood is the common bond ... within all sororities," said Leslie Johnson, a 20 year old junior Nutrition major living at Alpha Chi Omega.

The Greek community donated $200 toward International Women's Week last semester.

"We take our sisterhood seriously," said Marjorie Lewis, a 21 year old senior communications studies major living at Iota Gamma Upsilon (IGU). She denied accusations by some sorority critics that sororities are the "last vestiges of sexism."

Seated on a couch in IGU's comfortable living room, Lewis stressed the importance placed upon academic achievement at her sorority. She said that "helping each other out toward career and future goals" is common practice among the sorority women she knows.

Lewis said unlike the "women's libbers" whom she feels may lose their sense of individuality by getting "too involved in their one or two causes," sorority sisters "lose nothing" of themselves.

Women are drawn to Greek living by their search for friendship, security, and unity, said Diane Hanley, president of Tri Sigma.

Momentarily diverted from her soap opera, Hanley said, "We're just like everybody else."

Elisabeth "Buzz" Steinmeyer, president of IGU, said "because the university campus is so large the girls ... look for something smaller, closer and more stable."

"It's a much more personal life than living in a dorm or off campus," said Susan Lentine, a senior art major who has lived at IGU since September. "Here I'm living with people I chose to live with," she said.

During "Rush" time university women may choose one of nine campus sororities they would most like to join. The "houses" then select new members. If the decision is mutual, they move in. Steinmeyer said she could not reveal the process by which her sorority selected their members, and didn't know how the other sororities selected theirs.

Concerning the non-existence of third world sorority and fraternity members on campus, Johnson said, "Some people feel that the Greek area is not receptive to third world or minority students, but in fact we extend an open invitation to all university women and it's up to them to take advantage of it ... we don't seek any one particular group."

Both Hanley and Steinmeyer spoke of the unpopularity of sororities in this part of the country compared to other regions, where Hanley claims "people are banging the doors down to get in."

Steinmeyer said of the East Coast, "People are more radical and more liberal ... they don't seem to like conformity." She added conformity has not been a part of her Greek life. "You're learning to live with other people who are different from yourself ... You work harder to maintain your individuality."

"This campus seems more negative toward fraternities and sororities than other campuses," said Hanley.

Steinmeyer guessed that most people think sorority women are "wealthy girls ... party-flirtatious girls who are looking for a frat man to marry."

She conceded this was probably the case in the 1950's and early 1960's when women were not so career-oriented as they are today.

thorough search," according to Committee Chairman Gavin D. Robertson.

"Our choice should come from within the University community," said Robertson.

Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who is reported to be among candidates being considered for directing the U.S. Geological Survey, last month said he would not actively seek the University presidency.

In other action, Chairman Robert J. Spiller of the Committee on Grounds and Buildings recommended the trustees appoint a delegation from the board to plea with the state legislature for the funding needed to renovate office space at 100 Arlington St. to house the president and other Univeristy administrators.

Since the legislature last summer refused to allocate money in the University annual budget for renewing the five year lease at the One Washington Mall presidential office, the trustees decided to move the office to University property at 100 Arlington St. According to the trustees, the building is currently in need of renovation.

Until the funds are allocated for the renovation, the trustees are arranging with the landlord at One Washington Mall to have tenancy-at-will, whereby the office can be rented on a month-by-month basis.

The trustees approved the fiscal year 1979 capital outlay budget which allocates $7,350,000 for the Amherst campus.

The Boston and Worcester campuses received $6,175,000 of the total $13,525,000 budget. The money approved will be used for equipment, buildings and grounds on all three campuses.

Boston in dark after power dies

BOSTON [UPI] — A power blackout last night cast a large portion of Boston into darkness.

Police said the Back Bay, Park Square, downtown theatre district, South End and Kenmore Square areas were affected. There were no immediate reports of looting, police said.

Sgt. Albert Dennehey said "thre or four square miles" of the city was affected by the blackout.

"People are walking around in the streets with matches and candles," said one Newbury Street resident in the Back Bay.

Police said a manhole explosion was reported on Stuart Street in the theatre district at the time the blackout began.

Police said they believed the explosion was caused in a "trunk line" which transmits electricity between the South End and Back Bay sections.

Boston Edison Co. officials would not confirm this, however. "We think it was a faulty transformer somewhere in town," a spokesman said.

"We're investigating the cause of the blackout right now. We don't know exactly what caused it," he said.

The spokesman said all the company's computers were out and no estimate on how many residents were affected was immediately available. It was not known at press time when power would be restored.

Park Square includes the city's "Combat Zone," — the adult entertainment section — as well as many legitimate theaters. The Back Bay area is heavily populated by students and young people.

The lights went out in the 52-story Prudential Building in the Back Bay, the second tallest building in the city.

Actor Frank Langella, starring in the play "Dracula" in the theatre district, jokingly told a sold-out audience, "Obviously there are forces much greater than mine working."

The blackout struck midway through the play. The final act was played with actors and actresses holding flashlights on stage in place of floodlights.

The cast later applauded the audience for their patience.

An 19th-floor resident of a Back Bay apartment building said, "It's a weird sight. There are lights in Cambridge and other parts of Boston, but here it's all black."

Police said the blackout was first reported shortly before 10:30 last night.

Telephone lines to Boston Edison, which supplies service to the area, were jammed with calls for the next half hour. Even police said they could not reach Edison officials for word on how long the blackout was expected to last.

Police said they believed businesses and residences as far west as Commonwealth Avenue in Kenmore Square were affected by the blackout.

Psychiatrist testifies for Zamora

MIAMI [AP] — A teen-ager who shot and killed a woman neighbor after she found him ransacking her home had been "conditioned" by watching violent television shows and was merely "reacting to the words he heard on TV," a psychiatrist testified yesterday.

"Television gives a distored sense of violence, because when one sees that many killings, the death of a human being is no more than swatting a fly," said Dr. Michael Gilbert, testifying for the defense in the first-degree murder of 15-year-old Ronny Zamora.

He said Zamora reacted subliminally when Elinor Haggart, 83, surprised him and 14-year-old Darrell Agrella in her home on June 4 and threatened to call the police. Agrella also is charged in the slaying but is to be tried separately.

Zamora "had never even held a gun before," Gilbert said. "It was merely a conditioned response when he pulled the trigger. As far as Ronny is concerned, the gun went off accidentally."

Gilbert was expected to be the last witness presented by defense attorney Ellis Rubin, who has argued that Zamora was insane at the time of the slaying — driven to insanity by virtual addiction to television crime shows such as "Kojak" and "Police Woman."

The major portion of the defense case was to have been built on the relationship between television violence and real-life violence.

Rubin said an episode of "Kojak," which Zamora's mother testified was the boy's favorite show, bore a resemblence to the slaying of Mrs. Haggart.

Supreme Court on maternity benefits

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court was asked yesterday to decide whether pregnant workers may be denied sick leave benefits and whether their bosses can tell them when to begin unpaid maternity leave.

In a pair of sex discrimination cases that could affect millions of working women, the justices also must consider whether a company can force a woman to forfeit some seniority benefits because she has taken maternity leave.

The individual women in both cases who argued before the court yesterday won in the lower courts when their employers' policies were found to violate the Civil Rights Acts of 1964.

Last December, however, the Supreme Court ruled in a case involving the General Electric Co. that an employer does not have to include pregnancy disability payments in a health insurance program offering protection for numerous other disabilities.

A 6-3 majority of the justices found that pregnancy discrimination is not necessarily illegal discrimination based on sex.

That reasoning both mystified and enraged womens' groups. Despite the protests of feminists, for two hours yesterday the court was urged to again apply that rationale.

Israelis and Arabs can't agree

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — There is still no basis of agreement between Israel and the Arabs for resuming Middle East peace talks in Geneva, U.S. officials said Wednesday.

Both Israel and the Arabs agree that the Palestinians should take part in any renewed peace talks in Geneva but there is still sharp disagreement on who those Palestinians should be, the officials said.

"We do not have an agreed basis for going to Geneva", the U.S. officials said.

The official said that the idea of an all-Arab delegation is part of a secret U.S.-Israeli "working paper" which is now being circulated by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to Egypt, Syria and Jordan.

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, who conferred for nearly six hours Tuesday with U.S. officials, including President Carter, said Wednesday that he would recommend that Israel agree to the working paper ideas.

However, Dayan added two important conditions that were in direct conflict with the Arab positions. "We will not have the Palestine Liberation Organization at the conference," Dayan said. "And we will not negotiate a Palestinian state."

One U.S. official who took part in the talks with Dayan said, "It is important to correct the impression that we have an agreed basis for going to Geneva. We did make some progress, but we are still in negotiations."

The United States and Soviet Union, in a joint declaration over the weekend, said the Palestinians must be included in any peace talks and that the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians must be considered. The latter statement worried Israeli officials who have adamantly refused to consider creation of a Palestinian state on their borders.

However, Israeli government officials in Tel Aviv said that assurances given by Carter to Dayan Tuesday had resolved much of their worry that the United States planned to force Israel to accept the PLO as a negotiating partner.

"We view with satisfaction the assurances given and the statement this morning has raised hopes and therefore it is viewed with satisfaction," a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

A government source said Israel's sharp criticism of Washington following the Soviet-American communique nevertheless "is still valid" because of the reference to "the legitimate rights of te Palestinians."

Egypt's President Anwar Sadat sent a letter to Carter following his U.N. speech, in which Carter reiterated America's stand for the "legitimate rights of Palestinians." A Cairo newspaper reported Wednesday the letter accepted a U.S. compromise on the Palestinian representation problem.

The newspaper Al Gomhouria said that in a letter Sadat dropped Egypt's opposition to proposals for an all-Arab delegation which would include Palestinians. Egypt in the past had insisted each Arab country be represented separately, including the Palestinians.

However, Sadat insisted that PLO members be among the Palestinians on any all-Arab delegation.

The U.S. officials in New York said there was a possible way around the direct confrontation of the PLO issue, but he refused to say what the method might be.

Nobel prize gets criticism

STOCKHOLM, Sweden [UPI] — This year's Nobel prizes are being announced amid renewed criticism that the awards have outlived their usefulness.

The literature prize was announced Thursday, Oct. 6. The peace prize — awarded by the Nobel committee of the Norwegian parliament — will be announced Monday, Oct. 10. The physics prize will be announced Tuesday, Oct. 11, the medicine prize, Thursday, Oct. 13 and the economics prize on Friday, Oct. 14.

Recent articles in the foreign and Swedish press particularly criticized the science and economics prizes. And after last year's awards, 1974 economics laureate Gunnar Myrdal said since national economics are a subjective science, the economics prize should be abolished.

Erik Lundberg, chairman of the Royal Swedish Sciece Academy's economics committee, said in an interview with the Swedish business magazine Veckans Affarer that he felt "secret sympathy" with Myrdal's views.

"We don't always like our job," Lundberg said. "One can understand the critics saying the prize statutes smell of the 19th century."

The 1977 Nobel prizes are worth $145,000. The weakening swedish economy means the prizes will be worth less than last year. Although each prize increased by 19,000 Swedish kronor this year, three devaluations reduced its value to $145,000 compared to $150,000 in 1976.

"The prize would have to be 1.2 million kronor if you wanted the real value of the 1901 prize," said Lars Gyllensten, permanent secretary of the Swedish Academy.

No java secretary wants jobless pay

WATERLOO, Iowa [UPI] — Diana Becker, who was fired from her secretarial job because she refused to make coffee for her bosses and co-workers, has filed for unemployment compensation.

Becker, a secretary for 10 years with the Waterloo Community School District, was dismissed last week for failing to perform her "assigned responsibilities."

Although the termination letter did not mention her refusal to make coffee, Becker said she was told a week earlier she would be fired if she did not take her regular turn at making coffee.

If the school district refuses to pay the unemployment compensation, a state hearing officer would be called in to rule on the matter, state officials said.

Becker said she is fighting her dismissal because coffee-making was not included in her job description.

Panama and U.S. treaty claims clash

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The acting head of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said yesterday the Senate may reject the Panama Canal treaties unless it gets answers to troubling questions raised in a leaked State Department cable.

Acting chairman Frank Church, D-Idaho, issued his warning after Sen. Robert Dole cited the confidential, potentially damaging document as proof that Panama denies U.S. claims that the treaties guarantee U.S. defense and security rights in the waterway.

"Let's be clear," Church said. "The Senate is not likely to ratify these treaties if crucial provisions are being interpreted differently by Panama and the United States. This is a matter which must be clarified."

'Red box' suspect nabbed by FBI

BOSTON [UPI] — The FBI yesterday announced the arrest of Joseph Middleton of New York City on charges of violating a federal fraud-by-wire statute.

Middleton, who was arrested in Otis, Mass., was accused of using a "red box" to make free long-distance calls to New York City from a pay telephone in western Massachusetts, the FBI said.

A "red box" enables a caller to bypass New England Telephone Co. machinery used in collecting tolls, the announcement said.

Middleton, who was later released on bond by a federal magistrate in Springfield, faces a maximum of five years in prison and a $1,000 fine, the FBI said.

Post Office adopts next day delivery

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Postal Service announced yesterday that its express mail service, used experimentally since 1970 to provide guaranteed same-day or next-day delivery in selected cities, will become permanent starting Sunday.

The Postal Service said it will be the first major new class of mail adopted since air mail was introduced in 1918.

Express mail provides fast service with a postage-back guarantee if the delivery is late — excepting only if the delay is caused by a strike or flight cancellation.

Begun as an experimental overnight delivery service between Washington and New York City, express mail now is offered in 400 cities. The Postal Service said the network is being rapidly expanded to cover 900 cities.

Iceburgs might reduce storm threats

AMES, Iowa [UPI] — Huge icebergs hauled by superships off coastlines could reduce the fury of tropical storms and hurricanes which cost Americans nearly $1 billion damage a year, a weather expert said yesterday.

Dr. Joanne Simpson, professor of environmental sciences and former director of the U.S. Project Stormfury Hurricane Modification Program, said the theory is on target but the technique will need perfection before any nation can claim the ability to tame nature.

"The method has promise," she said in an interview at the First International Conference on Iceberg Utilization. "But at least at present, it also has its problems.

The scientific basis of the proposal is simple. Studies in a 20-year period indicate the impact of major tropical storms has been lessened when storm systems crossed sea water cooled by as little as 2-to-5 degrees centigrade.

Republicans push for huge tax cut

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Republican leaders asked President Carter yesterday to join them in a push for an immediate 30 per cent, across-the-board tax cut.

The cut, they said, would pump $43.4 billion back into the economy and open up 1.2 million new jobs.

House GOP leader John Rhodes and Senate leader Howard Baker said in a joint statement Carter should "join us now in calling for a tax cut instead of waiting for an election year."

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., and Sen. William Roth, R-Del, authors of the measure, said it was patterned after a similar cut President John F. Kennedy got through Congress in 1963.

The bill would cut individual and business taxes 10 per cent a year for three years, effective with the 1977 income year. Roth said the impact for a family of four with an income of $8,000 would be a 90 per cent tax cut and save the family $108 in taxes.

The average, across-the-board individual cut would be about 30 per cent over the three years with the heaviest impact on low income.

Loan industry asks protection

WASHINGTON [AP] — The savings and loan industry opened a campaign yesterday to protect its massive inner-city mortgage investment with a call for the federal government to partially insure home improvement loans made in some urban areas.

The U.S. League of Savings Association also urged a tax exemption for profits on rehabilitation investments in city neighborhoods.

Investors and the federal government should stop concentrating on costly new home construction and spend more money on rehabilitation, the league recommended.

The league's report disputed the claim that the mortgage industry is to blame for urban housing problems.

Critics have charged that in recent year, many financial institutions have refused to make loans in central city neighborhoods, thus hastening their decline. The practice is called "redlining".

But the league argued that "The tightening of mortgage credit in older city neighborhoods usually follows rather than leads the decline in both the quality of life and property value."

"It is unproductive to assess blame on an individual industry," the league said.

The report was issued on the same day that President Carter toured New York's blighted South Bronx. Carter, standing in the rubble of a tenement, ordered Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Secretary Patricia Harris to study what "ought to be salvaged and what ought to be torn down" in the devastated slum area.

But the President also said, "We couldn't expect federal money to do it all."

The league urged that government officials, private investors and city residents work together to recreate stable city neighborhoods where investment would bring adequate profits.

"Cities can be revitalized only through a coordinated neighborhood approach", said league president John A. Hardin.

Hardin said the 4,461 savings and loans institutions in his league "hold nearly one-half of the mortgage debts on single family homes in urban areas."

President visits U.N.

NEW YORK [UPI] — President Carter wound up his two-day visit to the United Nations yesterday with an optimistic forecast that there would be a Middle East peace conference opening in Geneva.

Carter told reporters the joint U.S.-Israeli agreement emerging from a long evening of talks with Israeli Foreign Minister Moyshe Dayan has "enhanced the possibility of a Geneva Peace Conference."

Carter said the agreement was "very productive" in aligning policy on how to remove roadblocks to the projected conference between Israel and her Arab neighbors.

But, he added, "We've obviously got a difficult job."

The President was scheduled to fly back to Washington yesterday night.

His two days in New York were jammed with meetings with U.N. dignitaries and government officials in an unprecedented promotion of the world body by a U.S. president.

In his one side trip from the international scene, he drove north through Manhattan and across the Harlem River Wednesday morning to tour the south Bronx — one of America's urban eyesores and human trouble spots.

In referring to the residents of the blighted area near Yankee Stadium, the President said, "I think they know we are concerned."

Later at the United Nations, he signed a pair of U.N. covenants aimed at guaranteeing human rights the world over. He called it "a tangible step toward peace among nations and the protection of human rights among nations."

In a 15-minute ceremony in the U.N. Economic and Social Council chamber, Carter and U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young signed the two documents with black and gold pens. Carter said he would seek their ratification by Congress "at the earliest possible date."

One of the documents binds the signers to take steps toward a series of rights — the right to work, to form and join trade unions, to social security, to an adequate standard of living and to education.

The second obligates governments to guarantee their peoples right along the lines of the U.S. Bill of Rights — to life, liberty thought, religion, freedom of movement and residence, legal trials and peaceful assembly.

At a lunch at the U.S. Mission across the street from the United Nations, Carter told a gathering of Asian and Middle Eastern dignitaries the United States would like to establish diplomatic relations "without delay with the nations with whom we've had animosity."

Among the guests were the heads of U.N. delegations to China and Vietnam.

"We have a changing relationship in Southeast Asia, and we have tried to repair damages as a result of war and to stretch out the hand of friendship with those countries with whom in the past we've had animosity," Carter said in a toast.

House bill will up tax

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday finished drafting a bill to sharply raise Social Security taxes over the next decade and set up a new method of computing benefits for generations to come.

The measure is expected to receive final, formal approval by the committee Thursday and then go to the House floor.

It is designed to put the system back on a sound financial basis well into the next century. Without some such legislation, the Social Security retirement fund would run out of money between 1983 and 1985; the disability fund, as early as 1979.

The measure attempts to insure that each future generation of retirees gets benefits which are about the same proportion of his working pay as the present generation.

The bill also would:

— Bring federal, state and local government workers and employes of non-profit organizations under mandatory Social Security coverage in 1982.

— Raise the amount of wages retirees can earn before losing part of their Social Security benefits, from the present $3,000 to $4,000 next year and $4,500 in 1979. The increase would apply only to retirees 65 and over.

— Eliminate instances in which present law treats men and women differently. For example, a man who takes care of a disabled child could receive benefits that now go only to women.

Beginning next year, the bill would raise Social Security payroll taxes equally for employers and employes — above and beyond increases already scheduled under existing law.

Natural gas cost may rise

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The average family heating a home with natural gas would pay at least $18 more for the fuel next year under President Carter's plan and $58 more if the Senate deregulation bill takes effect, estimates showed yesterday.

A Congressional Budget Office study shows it will cost $260 to heat a typical house with natural gas this year if the gas comes from interstate pipelines, which are federally regulated.

Under Carter's energy program, natural gas supplies in all markets would be regulated in the future and gas prices would rise gradually.

The budget office study estimates his plan would hike average annual bills to $278 next year, $280 in 1980 and $296 in 1985, not counting inflation expected to be about 6 per cent a year.

If natural gas prices were totally deregulated — all federal controls removed — the budget office estimates a homeowner's costs would rise to $361 next year, $390 in 1980 and $455 by 1985, again not including inflation.

Politics of sewage

According to Ambrose Bierce, in his masterpiece, The Devil's Dictionary, politics is "A strife of interests masquerading as a contest of principles." A senator, says Bierce, is a "fortunate bidder in a contest of votes." The public is informed of the activity of politics by the reporter — "a writer who guesses his way to the truth and dispels it with a tempest of words." The reporter's observations and opinions are printed by the press — "A might magnifying machine which, with the aid of "we" and printer's inke, changes the squeak of a mouse into the roar of an editorial lion, on whose utterances the nation (presumably) hangs with bated breath."

jim paulin

Ambrose Bierce is one of my literary heroes. However, this column is not intended to be merely a Bierceian treat to the UMass readership. It is about one of my favorite topics and activities, politics, in general, and student politics in particular. Mr. Bierce provides a good framework in which to express my views of politics, though, particularly the more absurd and ridiculous.

The Student Senate is presently dominted by liberalradical activists. "Radicalism — The conservatism of tomorrow injected into the affairs to today." The definition of a liberal is included in Bierce's definition of a "Conservative, n, A statesman who is enamored of existing evils, as distinguished from the Liberal, who wishes to replace them with others." There are a few conservatives, but just a handful in the great and general senate of the University of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The student senate is where a student has an opportunity to act like an asshole in behalf of the hundred to several hundred constituents (assholes?) who elected her-him (her precedes him alphabetically). I myself nearly had the opportunity to be one of those elected assholes, but I was washed up by a simple sheet of slate. You see, Messrs. Bluestein and Tarpinian came up with the supposedly brilliant tactic of waiting until two days before the election to put together the omnipotent union slate. Every one of the 22 sedimentary layers that was not included as a write-in was elected. However, at the time I was living everywhere and nowhere, and kingmakers Bluestein and Tarpinian were unable to contact me to see if I would consent to running on the slate. But not to worry, I still attend senate meetings and act like and sometimes display an asshole.

However, as compensation I suppose, I won a seat as a representative ("A gentleman who looks after the interests of his constituents — as long as they don't conflict with his.") to the Commuter Collective. Unfortunately, according to lame duck attorney general Paul Yanowich, as he hovered above my typewriter, the student judiciary, upon his instigation (call out the instigators for there's something in the air. And you know that it's right, because the revolution's here." Yanowitch is a revolutionary, declared the commuter election invalid due to slipshod management of the election and inadequate and inaccurate advertising of the dates and hours of the polling place. I never would have been aware of the fact that the polling place was in front of the Hatch, had I not stumbled upon it one nondescript Monday morn.

MOVE to dedicate the sewage treatment plant to Sir Thomas Crapper, the inventor of the flush toilet, the tool that transport to the treatment center its feed. (Or maybe Lenny Bruce ... "You dirty filthy Commie toilet!")

Boy, but I tell you, Saturday night I took a midnight stroll to the treatment center, walked out on one of the bridges over the big concrete filtration vats, and I felt just like Brian DeLima addressing the Student Senate — Let's have some order, shit, and remember, each one of you represents over a hundred assholes collectively, so respect the rules of order. There's a saying among civil engineers: It might be shit to you, but it's bread and butter to us.

Actually, this is somewhat an inaccurate analogy, since the senate is composed (decomposed?) of less human shit and more bullshit, but that's common knowledge. Strange, that in Western civilization, throwing the bullshit and simultaneously creating laws is considered symbolic of a degree of civilization and democracy. Some people have told me, though, when they read my columns they get real shitfaced and that I can sling with the best of them, which I suppose makes me an indicted co-conspirator along with that distinguished pile of students who meet in the Campus Center every Wednesday night at 7 p.m. and sometimes carry on into Thursday. With recesses at the Bluewall and TOC, it's often a long day's journey into night.

More than only human

Three times this year I've gone through a metamorphosis, a change that has set me apart from the rest of my friends and associates. Three times this year I've temporarily lost the use of my left leg because of an injury to my knee. Three times I've been temporarily handicapped.

Each time, after at first receiving the condolences and encouraging words of my friends, I was jokingly called a cripple or one-legged. Of course, each time, nothing of this was considered serious by me or others. Obviously I was still a whole person and my friends did not run off in horror or fear because of the temporary difference between us.

jerry rogers

Unfortunately, we are not usually as comfortable with other handicapped people, whether their handicaps are mental, physical, emotional or some combination thereof. Many of us have lived our lives shying away from amputees, mentally retarded people or victims of a crippling disease. This fear is rooted in our own insecurity about how we should deal with these people; and a component of that fear is the inability of non-handicapped people to understand the biological, social and environmental reasons why people suffer from mental, physical and emotional handicaps.

Racial, sexual and socio-economic differences between people yield perplexing and recurring problems we have not yet been able to solve. Yet long ago we rejected, for the most part, the fear that accompanied the recognition of these differences as antithetical to the eradication of the problems resulting from them.

A byproduct of the efforts made to eradicate the problems arising from sexism, racism and socio-economic differences has been the stratification and categorization of human beings. This categorization makes us either black people or white, men or women, rich or poor, but makes no judgement (or shouldn't anyway) concerning the relative humanity of these groups.

The categories in which we place handicapped people have, unfortunately, very often shackled them as subhuman. Implicitly (and sometimes explicitly) we deny that handicapped people have many, if not all, of the needs, wants and desires that we allegedly non-handicapped people have.

We rarely deny the humanity of a cancer patient or a diabetic or a drug addict. Many of us in fact champion legislation and medical work that deals with their special needs, which are additional to their needs as human beings and not in substitution. An important reason for this is the wealth of understanding we have for the biological and environmental causes of cancer, drug addiction, etc.

To deny the humanity of the handicapped or their needs as human beings simply because we do not understand their afflictions is a crime steeped in ignorance and fear.

Through its institutions our society promotes and reinforces the idea that a dynamic human being must be independent, strongly individualistic and flawless. It is imperative that the validity of this image be vehemently rejected and the stigmatisms attached to those labelled handicapped be swept aside in favor of their acceptance as total human beings.

Commercializing Kent State

By BILL FITZGERALD

Last Friday night I was sort of proud of myself. While most of the school was spending their time at parties, I was enduring a fifteen hour bus ride on my way to Kent State. I was to attend a rally and demonstration against the proposed gym on the site where, on May 4, 1970 four students were killed and nine wounded by National Guardsmen, just for having enough sense to protest the war. I thought that I was finally doing something good for UMass, or at least getting involved.

I had reasons for supporting this cause that no one could argue with. In 1970, the killings at Kent State could have happened at UMass. It could have been your sister being killed, it could have been your brother doing the shooting. When you look at it this way, it becomes awfully close to home. Also, killing people for something they believe in seems to me to be one of the worst crimes someone can commit.

commentary

Now, seven years later, it looks like someone is trying to wipe out the memory of the incident. It started with classes being held on May 4, when there were none in earlier years. Then a gym was proposed for the site of the killings. There were other sites more appropriate for the gym, land was bought just for that purpose. So as I got off the bus Saturday morning, I felt pretty good. I was doing something constructive, and I had a good cause.

Then the rally started.

I don't remember the order of the speakers, who they were, or all of what they said. After awhile, they all sounded the same — like a broken record. Some started out well, telling us what actually happened and about other injustices, most of which I didn't know about. They all seemed to say, "Well the reason all this happened was because of the capitalistic system that runs this country. If we all band together and destroy it, we can create a communist government and nothing like that will happen again."

I remember one speaker clearly. "There will come the time," he said, "when we will all band together and overcome the oppression of this capitalistic government." The reason that I'm against this is that one, couldn't something like this happen under any form of government? (and possibly more under the communist systems of today). And two, I would be against any political party that would use such an issue for their own purposes.

What does overthrowing the government have to do with the Kent State killings? Instead of trying to convince the people not to forget the incident or let it happen again, the speakers seemed more interested in getting everyone to come back in October to create some sort of communist youth alliance. It was a weird commercialization of a deep, emotional issue. If I had been one of the four dead students, I would have said, "Let them build the gym. They are only using us to get their own point across."

More on Kent State

To the Editor:

Enough Kent State!

Chris Smith

Keeping the truth intact

To the Editor:

Stephen Mathieu's article on Kent State [10-4] was most discouraging indeed. He has totally misrepresented the issue using a kind of adulterated terminology which rivals the debaucheries of our most vaunted [sic] politicians. Opposing the gym does not breed "hatred and bitterness," it breeds an awareness of injustice. We are not opposing the gym, we are opposing the gym site. Why build a gym which violates history when 17 acres had already been bought for the purpose of building it?

He claims that "nothing has been learned from history" when obviously he knows nothing about history. If he did he would realize that our interpretations of the past form the basis of our assumptions about what is happening today. Mr. Mathieu's lack of a sense of history is quite evident in his misinformed opinions.

The fact is, the truth about Kent State is not yet known and the case is heading back into the courts. Building a gym on that site would serve only to destroy people's exhibit number one.

Preserving the site of the Kent State shootings is not "narrow minded" nor is it simply for "keeping the memory alive." It is rather to keep the truth and reality of our country's history intact. Tell me, Mr. Mathieu, why we don't turn Emily Dickinson's house into an old folks' home or continue housing developments up Bunker Hill? Obviously Mr. Mathieu and his sympathizers are being very selective about the type of history they would preserve and are quite willing to blot out [with a gym] the existence of a history with which they are not at all comfortable.

Jeffrey Thrasher

Gym termed "a good thing"

To the Editor:

I think the idea of dedicating the proposed gymnasium at Kent State to those killed or wounded in the National Guard incident is an excellent one.

Obviously a lot of people feel that the building of the gym is a move to try and forget the shootings ever occurred. I can't make myself believe that the Kent State Administration is trying to cover up anything other than a vacant lot.

There is nothing that anybody could do to that land to make me forget about the massacre. I could understand the controversy if the National Guard wanted to build an armory on the site, but a gym is a good thing.

Why not help the living students while at the same time remembering the dead?

George Warren

Gallo boycott still necessary

To the Editor:

Students and other citizens are often accused of having short memories. The intensity of interest in Kent State and Jackson State suggests otherwise.

However, the absence of news concerning the ongoing struggle of the United Farm Workers and the high volume of Gallo Wine at all package stores suggests the need for a gentle reminder. The boycott is still necessary. The fact that Teamsters have given up their ill-advised competition with U.F.W. has not softened the hearts of the growers and the Gallo Brothers. Their capacity for endless delay in signing contracts makes it imperative that those of us who care about justice continue to boycott Gallo wine and to speak to package store owners about our reasons for continuing the boycott.

Pete Sabey, Campus Minister
United Christian Foundation

Pride in non-violent action

Too the Editor:

Stephen Mathieu: Do not believe for a minute that the opposition to the Kent State gym is based on a "hatred and bitterness" towards those individuals and institutions that created the need to protest, and its bloody aftermath and still echoing moans. The hill upon which four people [not simply students, but human beings] were murdered should be preserved as is, and a monument placed on it so that we all remember.

Bunker Hill has a monument commemorating the battle on Breed's Hill in Boston that drove the British out — it is there to instill a feeling of pride and reflection. A monument to our slain brothers and sisters at Kent and Jackson States would give us all cause to preserve a fountain of pride in which non-violent action resisted the attempted bludgeoning at the hands of the capitalist and imperialist forces in this country. It was a source of inspiration to those at Seabrook that non-violent resistance had not died, even under the machine of the State. The action at Kent was also a reminder that we are the lucky ones, and must never forget the blood shed for us. I personally don't want anyone to ignore those four people by plopping a "business-as-usual" concrete monster on ground committed to the struggle for freedom.

Lester G. Seafidi

When the aliens take over

To the Editor:

I had a dream last night. In it the stumbling masses had been searching for answers ['being somewhere between youthful independence and complacent adulthood'] when the aliens took over. These were not your usual aliens, however. They projected 'a magnificent radiance of self-confidence'. 'They knew precisely and completely who, why and what they were.' I remember sensing that their ego [which was the source of their personal energy] was bionic or maybe radioactive since it began running the motor of the world[?]. Being in control, naturally their view of life was 'great and beautiful' and etc. ... What they didn't like was advocacy of violent political and social revolution because 'it was an attempt to force the human mind to change.' Even while these aliens were not about to give up their control, they had to present some sort of democratic front. They said that it was always possible to appeal to their reason ...

I felt squeamish in my sleep; I squirmed and shivered. This was the product of Drew Crane; a real Rockefeller Nightmare [as only the most demented Laborite blown on CIA inspired LSD-25 could hallucinate it].

There had to be hope. There was hope.

As though the hand of God has carried him, I saw before me Jim Paulin decked out in a several week old unwashed shirt, dungarees, gray socks and grimy dungaree jacket; grim and ready for gonzo interview. Jim Paul did slip into the great unearthly complex with a forged press pass allowing the robot guard to take him on a tour of the DNA master cylinder computer. It was then that Jim Paulin very deliberately pissed on the most important component of the alien ego structure. Just moments before these 'magnificent' aliens could find out about the damage done, Jim was engaging them in distracting, though [probably] very important conversational topics ranging from THE DEATH OF ELVIS to PUNK ROCK and STAR WARS. In this way was Jim's work consummated and was I able to wake up happily from such an illogical dream.

The story does not end there. This was only a dream and there is only one Jim Paulin. [An important question should be raised here, one that came in my dream — Who is Jim Paulin?] This alien element is like the Adromenda strain, though more insidious [like communism]. It could attack tomorrow. It might have attacked yesterday.

Generally what this diatribe is about is a mental disease that most frequently attacks 'young' upwardly bound white males [though females are certainly not excluded]. A condition inspired by self-imposed Russian exile — Ayn Rand.

Specifically, the point of the above dream is that when you read an article that begins like "College students are at a crucial stage in life somewhere between ... ", the writer is bound to be dogmatic. In which case you go on to other articles as [I think] most do. There is also the possibility of reading it because you know the guy and-or you yourself is an Ayn Rander.

Being an Ayn Rander, the article might be a source of inspiration not unlike a Russian Orthodox sermon. It would, however, appeal to your hard reason in much the same manner that the 19th century English Luddites appealed to the reason of weavers to destroy the machinery that would eventually destroy their livelihood, destroying both them and their families.

There are also some [such as myself] who had been through that specific [Ayn Rand] trip many many years ago but left, feeling it was at best a very simplistic, inadequate description of reality. At best, Drew Crane, your bit smells like a society of benevolent overlords. Historically, however, the Ayn Randian laissez faire has led inevitably into monopoly capitalism which, because of its inhumane, antisocial behavior [of which only the very tip of the iceburg has been documented] has led, in turn to our present bizarre condition of government control capitalism in which many [if not most] of its regulators coming from the private sector ...

Walpole prisoners hold hunger strike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Four prisoners who refused to answer questions about a prison murder without first seeing their lawyers were beaten and thrown into punishment cells, setting the stage for a week-long hunger strike at Walpole State Prison, the wife of an inmate claimed yesterday.

The Department of Correction said the men were in a maximum disciplinary block but for reasons other than refusing to submit any questioning in connection with the fatal stabbing of Stanley Jalicki, 24, Sept. 9.

About 25 men in Cell Block Four have been on a fast since Sept. 28 in sympathy with the four men, said Parnell. There are more than 600 prisoners in Walpole.

Brenda Wetherell, 23, of Fall River, said her husband, George, still showed signs of his beating nearly four weeks later when she visited him at Walpole Monday.

Duke lures foreign firms to Mass.

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced a new campaign yesterday to lure foreign business to Massachusetts, saying the state already is working on a number of prospects.

The governor declined to identify any of the overseas firms eyeing the Bay State, saying the state's negotiations had to remain confidential at their present stage. But he said there were "more than a handful of firms" interested in investing in Massachusetts, including some from "industries which we thought had passed us by."

Oil to be sold off Nantucket Island

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Interior Department plans to notify New England coastal states and other concerned parties Thursday it intends to sell offshore oil and gas leases on one million acres off Nantucket Island, it was learned yesterday.

The department on Oct. 12, 1976, proposed the sale of leases on 1.17 million acres from 50 miles to 167 miles offshore in the Georges Banks area.

Originally, firms indicated they were interested in drilling in about 11 million acres offshore.

Former Chicopee man sentenced

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — A former Chicopee man yesterday was sentenced to a mandatory life prison sentence on his guilty plea to a charge of murdering a real estate agent in a vacant Springfield house last year.

Hampden County Superior Court Judge Paul Tamburello told Steven P. Carey, 30, that the killing of Margaret Rossow, 62, of Longmeadow, was a "brutal and senseless murder" as he sentenced him to Walpole state prison.

Auto insurance companies propose rate revision

BOSTON [UPI] — An insurance industry comparison of 1978 auto insurance rate structures proposed by the industry and the state showed most young women, senior citizens, and rural and suburban drivers would receive rate increases under the state plan.

Rates under the state plan for young, inexperienced male drivers and drivers in such high-risk areas as Chelsea, Revere and Boston would decrease, in some cases by more than $250, said Lemuel H. Devers, president of the industry's Massachusetts Automobile Rating Bureau.

Devers said the differences are based on the methods of distributing premium costs under the two plans.

Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone opens public hearings today on the rate recommendations.

The gap between the industry request for a 7 per cent, $55 million increase, and the state recommendation for a 15 per cent, $117.6 million decrease, is $172.6 million.

In addition to dramatic rate decreases, the State Rating Bureau also recommended elimination of the classification system that raises or lowers a driver's premium cost because of age, sex and marital status.

James Hunt, director of the Insurance Department's State Rating Bureau, said his department had not run a computer analysis of the industry's rate request and added it "would be really tricky to make a comparison," without one.

However, while Hunt expressed surprise and skepticism at some of the industry figures, he said he had "no reason to suspect they've done the numbers wrong. They usually do good work over there."

The Automobile Rating Bureau applied its analysis of the state rates to a two-year-old intermediate car such as a Ford Granada, Chevrolet Malibu, or Plymouth Fury with compulsory liability coverage, plus $100,000-$300,000 additional bodiy injury, $10,000 property damage, $5,000-$10,000 uninsured motorist, and $200 deductible for collision and comprehensive coverage.

Samplings were done to show a comparison between the state and industry rates for low, average, high Chelsea and Revere and the highest Boston territory Charlestown, East Boston and Roxbury, Devers said.

For senior citizens, the state proposal would cost $47 more in the low territories, $70 more in the average, $107 more in the highest, and $77 more in Boston, he said.

For young female drivers, the state rates would cost $87 more in the lowest territory, $60 more in the average, $61 more in the highest, and $56 less in Boston.

For young male drivers, the state plan would cost $5 less in the lowest territories, $60 less in the average, $88 less in the highest, and $268 less in Boston.

For the drivers in Class 10, who make up a majority of the driving population, the state rates would cost $48 more in the lowest territories, $15 more in the average, $20 less in the highest, and $123 less in Boston, Devers said.

Siamese twin survives after separation surgery

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. [AP] — Doctors kept a close watch yesterday over the crib of a 3-week-old girl who defied medical history by surviving surgery that separated her from an attached twin.

Although medical center officials withheld the parents' names, the child's first and middle names were listed as Ferra Hope. She will probably be called by her middle name, Dr. Steve Golladay said yesterday.

The twin sister died during the five-hour operation Saturday. Golladay, who headed the surgical team at the University of Arkansas Medical Center, said physicians had expected that.

The surviving twin "is a really pretty little girl who drinks from a bottle and smiles," Golladay said.

He said the 7-pound baby underwent further surgery late Tuesday and "tolerated the procedure" to stop internal abdominal bleeding. Her condition had stabilized yesterday but remained critical, he said.

Golladay put the infant's chances of survival at 50-50.

Never in medical history had a child survived more than six hours after an operation to separate twins born with one trunk and a conjoined heart, the doctor said. Only 25 other cases of the condition, called thoracopagus, have been recorded.

Four of those sets of twins died within six hours, three were not separated, and died within 90 days and 18 were stillborn, Golladay said.

The twins, born Sept. 14 at El Dorado in southern Arkansas, weighed 11 pounds, had one torso, two heads, two legs, two normal arms and a third arm with two hands attached to the wrist in a "praying hands" position, the doctor said.

If the surgery had not been performed, the twin "would be dead by now, I'm sure," Golladay said.

Prosecuting Atty. Lee A. Munson of Little Rock had issued a legal opinion before the surgery saying physicians felt "the twins must be separated to save the life of the primary twin. The parasitic twin will die as a result of the operation."

Munson said yesterday his office "plowed new ground" with the opinion because Arkansas law does not address such a situation.

"We had to take all the doctors' expertise into consideration," he said. "Did this amount to some sort of manslaughter, or homocide? In our opinion, it did not, based on the Karen Quinlan case and others we cited. I have not had one call on this."

Munson also said the parents' wishes had to be considered. They concurred in the doctors' plans, he said.

"There comes a time when a decision has to be made individually, and the State of Arkansas, or me, or the United States, or no one else has a right to interfere in that decision.

"It is so personal and so private that they had a right.... to make that decision and I don't think the state has a right to interfere with it."

Great-grandmother hopes to be homecoming queen

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. [UPI] — At 80 years of age, Alice Pearce doesn't look like a college junior, much less a candidate for homecoming queen.

But according to tradition, the homecoming queen at Methodist College is supposed to represent school spirit. And Mrs. Pearce says she has plenty of that.

She holds down the jobs of great-grandmother, grandmother, mother and a part-time worker for the Fayetteville Symphony besides her work toward a degree in English. Her activities have given rise to a rumor that she has already burned out two heart pacemakers.

"I'm on my second pacemaker, but it's not because I burned the first one out," she said during a short break in her biology lab.

Her 18 opponents in the competition are all young enough to be her granddaughters, but the contest has no talent or beauty competition, and Mrs. Pearce figures that gives her an edge.

"I tell you if they did it on beauty, I wouldn't have a chance," she said yesterday. "When they mentioned to me it was popularity, I thought I had a chance. I feel highly honored."

Mrs. Pearce said she decided to enter on the urging of the students.

"I think they are all my friends," the mother of 4, grandmother of 12 and great-grandmother of 3, said. "There are nearly 800 here and they all speak to me. I can't remember all their names, but I know them when I see them."

The new queen will be named during a soccer game Saturday, and Mrs. Pearce will be escorted by Methodist graduate David Langston, 25, a student at a seminary in Washington, D.C.

"I've known him four or five years," she said.

If she wins, Mrs. Pearce says she plans to take part in all the things expected of a homecoming queen, such as dances, bonfires, and pep rallies.

She said if she does win the voting, which took place yesterday, it may have something to do with her son, Dr. Richard Pearce, president of the college.

Southwest Men's Center organizes support groups

The Men's Center is trying to organize support and consciousness-raising groups for the year. The groups are open to all University and community men, and will confront issues relating to sexism, the difficulties of men trying to be supportive and close with each other, men facing difficulties in relationships-marriages, and men facing separation or divorce.

A meeting to discuss the center and group formation, will be held Oct. 11, 7 p.m. at the Men's Center, in office three on the lobby of Kennedy Towers. For more information, contact Scott McKearney at the Center, 545-0263, Monday through Friday, noon to 5 p.m.

WMUA's 'Focus' program moves to a new time slot

The weekly "Focus" public affairs series on WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) moves to a new 6 p.m. Thursday time slot beginning today, with moderator Ken Mosakowski firing more pointed questions and commentary on controversial issues.

Guests for tonight's live, open forum will include Jane Holappa, director of the Amherst Community Survival Center; and leaders of the Amherst Tenants Association, a local tenants' rights group. Listeners are invited to call in questions during the live program.

Contraception education available at infirmary

Contraception educational sessions are held every Monday and Thursday at 3 p.m., and Tuesday and Wednesday at 7 p.m. in University Health Center 302. Each session lasts about 90 minutes; Tuesday night designed especially for couples. No appointment necessary.

Women receiving contraception services for the first time at the University Health Services must attend, and those considering contraception should. All students are invited.

Appointments are available after one has attended an educational session — call 549-2600 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays or go to Clinic IV. Breast self-exam instruction available at all Contraception Clinic visits. Questions will be answered at any time at 549-2671.

Special contraception educational sessions for men only are held the first Monday of each month.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEDNESDAY, Oct. 5, 1977

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6 — Born today, you are one of those complicated individuals who holds up to the world at large two distinct images of himself. On the one hand, you impress others as being highly independent, inclined to lead rather than to follow; on the other, when the situation calls for the kind of original thinking independent persons are usually capable of, you fall short, waiting for others to come up with the solutions. You are intelligent — wise enough to admit this small fault and quick to know when following gains you more than leading.

If a woman, you will be inclined to become bored with homemaking. Undoubtedly, you will need more than the care of home and family if you are to be happy in your work. On the other hand, you would miss your homemaking chores were you to be completely denied them. You should be able to juggle your hours in such a way that both a career outside and inside the home are possible. If and when the possibility becomes a reality, you will begin to know true happiness.

If a man, you may become easily wearied of your personal relationships. For this reason, it is essential that the person you select as a marital partner be of sufficiently interesting and varied character that your interest will be kept up. You have every intention of working to make loved ones happy; your ability to do so, however, may depend greatly upon your mood at the moment.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 7

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Keep an open mind and a receptive heart when you make your contacts with others today. You can bring another peace of mind.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Concentrate on those aspects of a personal relationship which endear another to you; forgive, forget, and start over!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Confusion early in the day could cause you to forget an important appointment late in the afternoon. Forewarned is forearmed.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — If you can relax during the initial phase of a new project, you should be able to make considerable progress today.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Turn your full attention toward succeeding at new assignments. Higher-ups await results; on the line may be advancement.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — You should be able to influence another in your favor today. Don't look too far ahead; determine your coarse without delay.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Concentrate on personal matters. Unless you can unravel your own affairs, you can't expect to help another unravel his.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Much energy will be expended today in pursuit of new goals. Relax; let things happen. Don't attempt to force issues.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If you combine knowledge with an admission of ignorance when it applies, you will make a friend for life. Reconsider decisions of yesterday.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Make an effort to keep in the company of congenial friends throughout the day. Consider a proposal for a new project at evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Yours should be the winning proposal — if you are wise enough to incorporate into it what you know to be another's weakness.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — You can make use of forces others are apparently overlooking and gain the upper hand in a new venture. Reverse the order of things.

Pats trade Moore

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots traded nose tackle Arthur Moore and put veteran center Bob Hyland on waivers yesterday to make room for returning offensive linemen John Hannah and Leon Gray.

Coach Chuck Fairbanks said Moore, in his fourth year of pro football, went to Cleveland in a conditional trade. He said New England would receive a future draft pick if Moore makes the Browns' roster.

Hyland, in his 11th year, was picked up by the Patriots before the beginning of the current season and had seen little action with New England.

Hannah and Gray, contract holdouts, reported to the team Tuesday. They had been ordered to do so by the National Football League Player-Club Relations Committee. The Patriots are expected to negotiate with the players after the season ends.

Broncos nix trade

DENVER [AP] — The Denver Broncos of the National Football League will make no further effort to trade for New England Patriots' offensive lineman John Hannah or Leon Gray, Coach Red Miller said yesterday.

"I'm just going to leave the whole thing alone," said Miller. "I'm just glad that they've all worked it out. Those are two fine players and I'd hate to see their careers interrupted in any way. I suffered through a lot of growing pains with those guys and I know they mean a lot to that team."

Miller was the Patriots' offensive line coach for four years before being named the Broncos' head coach this year.

Hannah and Gray returned to their team Tuesday after a 3½ week walkout over a salary dispute. They had been ordered back by a National Football League arbitration committee, which ruled the linemen had binding contracts.

Hannah had indicated a preference for being traded to Denver, and Miller had said he would seek to acquire the All-Pro guard in an effort to strengthen the Broncos' offensive line.

The absence of the two standout linemen caused unrest on the New England team and could have been a factor in the Patriots' disappointing 1-2 record.

Miller said he is relieved that the Hannah-Gray matter is behind him, saying the team and coaches "have to concentrate on a tough game with Kansas City this week."

C's drop Johnson

HARTFORD, CONN. [UPI] — Forward John Johnson, obtained in a trade from the Houston Rockets earlier this year, has been dropped from the Boston Celtics Roster, Club President Red Auerbach said last night.

The decision to release the 6' 6" cornerman came after the Celtics received Johnson's contract in the mail Wednesday from Houston General Manager Ray Patterson, Auerbach said.

He said the agreement reached over the phone with Patterson last spring regarding the nature of Johnson's contract was entirely different than the document he received Wednesday.

"This is the most outrageous misrepresentation of a contract that I have seen in 31 years," Auerbach said. "This is a tremendous shock to me."

Although he would not elaborate, Auerbach said the lavish terms of Johnssn's contract were not mentioned by Patterson during the earlier trade alks.

"I don't want to do business with a situation like that ever again," Auerbach said.

Merchant axed

SPRINGFIELD — Former UMass hockey star Mike Merchant was among 13 players axed Monday by the Springfield Indians as the AHL club made its first roster cuts.

Merchant, who played for the Minutemen from 1973-77, was trying out for Springfield as a free agent. He played in the forward line under coach Jack Canniff while at UMass.

Hannah says 'I want out'

FOXBORO [UPI] — All-pro guard John Hannah was reported yesterday as saying he wants to be traded by the New England Patriots at the end of the NFL season, whether or not he gets a pay raise.

Hannah and all-pro linemate Leon Gray showed up for a two-hour practice yesterday, their first since they walked out on the Patriots Sept. 11 in a contract dispute.

The two players agreed to return Tuesday in exchange for a promise from the Patriots that their contracts would renegotiated at the end of the 1977 season.

Hannah, an All-America at Alabama and now in his fifth season with New England, refused to attend a post-practice news conference. But a WBZ-TV sports reporter later quoted Hannah on the station's evening newscast as saying he wanted to leave the team.

"He said he wants to be traded at the end of the season," said the reporter. He said Hannah also vowed not to talk to reporters until the season is over.

Patriots coach and general manager Chuck Fairbanks told reporters he would use both Hannah and Gray in Sunday's game against Seattle at Schafer in Foxboro.

"They worked fine in the practice today and it was a pretty good, brisk pace and it was a little bit longer than usual. They're going to play and there's a good chance they'll start," Fairbanks said.

The Patriots have lost two of their first three games without the two All-pro linemen.

Gray, who said he was at his playing weight despite the lack of practice, also said he was "pretty pleased" with his performance yesterday.

"I didn't get out of shape too much. We've got to do a lot of work. But that's nothing new for us. We hope to help the team get back on the winning side of things," he said.

Gray said "there was no animosity" among the players when he and Hannah showed up for practice.

"They were very nice about the whole thing. Nobody was upset. We just all shook hands. They were glad that we came back to a part of the team," Gray said.

Phils top NL All-Star list

NEW YORK [UPI] — Three members of the Philadelphia Phillies, including pitcher Steve Carlton and slugger Greg Luzinski, were among seven Eastern Division players named yesterday to the United Press International's 1977 11-man National League All-Star team.

Selected along with Carlton and Luzinski were third baseman Mike Schmidt of the Phillies, second baseman Joe Morgan, outfielder George Foster and pitcher Tom Seaver of the Cincinnati Reds, catcher Ted Simmons and shortstop Garry Templeton of the St. Louis Cardinals, first baseman Steve Garvey of the Los Angeles Dodgers, outfielder Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates and relief pitcher Bruce Sutter of the Chicago Cubs.

The three Reds and the Dodgers' Garvey were the only Western Division players selected in the lopsided geographical vote. The selections were made by 25 sportswriters from around the country who participated in the UPI's annual post-season survey.

Carlton was an overwhelming choice for one of the starting pitcher berths, Parker was the only unanimous selection and Luzinski and Foster polled more than 80 per cent of the votes cast for their positions.

Gullett claims stiffness in arm caused defeat

NEW YORK [UPI] — Don Gullett, who gave up Kansas City's first four runs yesterday in the Royals' 7-2 victory over the New York Yankees in the opening game of the American League playoffs, said he was unable to get his pitching arm loose, the same left arm which has bothered him periodically all season.

"I couldn't get loose in the bullpen," said Gullett, who left the game after the second inning with the Royals leading, 4-0. "I felt I was hurting the ball club going with that type of stuff. The trainer asked me how I was after the second inning and I told him I couldn't get loose. He told Billy (Martin) and he took me out."

Gullett walked Fred Patek on four pitches and Hal McRae followed with a two-run homer. With two out in the second, Gullet walked Darrell Porter and gave up a single to Frank White. Patek knocked home both runners with a double down the left field line that Lou Piniella casually fielded and tossed to the infield, thinking the umpires had ruled that a fan had touched the ball.

Gullett said he did not inform Martin that he didn't feel right warming up.

"I've been in that situation before where I couldn't loosen up in the bullpen," Gullett said, "but I always loosened up in the end. When you can't get loose, you can't get control of the ball and you can't get velocity. I'm definitely disheartened, but I'm not giving up. I'd like to give it another try."

Martin, however, said Gullett may not be able to pitch for the rest of the playoffs and possibly the World Series, if the Yankees make it.

"It doesn't look very good," the Yankee manager said. "I called the bullpen when he was warming up and they said he was throwing the hell out of the ball. The trainer asked about his arm after the second inning and he said he hurt it on the last pitch of the inning. I had to get him out of there. It's the same injury he had before, the same area in the shoulder.

"He just got pitches in an area where you don't want to and they hit them. You've got to give them credit."

Piniella said he would have been able to throw out White in the second inning if he didn't think the ball had been touched by a spectator, which would have made the play dead and held White at third base.

"If I can't throw a guy out on a play like that," Piniella said, "I'll cut off my right arm and feed it to the alligators in Okeefenokee Swamp.

"They played good. We're going to play a little better tomorrow."

Reggie Jackson, who was hitless in four tries, said the Yankees fell too far behind too early to catch up.

"You get behind, 6-0, with a good club and you're not going to catch them, I don't care who you are," said Jackson. "To take advantage of the fact we're a more experienced team, we've got to stay within one or two runs to be able to put the pressure on. There's no excuse. We got beat."

Kansas City Royal Paul Splittorff's face reflects the amount of effort he puts into pitching in the playoffs as he delivers a pitch in yesterday's 7-2 win over the New York Yankees in the opening game of the American League Championships. (UPI)

Royals rout NY; LA slams Philly

NEW YORK [UPI] — Two-run homers by Hal McRae and John Mayberry plus Fred Patek's disputed two-run double highlighted a lightning-quick Kansas City blitz yesterday and carried the Royals to a 7-2 victory over the New York Yankees in the first game of the American League Championship Series.

In forging a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five series, the Royals did the bulk of their scoring in the first three innings and thus found themselves in the comfortable position of returning to their home stadium after Thursday night's second game with no worse than a split in New York. No team which has lost the first game of either league playoff at home has ever been able to rebound and win the series.

Yankee starter Don Gullet, who said the secret to beating the Royals was keeping their speed men off the bases, failed in that mission from the very outset — walking Patek, the leadoff batter, on four straight pitches.

After Gullet threw another ball on his first pitch to McRae, the Royals' second batter of the game, Yankee manager Billy Martin hustled out to the mound for a conference with his pitcher.

Gullett settled down and threw two straight strikes, but McCrae leaped on the 2-2 delivery and sent it over the left field wall, inches above the 387-foot sign, for a 2-0 lead.

Another walk by Gullett set up the Royals' second two runs in the second. After retiring Mayberry and Joe Zdeb, Gullett walked Darrell Porter on a 3-1 count and then was touched for an infield single by Frank White. Patek followed with a hard grounder over third base which caromed off the wall in front of the third base stands. Porter scored easily and when left fielder Lou Pinielia nonchalantly lobbed the ball back to the infield after assuming a fan had touched it, White kept right on running home with the second run to make it 4-0.

Piniella and Martin protested but Nick Bremigan, the umpire on the left field foul line, ruled no interference.

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — In typical Hollywood fashion, Dusty Baker stole a dramatic script from teammate Ron Cey last night by belting a grand slam homer in the fourth inning which sparked the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 7-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies and evened the National League Championship series at one game apiece.

After a travel day today, the best-of-five series switches to Philadelphia's Veterans Stadium for the third game tomorrow night. The Phillies, however, must still be regarded as having the upper hand, since they won 60 of their 81 games played at home this year.

Baker's grand slam, which traveled into almost the same section of seats that Cey hit his into in a losing effort Tuesday night, snapped a 1-1 tie and made things easy for right-hander Don Sutton, who stopped the Phillies in a route-going effort.

Sutton, one of baseball's "money" pitchers but unlucky this past season in compiling a 14-8 mark, was touched for nine hits but only one that did any damage — a solo homer to Bake McBride in the third inning — in posting his third victory without a loss in playoff competition.

The Dodgers, guilty of several fundamental mistakes in Tuesday night's 7-5 defeat, played a virtually flawless game defensively, while the Phillies saw their strategy backfire twice, which ended up costing them five runs.

Each time it was the intentional walk — that "book strategy" which so many managers employ — that hurt the Phillies. The first time they used it was in the fourth when Jim Lonborg, after discussing the situation with Manager Danny Ozark, elected to walk hard-hitting Steve Garvey intentionally to load the bases and pitch to Baker.

Bill Russell had led off the inning with a single and Reggie Smith also singled before Cey laid down a sacrifice bunt to move the runners to second and third bases. After Garvey was purposely passed, Baker slammed a 1-2 pitch on a low line into the left field pavilion to give the Dodgers a 5-1 lead.

76ers ill—need th' Doctah

By DAVE RODMAN
and PAT DOBBS
Collegian Staff

HARTFORD — It may have only been an exhibition game, but despite some unfamiliar faces, the Boston Celtics showed several flashes of mid-season offensive brilliance as they came from behind to defeat the Philadelphia 76'ers last night in Hartford, 109-103.

The Sixers led by eight at the end of one quarter behind the strong board work of Harvey Catchings and Darryl Dawkins and the shooting of Doug Collins and George McGinnis, along with a couple sky-jumpers by "All-World" (just ask him) Lloyd Free.

Boston appeared sluggish in the first period — dominated inside by Philly's shot-blockers and-or goaltenders, Dawkins and Catchings. A couple Fred Saunders jumpers, likewise for Charlie Scott, and a bundle of "Cornbread" Maxwell free throws comprised the bulk of the Green's offense.

To begin the second stanza, coach Tommy Heinsohn brought out John Havlicek, Curtis Rowe, Jim Ard, Dave Bing and Mike Dabney, and slowly, the tide began to turn.

Recent acquisition Bing was the catalyst in the Celts drive to close to two points at the half. The slick, smooth-shooting guard ate up Henry Bibby with a combination of perimeter jumpers and swooping moves to the hoop.

Bing appears to be the ideal third guard, able to motivate "instant offense," much as Cleveland's Austin Carr, when used in that role.

At the half, the Sixers were gasping, "is there a doctah in the house?" as their resident surgeon, one Julius Erving, was home in Philly resting a sore knee.

The third period saw the lead see-saw back and forth, with the Celts contriving several steals and throwing the fast break offense into high gear at times. Philly countered with Caldwell Jones's strong board sweeping, and some shifty Collins moves and Mix's patented sweeping-elbow, bulldozer drives.

Maxwell proved he may be the ideal replacement for Sidney Wicks (who dat?) as he played strong defense, and heads up offense, culminating with a soaring, in-your-face, hang - your - elbows - on - the - rim slammer on the end of a solo steal that nearly sent Mike Dunleavy halfway to Enfield.

The fourth quarter was typified by this Red Cowens play — clean the board, outlet, sprint the length of the floor to get a return feed and can a top of the key jumper — his third straight. But Philly didn't die with a whimper. "Jelly Bean" Bryant heated up his twin six-shooters to make the final margin respectable, while Dawkins awoke the crowd of 6,000 or so as he unveiled his first "Unbelievably Terrifying De Laurentiis Memorial Gorilla Stuff" — hopefully the first of many, we have to admit.

The fun's just begun

John Hannah and Leon Gray have returned to the Patriots' fold, but in no way have either party's problems been solved.

When Hannah and Gray decided to leave the Patriots a week before the season opener due to their contract disputes, it caused a great deal of turmoil and strife inside the Patriots camp.

Owner Bill Sullivan was disturbed at the players' obvious breach of contract, Chuck Fairbanks was disturbed at the effect it would have on his team, and some of the Pats' players must have been disturbed at Hannah and Gray's seeming disregard for the team's goal — a Super Bowl appearance.

The dastardly duo decided to return to their teammates on Tuesday after a three week absence, and they come back with a stigma much like that of an ex-con looking to be accepted back into society.

Both players must prove to their teammates and fans that they are worthy of their respect once again. Their absence may have cost each man on the active roster an extra bonus at the end of the season.

The winners' share of Super Bowl profits is somewhere around $20,000. It has been proven that professional athletes can take almost any type of punishment, but hurt them in the wallet and they can become very hard to live with.

Hannah and Gray may rightfully argue that their absence really made no difference in the Patriots' early season tailspin. It has not been New England's inability to score that has hurt it, but rather its inability to keep the other team off the scoreboard. And since neither Hannah nor Gray play defense, their presence on the field may have meant nothing to the ballclub.

Some fans may be willing to accept that argument, but Chuck Fairbanks and the players on the team would probably balk at hypothesis. After Sunday's defeat at Shea Stadium to the Jets, Fairbanks suggested that the absence of Hannah and Gray had caused some internal strife which may have been affecting the team's play. This would seem logical.

What did the duo gain from their holdout orchestrated by their wise and noble counsel Howard Slusher? At first glance it appears very little.

They are not going to be paid more money this season. They have tarnished their images amongst players, owners, and the fans. And they have left themselves open to ridicule, because in the three weeks that they have been gone, the Patriots have compiled a 1-2 record.

What they have gained on the positive side is a lesson in labor contract disputes, since I doubt either one of them ever took that course in college. They have also learned what a great life professional football really is.

No one is interested whether John Hannah gets injured on his chicken farm in Alabama, but let him get hurt on the astroturf of Schaefer Stadium and reporters and fans will swarm all over him. There's no question that the adulation is something professional athletes miss once they have left the game. And maybe that's why it's so hard for many of them to leave — including Messiers Hannah and Gray.

And what of the money? It has been reported that Gray is receiving $60,000 annually, and Hannah $65,000, not including incentive bonuses which may increase their yearly salaries into the $100,000 range. Twenty weeks of pro football may be a lot more bearable at those prices. You just can't make that type of money raising chickens as John Hannah soon found out.

When they arrived at Schaefer Stadium on Tuesday, both said they had come very close to retiring. This would have been a severe blow to the Patriots organization, which has struggled to build a respectable team for so many years. But, it was a matter of principle to Sullivan: he couldn't let these players set a dangerous precedent for others to follow.

The stand by Sullivan was justified, and the agreement to negotiate in good faith at the end of the season was a commendable decision. But what happens between now and the end of the season could only serve to drive a bigger gap between the two parties.

URBAN GUERILLA WARFARE IN LATIN AMERICA

by James Kohl & John Litt
The MIT Press
1974
$4.95 425 pages

Released (at least to us) three years late and four ideological trends behind the times is Kohl and Litt's Urban Guerilla Warfare in Latin America. Dedicated to "The Second War of Independence," this book medicinally relates to us both the content and format of armed struggle in Brazil, Uraguay, and Argentina. It is well researched and relies, to some extent, on original source material from memos to treatises.

Laden with interviews, chronologies, and political analyses left and right, Urban Guerilla Warfare documents the struggle of a desperate continent. Guerilla warfare in Latin America is as old as the struggle against imperialism itself; its entrance into urban areas is symptomatic both of the deepening crisis of capitalism and the revitalization of desperation that accompanied the downfall of the Allende government in Chile.

The diversity of approaches to armed warfare and its attendent ideological struggle is carefully outlined for us by the authors. The interplay of ideas and their correspondent expression and manifestation in reality allows us to see the unity and opposition of Maoist, Trotskyite, Gueveraist, Leninist, and Peronist ideologies. The near-abandonment of the Allende Line is striking; the disintegration of Popular Unity forms of struggle is dreadful. The picture of anything less than armed urban warfare presented to us by the authors is bleak. Their sympathies lie not with the millions of down-trodden and oppressed people of Latin America, but with the vanguarditis-afflicted minority of urban guerillas desperate for a revolution.

The value of a book such as this for Americans is, at this time, academic. It is invaluable as a guide and glossary to newspaper and magazine accounts of so-called terrorist activities in Latin America and extremely helpful in deciphering the multitude of initial-names (FAL, FAP, ERP, ETC...) these groups and the press so often use.

As a prescriptive antidote for America, if that is what the authors intimate, Urban Guerilla Warfare fails miserably. We are more likely to see video warfare and radio guerillas, pirating media from attic to attic, cellar to cellar, than armed insurrection as we enter the eighties.

Violencia
vozes de aco ao sol incendeiam a paisagem ja quente

E os sonhos
se desfazem
contra uma muralha de baionetas

Nova onda se levanta

sobre corpos insepultos

E nova onda se levanta para auluta
e ainda outraf ate que violencia apenas reste o nosso perdao.

STRUGGLE
by Agostinho Neto

Violence
Voices of steel in the sun
Burn the landscape already scorched

And the dreams
Undo themselves
Against a mural of bayonets

New wave rises
And the anxieties become undone
Upon unburied bodies

And a new wave rises for the struggle
And again another and another
Until the violence
Scarcely remains within our pardon.

The College Cookbook
Geri Harrington
260 pp $3.95 (paper)
byPatti Rosenberg

From George Washington University comes a recipe for a spaghetti dinner which comes with the recommendation that "This whole dinner costs me about $1.00 to make, including dessert. Guaranteed to fill you up. Tastes damn good too! Takes 20 minutes from refrigerator to table." (p 206) It reminded me of a character from Robert Altman's "3 Women" who edits and files recipes according to how long they take.

This isn't a cookbook for those who are hot-plate whiz kids. Or people who have exotic tastes or unlimited resources. Which is why it's called The College Cookbook. The recipes were collected from schools across the country with an eye on general appeal and practicality. Included are Mexican, Chinese, Italian, Arabic, and vegetarian dishes. Everything starts with all fresh ingredients and many of the recipes include suggestions for slight variations to accomodate individual preferences. The need for fancy utensils, which inhibits and restricts most students, has been minimized and all but eliminated. And of course time and expense are kept in mind, the more demanding recipes noted as such.

If your specialty is souffle, The College Cookbook will not be particularly challenging or useful. But those who are off the meal plan, completely or just on weekends, have little cooking experience and meager funds are advised to check it out.

It's Not What You Think

The Homosexuals
by Alan Ebert
Macmillian/$9.95/332 pages
Lisa Melilli

First it was the fag in gay clothes with a wobbling wrist and a feminine lisp--a steroetype.

Then it became the virile macho with mustauche and dark tan sporting shorts this summer in Florida protesting Anita Bryant and the Bible. He was the horny, leathered, muscular man out for some skin like an animal: the Fire Island flint, the baths, the pick-up bars with back rooms for gang fucking and fist fucking, strip shows, S and M. Surely he must be a deviant. Surely something needed to be done to aid the homosexual in obtaining an equal place in society.

And something has come, namely Alan Ebert's "The Homosexuals". Ebert provides yet another stereotype of the gay man--that there simply isn't any. Ebert doesn't provide the reader a picture of "the" homosexual, but provides a medley of different viewpoints and lifestyles illustrated through in-depth interviews with 17 gay men including a doctor, a lawyer, a beautician, a businessman, a masseur. And Ebert's medley is a success simply because he's not pouncing out gay lib rhetoric, but is stating his political cause soft-spokenly. Ebert, himself a homosexual, is out to educate people about the homosexual, to erase the mystery of gay life for the reader.

The success of Ebert's presentation of the life of 17 men lies in his style. With each man, Ebert first gives a two paragraph introduction of each man, what he looks like, his livlihood and then Ebert presents the interview in question-answer form. In this way, Ebert is allowing the homosexual to speak to the reader directly.

Ebert is also a careful interviewer. His questions are thorough and he pinpoints the man he is interviewing(who are protected by fictitous names.) The interview not only encompasses the homosexual's gay activity, but also a short synopsis of the interviewees life. In this way, the reader gets the impression that he or she is touching every aspect of the homosexual's life. The quality of Ebert's interviews are in the interviewees themselves. All appear very open and speak frankly.

Even further, the success of "The Homosexuals" is the variety of men Ebert interviews. As stated previously, the author has interviewed men of different professions. He has also interviewed men from different backgrounds--those brought up in New York, Vermont, California, the South as well as Jews, Catholics, Protestants, Black and White. Two of the most interesting interviews are with a homosexual from Russia who has been deported from his country to the U.S. because of his samizdat writings who speaks comparatively about gay life in Russia and here and a homosexual psychiatrist hoping to alter Freudian dogma to aid in the understanding and acceptance of the homosexual.

What comes out in the interviews is that the gay man suffers an inhibition before coming out much as any person would naturally feel about him or herself. As Erik Edwards, whom Ebert describes as a blonde, blue-eyed muscular mausesse says: "I don't think it (fear) is any different than anybody else's. Lonliness. I would not like to go through life without a hand to hold. But, don't make this into that stupid stereotype of the lonely old faggot because that's bullshit. Anyone can be lonely, straight or gay."

Coming out, according to all of the homosexuals interviewed, relieved much anxiety as Johnny Dow, a homosexual who also leads an A.A. group and was once an alcoholic himself summarizes: "It is a relief not to judge others so harshly any more, but it is even more of a relief not to judge me so harshly."

On the subject of the Fire Island flint, gay exhibitionism and S and M, Ebert portrays a very narrow point of view in those he selected to include in his book. Only a few have been involved in this activity, all however spoke badly of this segment of the gay population. As Howard Barbour, a corporate lawyer, said of the gay pride movement: "I live a homosexual life in that my sex contacts are all men and the people I know are all gay. I am uncomfortable with straights. But I do not feel a member of the gay community. I don't relate well to most gays. Most are inconsequential people who devote their lives to sex and silliness--such as parties and pretty clothes and trivia and minutiae. That's not me. I think gay pride is a myth. Few gays have any pride at all. Obviously. Fist-fucking is a big rage today--more than just a cult thing. Well, if one has true pride in oneself, one doesn't let some spaced-out sadist shove his arm up your ass. Similarly, if one has true pride one doesn't cruise the truck stops and suck any cock that is available.

As long as homosexuality is considered 'sick' and perverted, gays will be sick and perverted. As I have stated, one of the prices gays pay is the galloping guilts inflicted upon them from birth by the heterosexual world. There will be gay pride when gays stand up not to proudly say that they are gay but to act with pride--when they care about their minds and bodies and refuse to allow others--including and perhaps mailnly themselves--to put them down as people,"

And there is much pride expressed throughout "The Homosexuals" in each of the interviews and for a homosexual who would read this book I would imagine this pride would be a source of inspiration. As Edwards summarizes: "I'm really kind of surprised because I don't feel one negative thing aobut my homosexuality. Certainly there is no guilt. I say it loud and I say it proud. My name is Erik. I am a person. I am a homosexual. You don't like that, mister? Go fuck yourself!"

That's the spirit behhind Ebert's "The Homosexuals"--a persuasive measage.

JAY FERGUSON
Thunder Island
(Asylum)

Jay Ferguson's second effort is not a bad album, but rather it is an uninteresting one. Jay is a cohort of Joe Walsh and even managed to get Joe to play guitar on five of Thunder Island'sten tracks. Unfortunately, Walsh's guitar is by far the best thing on this album. Ferguson has written a couple of good songs, notably "Losing Control", written for Bill Szymczyk, the producer. Throughout most of the album, Ferguson's writing stoops to nothing more than furtive attempts at reggae. For one,(like myself), who has heard Ferguson's good side on his first album,Thunder Island is a disappointment. However, if you are a fan of reggae, this album could appeal to you.

BOB WELCH
French Kiss
(Capitol)

It has been well over four years since Bob Welch played guitar and wrote for Fleetwood Mac. Welch left in pursuit of a more successful endeavor. Ironically, it was the new Fleetwood Mac that reaped the musical harvest. Not to be outdone by his ex-band, Welch formed a three-piece hard rock outfit called Paris. However, Paris made virtually no mark in the music industry and had very little following. Thus, in his never ending search for perfection (and possibly a little cash) Bob has released a long awaited solo album. Not only does he write all the songs, including a superb remake of a old Fleetwood Mac hit that he already did with old Mac, "Sentimental Lady," but he also plays every instrument excluding drums. So you're not immpressed eh? Then check it out because it just may be one of the best all-around L.P.s of '77. Almost every tune is danceable, catchy, slick and thoroughly professional in a slow yet rockin manner. Looks like Bob Welch has finally put it all together. I guess all he needed was a French Kiss!!!

THE STRANGLERS
IV Rattus Norvegicus
(A&M)

This album is lewd, rude, and disgusting; all true-blue punk rockers should love it immediately. With simple song structures, repetitive riffs, and bawdry lyrics, this British quartet typifies the "New Wave" of irrational, irreducible, irrelevant punk rock. Nobody but a true punk (or a true ten year old) would want anything to do with this album. But the true-blue punk would delight in such tunes as "Down In The Sewer" and "Ugly." The true-blue punk would writhe in ecstasy at the sound of "London Lady." The true-blue punk would shiver in anticipation of "Get A Grip On Yourself" and "Peaches" (you know the kind they mean). The true-blue punk would consider this recording the greatest thing since Pass/Fail. As for myself, no true-blue punk am I, so I'll grade this disc a "these guys have all the class of a tone-deaf piano tuner" BC.

THE DEAD BOYS
Young Loud And Snotty
(Sire)

If Boston's DMZ is the current equivalent of the Stooges, then New York's (via Cleveland) Dead Boys are the American equivalent of the Sex Pistols. Only the Sex Pistols are the current British equivalent of the Stooges, so it's all in a circle...

The Dead Boys have risen from CBGB's obscurity to album release in record time. Lead singer Stiv Bators has all the qualities of greatness, plus he is the guy who handed Iggy Pop the infamous rubbed-all-over-his-body jar of Skippy's in Cincy a few years back, so he's cool, too. Guitarist Cheetah Chrome is simply the meanest, ugliest, punkiest looking guy I've ever seen, bar few.

The British punks I don't believe for a minute; the marks of hypocrisy smeared all over them. But the Dead Boys, I have a strong suspicion, are quite for real. One has got to really be nuts to eat vomit, even if it is their own. Legends of Dead Boys antics, including Stiv's cracking a moon on top of a speeding auto, have been corroborated by reputable sources. And he was driving the thing!

The Dead Boys are the honest-to-goodness topic of such punk anthems as "Blank Generation" and "Pretty Vacant." Just look at the pic of Cheetah (second from left) on the back of the LP cover to see what I mean.

And the music! A first glimpse was given via the two brilliant songs included on the excellent British New Wavecompendium and although they are the best two songs on Young Loud and Snotty the LP in question is still a great one. The choice of Genya Ravan as producer is highly questionable, and the boys themselves have criticized her for what they feel is a lousy job, but I think she has done quite well in capturing a good studio sound without sacrificing the excitement of a live Dead Boys show. The songs are all punkoid masterpieces, too. "Caught With The Meat In Your Mouth" says it all.

The New Wave came to the forefront of music biz attention in 1977, but hasn't yet caught on commercially. There are several indicators, however, that it will in '78, with gusto, and the Dead Boys had best be smack in the middle of it, or there will be hell to pay.

RORY BLOCK
Intoxication
(Chrysalis)

Rory Block has a listenable voice and some good musicians(mostly from Little Feat) to back her up. But that's not enough to carry her through this album. She's made a mistake commom to up- and-coming-singer-songwriters by covering the entire album with her own songs when she doesn't have enough ideas to sustain it. She writes the kind of silly love songs that only a McCartney can get away with,and which quickly become irritating here. She's also decided to produce her own album , and opted for a slick,pseudo-Motown approach which verges on disco. Consequently,the Feat people sound almost as bored playing this music as I am by listening to it,and whatever good moments there are get obscured by the high-school-poetry nature of the lyrics. For her next album ,Rory Block needs to restrain her ego and hand the production over to someone more capable ,to concentrate more on her singing, and to work her songwriting ideas into three or four good songs instead of ten mediocre ones. As for Intoxicated,nothing on this album is quite as interesting as the photograph on the back cover which shows Ms. Block biting her shoe while wearing it.

KLAATU
Hope
(Capitol)

If violets were red and roses were blue,
I'll tell you this gladly,
just what I would do.

I'd say that this album
was one of the best;
I'd say that this album
could pass every test.

But roses are red and violets are blue, if you buy this album
you must love Klaatu.

The Beatles they're not,
'tho twas thought in the past;
session men from Toronto make up the whole cast.

This Hope offers little to earn it the raves;
a concept disjointed,
not one of my faves.

So no hope for Hope, seems useless to me;
this dumb Space Age saga rates sheer "lunar C."

THE SECTION
Fork It Over
(Capitol)

You've heard the Section whether you know it or not. They're the most heavily employed backup band in LA. The four pieces of the Section (Kunkel, Sklar, Doerge and Danny Kootch) have primed the careers of the Big LA Stars. But try as they might, and this is the third try, they have not been able to promote the career of the Section.

The first album back in '72 had some class and some bright moments. The second suffered from a stuffy sameness. This time, the Section has produced a smoothly blended album that could provide some comfortable moments of enjoyment. The songs are similar in that they all begin and end, and have climaxes thrown in to keep you on your toes. Mostly, there is a basic bass beat layered over with all sorts of neat things like guitars, tambourines, horns and in one case, a sound similar to that produced when the cheeks are struck with the mouth open. If asked to describe their current style, and no one has made that mistake yet, one would tend to term it Latino-rock-synthojazz with funky overtones. It's music to dance and have sex to.

Bob Morse and Mark Harris Levitan

EASY STREET
Under the Glass
(Capricorn)

Upon receiving this album, the main question in my mind was , "What's a British band doing on Capricorn?" After playing the record the answer came back immediately: "Who cares?" That's the kind of record this is: it gives me nothing to be enthusiastic about. Easy Street seems to be aiming at fusion of Southern rock with British overtones, but their music has neither the good naturedness of the best Southern rock nor the grandeur of the best British. A few of the tunes sound passable while I'm listening but afterwards I still can't remember what any of them sounded like. The musicianship is proficient but isn't used to any apparent creative purpose. There are a few attempts at Yes-like vocal harmonies, but none of the singing voices in this band have any particularly appealing quality about them. There are a few good riffs here and there, but that's not enough to keep me from relegating this album to my "maybe I'll feel like playing it again in another few years or so" pile.

Faculty Dance Concert

Tonight's faculty dance concert marks the beginning of a new season for the UMass dancers.

Performances will run for three consecutive nights in Bowker auditorium at 8 P.M. and tickets may be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office.

The program includes jazz, modern dance and ballet performed by both student and faculty members.

Two former UMass dancers, Joyce McGowan and David McCalley, have even returned from New York dance companies to be included in this weekend's recitals.

This dedicated group has been choreographing and rehersing regularly since the first week of school, sometimes to six or seven hours a day!

Faculty member, Ms. Marilyn Patton has nothing but praise for her students.She explained that they're all devoted dancers, yet they carry a regular academic load, many of them with excellent grades.

There is no competition among them and no "stars" and what's more, they all like and respect ead other which makes working together closely a pleasure.

The University Dancers' praise is not only local. A few Umass dancers who had the opportunity to study in New York last semester were said to be the most disciplined and professional students in their classes, including the studios of Merce Cunningham and Alvin Ailey!

Maybe that is because Umass dancers have more actual performance experience than any other state school in the country.

This year it should be much easier for the dancers to keep their balance on the Bowker auditorium stage.

A badly needed new floor is the reason why they no longer have to fill in the holes with cardboard and newspaper before they lay down their linoleum.

New floor or not, their talent will be seen outside the walls of Bowker, in the many other concert halls they perform in while on tour...

Many UMass dancers touring during the month of January when they will be teaching dance in public schools and spending a week performing on Cape Cod.

Other recitals this semester include performances in Southwest residential area, and Lebow concert Oct. 19, and the student concert (choreographed entirely by the students) in December.

Still No Moss, The Stones Rip Along

THE ROLLING STONES
Love You Live
(Rolling Stones Records)

"THE WORLD'S GREATEST ROCK & ROLL BAND!" Indeed, such is the established reputation of Mick Jagger and cohorts. The Rolling Stones may not be a pretty band, they may not be as artistically creative as they once were, but they can still rally 'round the rock & roll and dazzle the hell out of their audience on any given night. With never the need of gimmicks, The Stones still possess all the rhythmic fire and defiant verve of yesteryear when they were young.

Love You Live is seemingly the band's way of letting everyone in the world know that they haven't forgotten how to rock & roll. With their last effort, Black And Blue, The Stones sounded like a tired old warhorse. And when guitarist Keith Richard began to find himself in almost as many different legal difficulties as one of our recent ex-presidents (I shan't name names), the cry went up from among the multitudes that The Stones would probably roll no more . Would the world be any a sadder place in which to live? Mayhaps, for legends die hard.

But The Rolling Stones are living legends who refuse to die. Love You Live brings them back from the cemetery gates where ever so many vultures had gleefully gathered to pick the bones. Just one momentary listening to of this album should be more than enough to convince the strongest doubter of the fact that The Rolling Stones are still a mighty force to be reckoned with.

No way can one mistake The Stones live for The Stones in the studio. The live Stones are a ferocious bunch who play their music loud, aggressive, and more than just a wee bit sloppy at times; just the way their fans first learned to love them back in 1964 (pray tell, where do the years go?).

Love You Live is a two continent chronicle with songs recorded in Europe (Paris) and North America (the fabled few evenings which the band performed at Toronto's tiny El Mocambo Club). On side one, Mick & mates enter amidst the piped-in pomp and splendor of Aaron Copland's "Fanfare For The Common Man" and burst into a pounding version of "Honky Tonk Women" whcih fills the Paris arena with the cheers of the multitudinous throng at both beginning and end. Next, the band regales the crowd with a medley consisting of "If You Can't Rock Me" and "Get Off Of My Cloud," the latter delivered with a totally different tune than the original. After this, we are "treated" to the raspy vocals of Keith Richard on "Happy." Keith sings about as well as he has to, but I fear he'll never be mistaken for Enrico Caruso. Still, for a change of pace, "Happy" works well. Following this up is the funky "Hot Stuff," which is in turn followed by the song with the provocatively interesting lyrics "Star Star." Someone or other asked me if I was going to refer to it by its original name of "Starfucker, " but I politely informed said individual that I have too much moral dignity to refer to it as such. Just let me say that this song is one which really reaches a climax. It's a splendid rocker.

Side two opens with a mellowed-out rendition of "Tumbling Dice" which is carried along nicely by Billy Preston (once the Fifth Beatle, now the Sixth Stone) on organ. It's even possible to distinguish the lyrics as Jagger somehow manages to make this song's vocals uncharacteristically understandable. From here, The Stones ramble off into a steady, if unspectacular, version of "Fingerprint File." After this comes the old blues tune"You Gotta Move," composed by McDowell and Davis. The side concludes with an epic version of "You Can't Always Get What You Want." Here, we are able to hear Mick as he converses with the crowd through the use of his cockney French. The Parisians respond by singing the chorus back to him in English. I'm unsure of whether or not this in itself is particularly significant, but it is interesting to note that, while these young Parisians may never have the desire to master the English of Shakespeare, they have already mastered that of Jagger.

Side three presents us with the positive results of those most ballyhooed spring evenings in Toronto. The selections here return The Stones to the R&B roots from whence they came, starting right out with the bluesey "Mannish Boy."This song's strong point is the harmonica play of Jagger which combines with the tandem guitars of Richard and Ron Wood to provide results which should please the most discriminating blues fanatic. Continuing to go back to their roots, the band proceeds to titilate the ears with versions of Ellas Mc Daniel's "Crackin' Up," Willie Dixon's "Little Red Rooster" and Chuck Berry's"Around And Around." However, what is even more remarkable bout this entire side is the tremendous amount of spontaneous electricity which playing in a small club brings to the group, something sadly lacking when they're playing inside the spaceous Madison Square Garden-type arenas throughout America. The prevailing spirit found on side three is best captured by Mick's comment to the crowd even before the first note has been played. "If you wanna dance with Billy (Preston) on the piano, you can," he quips. Could you possibly envision this remark being directed to the crowd at Madison Square Garden? No, I didn't think so. Moreover, as members of the audience are heard shouting for others to sit down, Mick drawls, "There's a bottom pincher from last night.. Watch out for your bottoms, Keith." More humor is added later through the rather ribald introductions by Jagger of the band's members. Of Richard, he says, "Keith, of course, is completely straight." Wanna bet?

Side four, were I pinched for time, would be the one side I'd most prefer to hear. Opening with a sizzling delivery of "It's Only Rock 'N' Roll, " it roars along with intense versions of three more Stones classics: "Brown Sugar," "Jumping Jack Flash" and 'Sympathy For The Devil." All of these move about as fast as a truant in a school zone. They're hot! Jagger's sinisterly gruff and snarling vocals, particularly on "Jumping Jack Flash," make him sound like a man posessed.

And so, "Sympathy For The Devil" energetically winds up Love You Live, conclusive proof that The Stones are still rolling. Indeed,I rate this one a "you can get some satisfaction" A.

(Atlantic)

Enigmatic Ocean is yet another strong album for Jean-Luc Ponty. It is an extremely worthy follow-up to the commercially successful Imaginary Voyage.In fact, Jean-Luc's distinctive sound has evolved more completely on Enimatic Ocean. Jean-Luc has proven over his last four albums, beyond a question of a doubt, that he is the premier jazz-rock violinist. His command of the instrument allows him to lead his band through all kinds of previously unexplored aspects of fusion-type music.

All the above praise for Ponty should not hide the fact that each member of his present band is also incredibly proficient. Allan Zavod and Daryl Stuermer, on keyboards and guitar respectively, are the only holdovers from Imaginary Voyage. Gong's current guitarist, Allan Holdsworth, makes his amazing presence felt, as he takes turns soloing with Stuerner. Ralph Armstrong, an ex-Mahavishnuan, who gets some incredible sounds out of his electric bass, and drummer Steve Smith round out the band.

Side one begins with the spacey "Overture", which then moves right into "Trans-Love Express", a typical Ponty tune that gets more than your foot moving. "Mirage", another great song precedes "Enigmatic Ocean". The twelve minute title track is both masterfully written and executed. Zavod, Stuermer, Holsworth, and Ponty trade numerous intense solos. Side two is also without any weak music. "Nostalgic Lady" opens the side and immediately ingrains itself in your head. "The Struggle of the Turtle to the Sea", a complex thirteen minute composition, ends the album. Call it fusion music, call it jazz-rock, or call it jazz. It doesn't matter what you call it, because it's excellent.

THE SAINTS
I'm Stranded
(Sire)

This is simply the best high-energy album of the year (so far,anyway-- let's see what the Sex Pistols come up with.)

Imagine the Ramones crossed with the Raw Power Stooges. Now, that may be some people's vision of hell, but it's my nirvana. And that's what these Australians sound like: a relentless wall-of-noise fronted by a guitarist who almost matches James Williamson for inspired insanity and one of the most listenable singers of the New Wave. It's exhilirating and exhausting.

There are a few change-of-pace numbers here,but laid-back mellow fellows are advised to stay clear;they'll sniff, "it all sounds the same",because they are too burnt out to appreciate real,undiluted rock 'n' roll anymore. I'm Stranded is for those of us who like to get cra-zee.Included are both sides of the smash British single,"I'm Stranded"/"No Time",a direct steal of "I Wanna Be Your Man" called "Erotic Neurotic" (great title) that makes earlier versions sound like Guy Lombardo, and a cover of an Elvis throwaway, "Kissin' Cousins," that you just won't believe! The production could be better, but then,so could Raw Power's. The music still grabs you and shakes you mercilessly.

If this album isn't enough for you, the Saints have a new import single, "This Perfect Day" b/w "L•I•E•S",that's somewhat different and just as good. I'm dying for the new album already! WILL YOU FOOLS STOP BUYING KISS KRAP,FOR CRYING OUT LOUD?! And the Rolling Stones have long since smothered in moss, so don't worry about Jagger Comes Alive, either.

TOM WAITS
FINE ARTS CENTER
SEPT. 29, 1977

It wasn't the Dead Boys at the Met, or even Ted Nugent at the Newman Center for that matter, but Tom Waits' performance last Friday night at the Fine Arts Center certainly was deserving a niche in the archives of the incongruity. It was a preposteroulsy odd-coupling, to be sure, but neither the Fine Arts Center nor Waits -- easily the most vagrant visage ever displayed there -- seemed any worse off for it at night's end. Friday's performance was, in fact, something of a model concert, a nearly flawless undertaking that showcased Waits' talents to their best effect, while epitomizing the potential of on-campus concerts.

The night began when Waits -- immediately following the obligatory no-smoking announcement-- stagger-stepped to the spotlight, trailing a cloud of nicotine from a freshly lit cigarette. There, looking impeccably shabby as he fronted his three-piece band, The Nocturnal Emissions, Waits rippled the crowd with applause and laughter as he launched into a perversely personalized version of "Standin' on the Corner", choreographing it with some of the most lecherous body language this side of the Combat Zone.

From that point on, Waits had the audience locked up so tight even a politician couldn't have stolen them. He performed two sets with two encores, shuffling his moods and personae with the consumate skill of a legerdemainist. "Emotional Weather Report", "Pasties and a G-String", and "Step Right Up" revealed Waits, the speed-addled huckster,spitting out rhyming wads of double-talk in triple time; "Small Change" and "Tom Traubert's Blues", both grim, razor-edged word portraits, explored the bleaker side of Waits' pock-marked mindscape, while "Jitterbug Boy","I Can't Wait To Get off Work" and "The Heart of Saturday Night" articulated perfectly the empathy and wry compassion that informs Waits' best best work, raising it to a kind of rot-gut romanticism.

TOM WAITS

Among the night's highlights were the debut of two of Waits' new compositions, both from his new Foreign Affairs album. "Burma Shave" was striking for its imagery("she took out her barrettes and her hair spilled out like root beer"), while "Jack and Neal" was an ode to the road, paying divided homage to moon-mania and to his spiritual forebearers, the proto-typical beat characters Jack Kerouac and Neal Cassady.

After a nearly two-and-a-half hour show, Waits performed the last encore--"The Piano Has Been Drinking"--alone, in the spotlight, at his piano. A perfectly selected endpiece, the tune seemed at once much more humorous and more pathetic in concert than on record, as the characteristic quavering of Waits' bar-room baritone literally filled the entire hall. Even leaving the stage to the ringing applause of nearly 1500 people, Waits still seemed oblivious, a man set apart-- which of course he is. As Waits has continued to polish and extend his craft, he has proven, as he did Friday night, that he is much more than a charming, anacronistic novelty act. Waits now stands as a one-man span between the rich musical tradition of the forties and fifties and the present-- a proud, self contained musical generation of one.

'Rigoletto'

Michael Doran

The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theater's production of Rigoletto was an overall success at the Fine Arts Center Monday night. The compact company, under the artistic direction of the noted authority and producer of opera, Mr. Goldowsky, did well in ringing alive the opera by Verdi in an age when opera can seem pretty dead.

Obviously the star of his opera company (the staging, conducting, and translating from the original was all done by him), Goldovsky appeared before the curtain prior to the play and announced that he was happy to be there and also that there would be an intermission change. With the grace of a true public performer he gave us his message without the aid of the microphone that died on him before he could get past the first "test". The good feelings he engenders has a lot to do with the success he has had in promoting the art form he loves.

The production itself was good, considering the expense of an opera production and the money he has to work with. Some of the magnificence so needed in Rigoletto was not there though. The ballroom scene was rather sparse in the way of actors on the stage, and the set was less than kingly, but the 14 actors did their best to fill in. The other problems with the production were the lighting, which was so bad I find it hard to believe a professional was in charge of it, and the unfortunate problem with hearing. The lighting was almost always too dim and if the actor was wearing a hat he might as well have been faceless. The hearing problem was due mostly to the fact that the hall is quite a considerable cavern to fill with sound unaided by a microphone with a little blame on the orchestra for loudness in a few instances.

The lead actor, William McDoanld, who played the Duke had a lovely tenor voice that only shone in the third and fourth acts because of the sound problem, but when it was heard it was well worth the wait. His acting leaves much to be desired but then again opera is not for acting or actors, it is for singing singers. As the lady killing Duke he was splendid, especially in his last song.

Rigoletto, his court jester, played by Joseph Shore, starts off slowly in this production but gradually brings some life to the part. As a hunchback he was not quite convincing, his manic movements were a bit too staged, but nonetheless he does serve the purpose as the bearer of the moral in this play, i.e. he who hates will eventually loose all he loves. His Lear like role in the last scene was done well, any dramatic failure was not at all his fault, but rather the fault of an art form that would have a girl who was just stabbed in the chest sing in lovely melting tones while dying for five long minutes. I simply found the whole thing melodramatic and too much of a steal from Shakespeare.

Peggy Pruat, who played Gilda, Rigoletto's daughter, was another fine voice who fell victim to the sound in the theater. She simply does not have the depth of voice to fill the hall in the extreme ranges of her voice, but the middle tones were both loud and wonderfully melifluous. She was the best actor of them all, she played her role of victim of both father and Duke without too much of the weepy eyes and hand to the forehead that are so easily included in such a role. Again if her dying aria was not so comic it would be wonderful.

The other two major actors, Richard Crist and Mariana Paunova, who played the assasin and his siter, filled their roles with alacrity if not inspiration, and carried of the murder scene well. The only problem here was the staging. Why the director had these two sewing up Gilda behind a table with the lights dimmed is not clear to me. The scene is tedious enough without pointing up the fact that sewing a body in a sack is not very interesting stage business.

The other actors, who played the courtesans and various other roles were good, doing their best to fill the stage and sing their parts while scurrying around the main actors.

I am glad I went to see this production, despite its problems with sparseness and technicals. I can't help thinking that opera, though not a twentieth century art form by any means, can be worth seeing and can be entertaining despite its obvious drawbacks. Mr. Goldovsky can be congratulated for this.

SARAH VAUGHAN IN CONCERT

Fine Arts Center
September 29

Sarah Vaughan, the great jazz singer, appeared last Thursday night at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall with her trio of Walter Booker on bass, Jimmy Cobb on drums and Charlton Schroder on piano. She presented a well-recieved program of mostly older popular standards, including encores of "Misty", "Tenderly", and "Send in the Clowns".

I was disappointed that she chose to sing only one Beatles song since she had been working on a Beatles song album for Atlantic until it was unfortunately dropped and the predominately young audience would have been better able to appreciate her singing.

The majority of her selections were standard bitter-sweet fare with her singing often dangling too close to the bland to be really effective. Her version of "On a clear day..." for example, paled beside Barbara Streisand's.This isn't to say there weren't some great moments (as in the ending to Tadd Dameron's, "If you could see me now"), it's just one expects more from Sarah Vaughan than a highly professional nightclub act. Her marvelous moments were too few for me to get really excited. I never got that rush of feeling as when hearing say... Nina Simone's great version of Bessie Smith's "I want a Little Sugar in my Bowl".

Her trio's musicianship ran the gamut from her pianist, Charlton Schroder's fine accompanyment to her drummer, Jimmy Cobb's often inappropriate playing. (His solos must be ranked with the worst I have heard.)

Its too bad we didn't catch Sarah Vaughan singing with the imagination, empathy and energy she is capable of.

EDDIE KENDRICKS
Slick
(Motown)

It's been quite awhile since Eddie has done an album under the production of Leonard Caston. The last time the two got together,a pretty good album called People and a dynamite single called "Date With The Rain" came out of it.This isn't to say that this album is a stunning repeat of that effort,but the LP ain't bad.

There's a little more Detroit in this one than his past couple of albums,but then it was recorded there. The reunion/and replacement while cute in gesture aren't an improvement on vinyl. Even Eddie himself seems to get a little disenchanted with the whole project, and rightly so ,as I probably would have left the studio had they asked me (if I had a voice like Eddie's) to do a remake of"Diamond Girl". Maybe it's my bias, but that song was written for the weak warblings of the original artists,not for a vocalist of Kendricks' stature.

After this one, I must say that I long for a reunion with Philly's Norman "The Harris Machine"Harris. But then I guess that we the public must realise that these combinations can't last forever. Hopefully though,for Eddies sake, this reunion can take place. I,for one,would glady welcome it.

There are a lot of vocalists getting recognition(which in most cases they rightly deserve) so there has to be that "something extra" to set some aside and some to greatness. Unfortunately, Leonard Caston's production and writing isn't giving Mr. Kencricks that "something extra". This album doesn't do too much at all for Eddie but it's not all Lenny's fault.I mean, ya' gotta sing the songs like ya mean 'em Eddie!!

JETHRO BURNS
(Flying Fish)

Jethro Burns is not a rock and roll band. Nor is his a household name. Never will be. Came close a number of years back when he played with Homer Haynes in a duo known as Homer and Jethro. Of course. Their claim to fame sprang from parodies of popular songs. Not that Homer and Jethro didn't have the "straight" stuff down pat. They did. Now Jethro has been playing around the country circuit for the past decade and a half. I figure that's because he plays mandolin. It's not because he plays only country music. For a man who has played mandolin professionally for 45 of his 57 years, this album is amazingly young. And humorous, too. Jethro leads a band here that gives the Grand Tour: Bluegrass breakdowns, rock and roll, western swing, down home humor, even vocal jazz.

Vassar Clements' fiddle and Johnny Burns' electric guitar share the limelight and lend balance to an album that doesn't overwhelm you with heavy licks. Plenty of good licks though. All's well and good for a man who can be described as little less than a contemporary humoristic satanic swinger from a well-swung past.

Mark Harris Levitan

DIANA ROSS
Baby It's Me
(Motown)

Ms. Ross continues to swing on the sophisticated side of things with this release and the lady's class once again shows through. The music goes from the mellow, passes through ballads and into the boogie. With Ms. Ross' voice as the vehicle, the voyage is more than pleasant.

The album may not have a single smash on it as her past LPs have, but I feel that this one is overall her strongest LP to date. It's the album that those wno appreciate the lady's voice(not the material she's doing) will want to sit through the most. Yes ,ladies and gentlemen, no longer do you have to get up and change and/or flip over discs to hear four or five good -to-excellent Diana Ross performaances at a time. None of the music on the LP sounds like"filler," which is refreshing to me as I always thought of the lady as an album artist rather than a smash singles artist.

Baby It's Me is hopefully a sign of things to come from Motown's"First Lady." Give this one a listen; I mean , there'll probably be no sticker on the jacket saying, "Contains the HIT SINGLE...," but then a lot of people have "Smash Hit Singles".

LEO SAYER

Thunder in my Heart
(Warner Bros.)

Leo Sayer's ne album ,like his previous one ,was produc by Richard Perry, and as usual Perry's presence is a mixed blessing. On one hand,Sayer's singing has improved remarkably since his association with Perry. Gone are the thin and hesitant vocals of Sayer's earlier records, and the engergy and confidence with which he now sings make for exciting listening. But on the negative side,the individuality of Sayer's music has declined. Perry has produced a number of commercially successful records (Burton Cummings,Ringo,etc.) and has developed a formula which he applies to everything he produces: Put the vocals way up front,provide a strong,funky backbeat with the rhythm section, and apply a generous helping of strings if its a slow number or horns if it's a fast one. The resulting album has a very slick, commerciallized sound and seems more like a collection of singles than a unified album. But all ten of the songs onThunder in My Heart are filled with catchy tunes and melodic hooks,and this album could be where some of the best hit singles of next year are coming from.

So far ,so good. But we haven't come to the album's major problem,which is that as Sayer tailors his music to his newly-expanded audience, he seems to be neglecting his talent as a lyricist. Instead of the more imaginative lyrics of his earlier songs,he now writes such simplistic sentiments as"It's easy to love/When I love someone like you". The world can always use a well-written love song ,but when one considers how skillful Sayer was at creating stories and characters in such earlier songs as "Moonlighiing" and "Giving it All Away",the lyrics of his newer songs(he does't write the music) seem more than a bit feeble.

It's Sayer's vocals,however,which give these songs life and push this album above the level of mediocre. The exuberance of his stage personality has been well captured on this record,and the enthusiasm which he applies to each tune keeps such numbers as the title track from degenerating into disco,and keeps Thunder in My Heart from becoming Rain On My Turntable.

ALAN PARSONS PROJECT

I Robot
(Arista)

Although I Robot is only Alan Parson's second personal attempt at an album, he is hardly an unknown around the music industry, especially around Abbey Road Studios where he is head engineer. Parsons has worked on such albums as The Beatles' classic Abbey Road, several McCartney solos, some Pink Floyd, and Al Stewart's phenomenally successful Year Of The Cat.

I Robot comes across as sci-fi rock, with Parsons writing, producing, engineering and playing keyboards (obviously a múltitalented individual). The album presents the story of "The Rise of the Machine and The Decline of Man," but this concept is garbled on the second side with some rather unconventional-type songs such as "Nucleus" and "Total Eclipse" (reminiscent of Spaceman Bowie's Low album, side 2). "Total Eclipse" paints a spacey, eerie picture via a choir "ahing" their way in and out of dischord only to have a backing orchestra enter to add to the song's spaceshot effect. The rest of the album is generally good, as the songs flow in a more conventional form. Due to their pleasing melodies and arrangements, best cuts are "Some Other Time," "Don't Let It Show," and "Day After Day." The employment of a brass section in "Some Other Time" brings to mind Rick Wakeman's No Earthly Connection.

Other moments of interest are found on "The Voice," which contains an extremely interesting rhythm change accompanied with a syncopated string section and some Pink Floydian sound effects. Other Floyd influences can be found in the first few bars of the title track (ebbing quickly away into a building instrumental).

Musically, I Robot is a good effort, but I wouldn't go so far as to call is a "masterpiece," as Billboard advertisements strongly suggest.

Paul Wisniowski

VASSAR CLEMENTS

The Bluegrass Session
(Flying Fish)

Vassar Clements is perhaps the most highly regarded fiddler in bluegrass-swing tradition today. This album contains some of the finest fiddle playing I have ever heard. In fact, I am sorry he doesn't play more. Vassar moves with ease from soulful swoops to building melodic choruses that serve as compelling examples of how the fiddle can be played. Special mention must also be given to Bobby Osborne who sings lead on the album's six vocals. It's not very often one hears singing that so effectively explores the nuances evoked by lyrics. (... He also has a great voice.)

The songs are organized around a series of traded solos which take off from the principal melody, usually introduced by Vassar in the opening solo. Sensitive support is always given by the resiliant rhythm section of Don Messina and Dave Humpherys and the rest of the ensemble.

So far, one might think I am heading towards a rave review but there are aspects of the album I must take issue with. The solos while never indulgent in length, drag in places, particularly on the second side. The other musicians seem unable to match the creative use of accent and tempo that is present in Vassar's solos, often falling back on rapidly executed interlocking runs which eventually take the edge off the pulse of ths songs. Such possibilities as chord work, the establishment of melodic dialogue through contrasting lines and solos and the use of slower paced solos over a more insistent rhythm section are unfortunaltely generally avoided.

Of course one could make this kind of complaint about many fine albums but I feel this weakness is particularly telling here because of the continuity of mood from one song to another. To sum up, while I think this an excellent album it's not quite what it could be. Still... that the artistry of these musicians can make us realize that, is in the end a promising sign and how many albums brimming with exuberance in the midst of sadness do you have?

Cria'

Atlantic Releasing Corporation
by Debbie Wallace

As I left the movie theater I had a hope that everyone would attend the film at one time or another. It had an icredible way of making you laugh, and making you cry an instant later. The film is foreign the language spoken is Spanish and the sub titles are quite good. The acting is expressive, vivid, and very real.

The word Cria' translated means ones breeding or process of growing up. The movie's main character Anna, played by Anna Torrent, is a beautiful child that captured my heart almost immediately. It is the story of her childhood which is quite a bitter story at that. Her mother dies when she is young, and Anna expressses herself through her mother's memory, which is very vivid. She watches as her parents fight, and sees how unsympathetic her father is when her mother says she is dying. She is an on-looker as her mother painfully dies from an illness as well as heart break, which is due to her father's unfaithfulness. Anna feels much love for her mother and in the way of flashbacks the audience can see the delicate relationship and the deep sadness because the mother has died.

While in bed at night Anna blinks her eyes while holding them very tightly shut and makes her mother appear. Her mother then tells her a bedtime story. As Anna awakens, you realize along with her that it was just a bittersweet dream. You wish along with the child that the mother was still alive. Anna tells some of the story as a grown woman in this flashback style, and both her mother and that character are played by a quite sensitive actress, Geraldine Chaplin. You can clearly see in this how much Anna is like--or is her mother. In one of the falsh-back incidents she relates that "childhood is very painful, and that feeling is strong, very strong", Anna expresses this in her sometimes witty, sometimes heartbreaking childhood that she shares with her two sisters and aunt who is gardian over the children after her father dies. His death is a puzzle to the audience and it is up to each person to figure out the causes in which he died.

There is also the madness of this child remembering her mother so strongly that she seems to be actually there to love.

The movie was very symbolic and the song that is repeated a few times throughout the movie is catchy as well as beautiful. The song tells Anna's story as the translated words are "sunshine in the window, but sadness in my heart, as you are leaving." You begin to understand that Anna loses a great deal of her heart when her mother dies. Yet through all, her childhood continues.

Eelgrass

Joe Ashby Porter
220 pp $4.95 (paper)
Patti Rosenberg

I kept wondering if Eelgrass wasn't in fact a children's book until halfway through when I decided even in the 1970's constant references to drugs and sex are still confined to novels intended for grown-ups.

Upon further reflection, I began to consider the possiblity that Eelgrass was written by a child. Which would explain many things. Like why the characters are one-dimensional stick figures, developed and defined by little else than their age, sex, and good-or bad-"guyness."; like why a book just slightly over 200 pages has chapters. As any second-grader knows, it is easier to start a new chapter than accomplish a transition in plot or character through the prose itself; like why the author doesn't know that a question, even inside quotation marks ("?") is not dialogue. And looks even sillier twice (p 66 and p 80) because one suspects that not just the character, but his creator too is at a loss for words.

Whether you call it the reader's willing suspension of disbelief or just good faith, it is strained by page 3 when Porter (like a schoolboy who's learned his lesson well) mechanically reports "Thuggy wears tennis shoes, baggy olive-colored Bermuda shorts, a purple silk undershirt, and a leather motorcyclist's jacket. He has an aluminum necklace of tabbed rings from snap-top beer cans. Jimbo today is wearing a blue work shirt, worn brown corduroy trousers, and sandals. He has wire-rimmed spectacles. Carter as always is dressed most simply. He has a white tee shirt and faded dungarees, nothing else- no footwear, no jewelry, no underwear." And so it goes.

According to the back cover, Eelgrass was begun in 1970. If Joe Ashby Porter is now ten, he shows,in this his first novel, some potential.

Cabaret Brecht: To see us from the ground up
City Studio Theater
25 Main St.
Northampton, Mass.
September 29 - October 23

After walking up a flight of stairs I became a part of a dark mistique atmosphere of the City Studio Theater. The actors playing in the new location of the theater have many resources available to them. There is a stage, equipped with a piano and drums for this production. There is also a screen with a platform under it, and a balcony to the right of the audience. The actors also use the area behind the tables chairs where the audience sit.

The play Cabaret Brecht is a conglomeration of Berto Brecht's poetry and plays. The play opens with the song 'Mack the Knife' which is sung in German first and then English. The play is done in segments, each with a title. In each segment the actors perform a song, poem, or skit-like piece. The poetry is read with incredible emotion with the use of voice techniques to add effect. The use of the balcony adds a great deal to the play as does the excellent use of the entire area the actors have. The voice tone, and voice quality is good, and the movement flows.The tension of the poems is well received, as they are gripping, and at certain pauses the audience longs for the next words. The audience seemed aware, attentive, and very much moved by the poems. The wit in the skits was also appreciated. The songs were catchy and very symbolic. The skits were about reality and life, and raised many questions in my head about life. This play is a proposai for awareness and will benefit any one that experiences it. If Brecht had been seated near me, he might have been quite pleased with the performance. The play runs until October 23. Cider, coffee, wine and beer can be purchased at the theater.

The performances are Thursday through Saturday evenings-8:00 -$3.00 Sunday Matinees-2:00 -$2.50.

Staged Cabaret

"Cabaret Brecht: To See Us from the Ground Up", a musical medley by Bertolt Brecht opened at the City Studio Theater in Northampton last Thursday.

The play is in a cabaret (i.e., night club), format. It consists of a series of skits with music in between. CST's new theater is uniquely appropriate for a cabaret format, as there are stages on two adjacent walls and another in the corner between the two walls. The left stage is where the band is set up. On the right wall is a balcony. In the corner is a stage propped a few feet off the floor with a screen for slide projection above it.

The play seems to be about a theatrical troupe from Germany having studied America, as did the French writer De Tocqueville, now wants to offer its interpretation to the American audience. At various times throughout the play, the song "Mack the Knife", is played, first in German with all following renditions in English.

Many of the skits reflect Brecht's radical philosophy. In one scene, the actors, playing workers, speak out in unity with cold, passionate, stridency against the conditions to which they're subject, creating the impression of a collective struggle. Another skit satirizes "bosses" and "fascists". During the skits, a red star is slide projected on the screen above the corner stage. With a band and slide projector, along with the cast, CST's production is a multi-media one.

"Cabaret Brecht" is a play that entertains, yet is intellectually challenging and requires concentration. The skits follow one another in a rat-a-tat-tat pattern which can make it difficult to get a handle on the theme. Actually,it might be best to see the play at least twice.

CST's new location on 49 Pearl St., Northampton, is right across the street from Gleason's camping supply store. It is directly above the Polish Club bar. Free champagne, cider and cookies are served before and after the play and during intermission. For beer and other liquor, an inside stairway leads directly downstairs to the Polish Club.

"Cabaret Brecht" will be performed Thursday through Saturday evenings at 8 pm and Sunday matinees at 2:15 p.m. Also, it will be repeated this season in a late night cabaret setting. The admission price at the Thursday and Sunday shows is $2.50 and $3.00 for Friday and Saturday.

Antigone Auditions

AUDITIONS SET FOR ANOUILH'S ANTIGONE

The University Ensemble Theater of the UMass Theater Department has announced that open auditions for Jean Anouilh's ANTIGONE will be held October 11, 12, and 13 in Room 204 of the UMass Fine Arts Center. Auditions begin at 7:00 pm. Those auditioning should sign up for a 15 minute time slot.

A sign up sheet is posted outside of the main offices of the UMass Theater Department. Auditions are open to everyone.

ANTIGONE is Anouilh's uncompromising adaptation of Sophocles' great tragedy about the rights of the individual versus the so-called "greater good of the state." Harry Mahnken, associate professor of theater at UMass, will direct the production. Mahnken stated that those auditioning may prepare an audition piece but that it is not required.

However, they will be expected to read from the script. Reading scripts are available from him in Room 105 of the Fine Arts Center. Further questions about the play should be directed to Mahnken at 545-0678.

ANTIGONE will be produced in the Fine Arts Center's Curtain Theater December 2-4 and 6-10. In addition, the cast will be expected to be available the week of January 24th for another performance at the New England Regionals of the American College Theater Festival X which will be held at UMass in January. The cast of 8 men and 4 women are also eligible for the ACTF's Irene Ryan Scholarship awards.

Those who cannot get to the Department of Theater to sign up for an audition time slot, should call the department's main office at 545-3490 and have their name put on the list.

Swing...

Benny Goodman

'The King of Swing', Benny Goodman brings his sextet to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on October 15 at 8 pm as part of the University of Massachusetts homecoming.

A leader in jazz and popular music for over forty years, Mr. Goodman will perform selections from his vast repertoire of popular and jazz hits.

It was over forty years ago that Benny Goodman reported for his first job as a clarinetist, aboard a Lake Michigan excursion steamer. Trumpter Bix Biederbecke, mistaking the lad wearing spectacles and knee pants for a meddlesome brat fooling with the band's instruments threatened to pull his ears if he didn't"go back home."

The band's leader arrived just in time to introduce the the instrumentalists, and Benny proved able to hold his own in the 4-piece band, while absorbing every bit of jazz lore from the great Bix.

It was to "immortals" like Biederbecke, Louis Armstrong, Frank Teschemacher, Johnny Dodds and Jimmy Noone that Benny listened to during his formative years. Today youngsters turn to Benny Goodman, who has become a legend in his own time, for the finest examples of jazz artistry and unsurpassed clarinet work.

Since those early days, Benny has been credited as the Founder and King of Swing. He is indelibly identified the world over as the one man who became the "Big Band Era" in the 193os.

In addition to big band jazz, he is credited for creating a more subtle swing thatcame to be known as "chamber music" jazz.

That trend started when Benny and pianist Teddy Wilson played together for pure pleasure. It sounded so pleasantly relaxed to Benny and Teddy, that they added Gene Krupa on drums, creating the first Benny Goodman Trio. Within a year, vibraphonist Lionel Hampton was added, and the immortal Benny Goodman Quartet was in being.

Next came the Sextet, featuring the totally new sound of an amazing guitarist, Charlie Christian, and bassist Art Bernstein. Throughout the years, the personnel changed, but the quality has always been a mainstay of any Goodman band.

No matter what are the faces, Benny's leadership and virtuosity points the way to an inimitable jazz combo mood that at once is subtle but authoriatively stated, light but compelling, and above all, swinging.

Times change. Some musical forms are born, rise to crescendo then fade into history. Swing, in the person of Benny Goodman, lives happily on into the 1970s. The King remains, not as a pale ghost of yesterday, but as a vital, constantly evolving modern musician, forever refining and enriching his art for all generations, reinforcing old favorites, bringing his own special meaning and genius to the compositions of Mancini, Bachrach or the Beatles.

Tickets for Benny Goodman are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office, open 9-4 Monday through Friday, and all Ticketron outlets.

Ticket prices are: General public $7,6,5. UMass students are $3.50, 3.00 and 2.50. Other students and Senior citizens are $6,5,4. For more information, call 545-3670.

CABARET

The "wunderbar"musical CABARET which blends a feverish period of history with the vibrancy of a modern song-and-dance show, and won all the available prizes and awards when it began its truimphant three year run in New York in 1966 will be presented by the National touring Broadway cast at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Thursday, October 13 at 8 pm.

Cabaret is part of the Broadway series of the Fine Arts Center, University of Massachusetts.

Cabaret is set in Berlin at the beginning of the 1930's just before the storm and the storm-troopers took over Germany.

The slashing musical begins in a gaudy night club where a mincing, smirking, clown-faced master of cermonies sings an imprudent song of welcome to the cabaret's uneasy customers, promising them naughty songs and enticingly half-dressed girls, all of which are indeed delivered.

Judi Laurence stars in Cabaret as the rootless Sally Bowles, who thinks the nightclub's tinselly atmosphere is heavenly, but doesn't hesitate, when meeting a poor ambitious American writer, Clifford Bradshaw, to be played by Peter Boynton. (A University of Massachusetts graduate '77) to move right into his shabby rented room with him.

The action which follows is both beautiful and tragic.

Cabaret is a scintillating unconventional musical play.

In 1967 Cabaret won the Tony Award, the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award, the Other Critics' Circle Award and the London Evening Standard's Award for the best musical of the season in the British Capital. Cabaret won eight Tony awards.

Tickets are now on sale for Cabaret at the Fine Arts Center Box office, open 9-4 Monday through Friday and all Ticketron outlets.

Ticket prices are: General public, $7, 6, 5. UMass students are $3.50, 3.00 and 2.50. Other students and Senior citizens are $6,5, 4. For more information, call 545-2511.

George Benson

The 1976 Grammy Award winner will be appearing at the University of Massachusetts, on Thursday, October 13th.

The George Benson concert will be held at the Curry Hicks Cage, and is part of a series of concerts being sponsored by the Union Program Council.

George Benson has been recording for over 20 years and has won numerous jazz polls both nationally and internationally. His biggest selling record has been Breezin and The Masquerade.

Tickets are now available at Tix, which is located on the main level of the Student Union Building, U. Mass, and cost is $5.00 for U.Mass students with a valid student ID, and $6.50 for general admission. Tickets are also on sale at Faces of Earth, Sun Music, Backroom Records, and Sound Room in Northampton.

Nadar says there is still hope

Big corporate-government is not invincible, according to consumer advocate Ralph Nader. Staff photo by Dave Hodgers

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader told a Fine Arts Center crowd of 1100 last night, "there is hope for consumer action in this country."

Nader said that big corporate-government is not invincible. "Its the consumers who pay the bill and they can call the tune if they organize. Its the taxpayers that pay the bill and they can call the tune if they organize," Nader said.

Nader continued by saying that consumers were the most unorganized group in the country.

"All our institutions are designed to make it impossible to organize," said Nader. "Consumers pay for T.V., but they can't talk back to it."

Nader said big business went to Washington and took control of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), and blocked cable T.V. and sophisticated sattelite systems that could facilitate two-way communication on hundreds of channels, and vastly improve citizen communication.

"Is this all compatable with democracy?" Nader asked.

Nader went to point out three or four steel companies control the steel industry, two or three automobile companies control the auto industry, and seven oil companies control the oil industry.

"No one should have that kind of power," Nader said. "A handful of corporate executives are deciding what kind of air you breathe. You cannot avoid breathing GM's air."

Nader blasted the concept of deregulating the oil industry to allow free competition.

"There is no market in natural gas. Production of natural gas is concentrated into a couple of hands," he said.

Nader said that consumers must concentrate on "structural change that will proliferate opportunities into the future" to make reform easier.

Nader cited the legislation to establish a national consumer cooperative bank as the kind of structural change needed. He explained the difficulty of oil, food and many other co-ops in obtaining credit from banks."

"Banks don't like co-ops," asserted Nader, "but we're going to get this bill passed so co-ops will get credit. Then the consumer co-op movement will take off."

Nader cited Sen. Edward Kennedy as the "best Senator in Congress. Not only does he pay attention to detail but he pays attention to citizens action legislation. The ones that really matter. Laws that can be enforced by the people."

Nader pointed specifically to Kennedy's legislation that will allow a citizen the right to sue the government for not conducting their business properly. Previously this had to be done by the government agency.

Nader said that when the democratic fails, citizens must use the most direct form of democracy, the initiative referendum and recall, "to bypass the legislative process."

"Students must help MassPIRG in its effort to take on the Telephone Company," Nader said in reference to the TELCAG campaign that would establish a consumer advocate group in Mass. to check New England Telephone Co.

"We want to create a worthy opposition to the telephone company. If it works with the Telephone Co. why wouldn't it work with the oil companies?"

In one of his lighter moments, Nader pointed out "how much fun it would be to watch the Telephone Co. swivel and twist. Its more fun than watching UMass beat UConn in football."

Nader credited the UMass community as being far ahead of most students in such areas as student unionization. He said unionization was good and the student goals were concrete but he advised organizers to change the name because it gives a stereotype that turns students off.

Nader amused the crowd by comparing the open learning atmosphere of UMass to the Penn State campus which he called "stupid, ignorant, and authortarian", "run just like a business," and "the pinball capitol of the world."

Several research grants received

By PATTI TOPED
Collegian Staff

The National Science Foundation has recently awarded several research grants to various departments at UMass.

One grant for $367,550 will support a 14-month project entitled "Research Program on Natural Disaster Recovery Processes Relief, Rehabilitation, and Preparedness."

Dr. Peter H. Rossi of the sociology department, and director of the project, said, "The research is being done in two parts. The first is an attempt to discern the long term effects that hurricanes, tornados, and floods have on small areas, such as neighborhoods. So far there has been essentially none. The second part deals with the potential for disaster mitigating techniques in areas where hurricanes are more frequent, and severe damage more likely to occur."

The first part of the disaster relief program was begun in January, 1976. Following reapplication and approval for the renewal of the grant in June, part two began.

"The research should continue through the summer of 1978," Rossi said.

A second $102,900 grant will support a 24-month project entitled "Elementary Particle Theory." Coordinators for this project are Drs. John J. Brehm, Eugene Golowich, and Arthur R. Swift of the Physics department. According to Brehm, "The project began in 1967, with a slightly larger staff. We have renewed the grant five time since then at two year intervals."

The project studies the interaction of elementary particles, which is the ultimate constituent of matter. "To break it down even further, we are studying the 'quarks', which are the constituents of elementary particles," Brehm said.

"The grants are given on the basis of peer reviews of project proposals," said Dr. John J. Nordin, of the Biochemistry department, recipient of a $55,000 grant. "Scientists from all over the nation review the proposals, which include a list of previous investigations and a proposed budget, which may be revised if not accepted the first time," he said.

Nordin's project, entitled "Chemical Structure of Fungal Cell Wall Polysacchrides," is a 24-month project which studies the way in which complex molecules are assembled from simple ones.

"The initial research began 11 years ago," Nordin said.

The grants include salary allocations for graduate research students as well as for post-doctoral research associates. Prof. Rossi's project also staffs between 15 and 16 undergraduate administrative asistants.

The UMass Water Resources Research Center in Amherst was the recipient of a $31,386 award given by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Enrique LaMotta, Assistant-Professor of Civil Engineering, and co-director of the project entitled "Evaluation of Natural Inhibiting Factors in an Aggressive Drinking Water Supply," said, "The EPA contacted B.B. Berger, director of the water resources, center to do a study of Amherst water to determine what factors in water that are classified as very aggressive, cause it not to be extremely corrosive to asbestos-cement pipe and other materials."

Dean Adrian, director of the Environmental Engineering Program, said, "Aggressive water, or water containing chemicals, normally corodes the distribution system's pipes." Amherst water, though classified as aggressive, has not produced this effect. "The research project will attempt to discover and hopefully isolate the natural inhibitors to corrosion which seem to be present in Amherst water," Adrian said.

"I will be concerned for the most part with the engineering point of view," Prof. LaMotta said. "For example, predicting the composition of the water at any given site with respect to environmental factors, such as the number of people in the area at a certain time."

Co-director Oliver T. Zajicek, Associate Professor of Chemistry, will be primarily involved with the chemical side of the project, which studies the chemicals present in aggressive versus non-aggressive water.

Tuesday marks Handicap Awareness Day

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

It's raining outside.

You find yourself confronted with the problem of getting indoors — anywhere. What to do?

For most of us, the solution is easy. We run into the nearest building; we open an umbrella. Or, we run home to warmth and cover.

Wheelchairs, however, are not so easily maneuvered as a pair of strong healthy legs. They are, in fact, quite a handicap to those constrained to them. To those in wheelchairs, a curb can loom larger than any barrior confronted by other students in day-to-day campus life; it's quite a feat to manage an umbrella and wheelchair at once; and, home is a lot further away than just a ½ mile walk.

They do say, "When it rains, it pours."

For the handicapped, when it rains, there is a good chance of getting wet.

However, rain or shine, Tuesday, Oct. 11, marks Handicap Awareness Day at UMass.

Various activities are scheduled throughout the day, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at both the Student Union Ballroom and Patterson House in Southwest. It is a day for everyone — faculty, administrators and students — to increase awareness of the handicapped on campus and the problems that confront them.

Interested in getting a first-hand experience of just what being handicapped on campus involves? If so, come down to the SUB and check out a wheelchair for the day. Or try a blindfold on for size.

Scheduled activities for the day will allow students, administrators, and faculty members to try to simulate a handicapped student's experience. Fifteen minute wheelchair tours will be conducted, for any who desire to see some of the things a handicapped person has to deal with.

There even will be a wheelchair obstacle course around and through the Student Union and Campus Center that everyone can try.

And, for those of you attracted by prominent people, Robert L. Woodbury, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, reportedly will be spending some time of his own in a wheelchair.

In addition, the day's events will include vision testing from 9 a.m. - noon, an audiological display, and films and slide-tape shows on handicaps and their effects. Literature will be available, and a special treat will be the showing of the film, "The Other Side of the Mountain" from 7:30-9 p.m. at the SUB. This film will be captioned.

Asked in an interview Wednesday, if he anticipated a great deal of participation, Paul Appleby, coordinator of Handicapped Student Affairs said, "I'm hoping so, I really am. We've asked a lot of people, and are hoping for a large turn-out — and, a resultant increase in public awareness."

Appleby cited two main problems presently dealt with by the handicapped on campus: those of the archetectual barriors, and those of attitudinal barriors.

"This problem of archetectual barriors is quite prevalent," Appleby said.

"It is improving, but things you and I would not consider barriors, such as a few steps, for the handicapped in wheelchairs pose great problems," he said.

"Also," continued Appleby, "there is a problem with many existant additudinal barriors. Many times, others are simply not aware of the concerns of handicapped people. Intentionally or unintentionally their actions often portray an attitude of inconsiderateness."

Handicapped UMass student Sandy Cohen agrees. A sophomore Casiac student living in Patterson House, the only dorm on campus presently equipped for the handicapped, Cohen has put much effort into organizing this event during the past week.

"I really hope people just come and see for themselves what handicapped living is like — what it is, in itself," Cohen said in an interview yesterday. "I encourage people to come and see for themselves."

So, for those interested in getting a first-hand experience of just what being handicapped on campus involves or for those just looking for information, come down to the SUB on Tuesday.

Rain or shine, it should be a rewarding experience.

NEAG approves budget; funds reorganization

By MICHELE BIABIONI
Collegian Staff

The Northeast Area Government last night ratified an $11,600 budget proposal and approved the co-presidents' proposals for the reorganization of NEAG's role in area functions.

Jeff Shapiro, NEAG treasurer, gave an account of the expenses for Fall Day, totalling $1543.06. In his budget projection for the 1977-78 year, Shapiro stated his request for more funding from the Undergraduate Student Senate. The senate has yet to give NEAG an exact figure on their allocation, Shapiro said.

Shapiro supported an increase in Area Government funding, arguing that it should be based on October 1977 population figures, not those of November 1976.

NEAG also voted for the establishment of a Budgets and Finance Committee, which will organize to evaluate NEAG budget requests. Its first meeting will be Tuesday night, Oct. 11, at 7 p.m. in the Knowlton Area Government Office.

In other business Co-presidents Diane Lauricella and Dave Goodhue outlined their motion for the reorganization of distribution of NEAG funds, which was passed 13-1. As of 1976, control of Program Support Funds (PSF) have been in the hands of the Area Office. Formerly, NEAG had control, and Goodhue maintains that the "basic right for this money was once pretty much under our control" and wishes to see it restored. Objections to the Area Director's plan for an Academic Program Development Council were based on the diminishing of NEAG's voice in the distribution of their funds. By reverting control back into the hands of NEAG, Lauricella feels the students will have greater representation in determining the financing of activities. Goodhue stated that NEAG would be "giving up total autonomy over funds as a group" if they adhered to the Area Director's reorganization.

Music kicks off today's Octubafest

By RITA ZEIDNER
Collegian Staff

The UMass music department will kick off the festivities for its second Octubafest this afternoon outside the Fine Arts Center.

Although the Octubafest was held at UMass for the first time last year, similar festivals have been held throughout the country for several years. The concept was originated by tuba professor Harvey Phillips, of Indiana University, who is known to musicians as "Mr. Tuba in the world."

Phillips is dedicating his life to the advancement of the tuba, initiating many programs which he hopes will give non-musicians a better understanding of the importance of the tuba. His efforts apparently are not in vain, as evidenced by the increase in UMass tuba majors, from two to four.

"The Octubafest will be held in the same spirit as the German Octoberfest," explains faculty sponsor and tuba instructor, George Parks. Hot dogs, beer, and soft drinks will be available, in addition to several hours of musical entertainment. The proceeds from the refreshments will go towards a UMass tuba scholarship fund, to be awarded either this year or next.

The events are scheduled to begin at 4 p.m. with the UMass Student German Band and German records. At 5 p.m., the Faculty UM-PAA Band, consisting of non-music department faculty will perform. The UMass Marching Band will perform at 5:40 p.m. followed by the Coast Guard Tuba Quartet, from the Connecticut Academy.

The Town and City Four, a tuba barbershop quartet, will also recite several numbers. The finale will consist of a medley of songs arranged and performed by the U-Massed Tuba Choir.

Parks said there will be several "special surprises," in addition to the band performance.

A sing-along is planned and arrangements have been made for students to play tuba solos and duets. Parks also said the audience will be encouraged to participate in polka dancing.

Festivities are planned to last until 7:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Delayment seen in Treasurer replacement

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

"The process of finding a new University Treasurer to replace the deceased Ken Johnson, may well be delayed several months," Howard White, University spokesperson said yesterday in a telephone interview.

White said the reason for the delay in action is due to a suggestion made Wednesday by board of trustees chairman Joseph P. Healy, that the treasurers' job be examined and possibly redefined.

Currently, the office of Treasurer's responsibilities include financial planning, financial reporting, the investment program, and all University expenditures, White said.

The trustees named Robert H. Brand Acting Treasurer, until a permanent replacement is found. Brand served as Associate Treasurer under Johnson, White said.

Debate on DNA experimentation continues

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

The debate over recombinant DNA research continues at UMass as faculty and administration voice their opinions.

Issues under scrutiny include concern with the risk factors involved in DNA experimentation at UMass laboratories, in relation to the rights of Amherst townspeople.

The process of recombinant DNA research consists of taking pieces of DNA from different organisms, joining them together, and then transplanting them into living cells.

On one side of the coin is the promise of enormous benefits with the continuation of recombinant DNA research. Through this experimentation, new and faster ways of producing antibiotics and other drugs can hopefully be developed. Prof. Warren Litsky of the Environmental Science Department remarked that the future of recombinant research is "fantastic". For example, the insulin-producing genes from one DNA molecule can be transmitted into another lacking this drug which can lead to the cure of diabetes, Litsky said.

Yet, Litsky mentioned that UMass does not have the laboratory facilities to accommodate such research. He believes that the work must be done by qualified professors in proper "supersafe" facilities which are not available on the UMass campus.

Prof. Manville Fournier of the Biochemistry Department said, "What we have to do is look at the issue case by case. Nobody would be troubled by our doing the kind of research that has already occurred in nature. The difficulty comes when you start talking about making recombinant DNA Molecules in a case where one DNA molecule might come from a virus in a tumor formation."

Professor Curtis Thorne of the Microbiology Department said, "It is difficult for me to say that there is no danger, but it has been estimated to be very slight."

"One of the organisms assumed safe to use is E. Coli, a bacterium that normally inhabits the human intestine," Thorne said. "What has been done was to construct a mutant of E. Coli which cannot live outside of the laboratory. In effect, if the host is to receive a recombinant DNA molecule, it is deemed to be safe since it can only survive under laboratory conditions," he added.

The horror stories become more intense owing to the fact that the favorite host to a recombinant DNA gene is common to the human intestine. Stemming from this notion is the fear that scientists may come up with a deadly organism whose growth could not be controlled, Fournier said.

"Scientists experimenting with recombinant DNA are only allowed to use a severely crippled form of E. Coli. This laboratory strain is made multiply-defective to decrease its ability to live outside the lab. These are part of the regulations put out by the National Institute of Health (UIH)," Fournier said.

The debate concerning recombinant DNA research is nationwide. The NIH has set up guidelines to be followed by those DNA researchers funded by federal grants. Currently, there are bills before both houses of Congress to make these regulations mandatory for all recombinant DNA research.

The NIH guidelines require research laboratories to be equipped with supersafe sterilization processes, and calls for the prohibition of certain organisms known to produce cancer in animals. The regulations also require that the bacteria used be genetically weakened so it could not possibly live outside the lab.

In addition to these restrictions, Fournier said, "The NIH requires anyone who wants to do recombinant DNA research to have their proposal reviewed by a Biohazards Committee. The University needs such a commitee and I believe one should be created regardless of what goes before the townspeople, who would definitely have an input into the creation of such a Biohazards Committee."

Marvin Kalkstein, a University Without Walls coordinator, believes "The issues involved are not so radical that the public cannot understand them. We want to inform the public so a group of lay people will be able to deal with the extremely complex study and to make recommendations."

The issue will be brought up before Amherst Town Meeting on Monday, Oct. 17. Nancy Eddy, a staff assistant in the Department of Industrial Engineering and a member of the Amherst board of selectmen said the issue is likely to cause "mass confusion".

"I have mixed feelings about the recombinant DNA issue. I am terrified at the thought of local government controlling research and reducing academic freedom. The town should not accept in hand or out of hand the article before them. I think we need further information and study of the matter," Eddy said.

The writing on the wall makes clear the controversy over DNA research at UMass.

Greenough looks to in-dorm dining service

By JOAN ARBETTER
Collegian Staff

In a recently published report, Nourishing Greenough, Greenough residents Louis Herzog and Mark Wilhelm examine present dining commons conditions and propose an alternative in the form of a student run dining-room for Greenough dormitory.

Herzog and Wilhelm's report was one part of Greenough Union Council's effort to evaluate and improve the quality of life in the dorm. The council proposes that Greenough has the support, space and resources to accommodate such an alternative.

"I am eager to see an in house dining hall for the sake of all Greenough residents as an educational experience, a cooperative experience and to upgrade the quality of food available to the students," Wilhelm said.

The council has received signatures from Greenough residents on a petition which reads: "We, the residents of Greenough House Dormitory, completely support the Greenough Union Council's effort to establish a student-run dining commons in Greenough house."

Wilhelm and Herzog have also compiled results from a detailed survey which examines the Greenough student's dining needs and opinions concerning the quality of dining commons service and food.

Results from the survey show that over 25 per cent of the respondents feel the dining commons meals are "rarely or never served at the right temperature." In addition, 45 per cent of the respondents feel that the food is "rarely or never prepared to their liking." Over half said they disliked to eat in a large dining hail and 94 per cent of the respondents indicate they are eager to see a student-run dining commons in Greenough dormitory.

Most of the people surveyed who are on the meal plan have chosen the 10-meal plan. Through the survey the council has determined that an average of three meal tickets are left unused per week. At $1.68 per meal, these students lose an average of $5.58 per week, per person.

Gay ruling sparks disappointment here

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Disappointment and no surprise characterized the reaction across campus to the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal this week to hear the appeal of a gay teacher fired from his job in 1972.

Paul Gosslin, office manager for the People's Gay Alliance, said he felt the action was "very expected from a conservative Nixon court. It points out the fact that gay people have no rights in this country."

Gosslin urged others on campus to write to their state representatives in support of House bill 3676. If passed, the bill would prohibit discrimination in the state civil service on the basis of sexual preference. The bill was narrowly passed this summer by the state Senate and will soon be brought before the House for ratification.

Student reaction to the decision was mixed, although most expressed disappointment. One student said, "It's horrifying that this country can give legal support to the persecution of a people." Another student felt the decision was "absurd" and "the court's use of the term immoral just clinches everything this society feels about gay people."

Not everybody felt the Supreme Court was wrong. A male student said, "They did the right thing. It's dangerous to have people like that teaching kids. I know if I had a kid in school I wouldn't want anybody who was gay teaching them." Several students said they thought the action was typical of the court in such cases.

Most of the students asked about the decision wished to remain anonymous and many did not wish to be quoted directly.

Political Science Professor Sheldon Goldman, who presently teaches a course in Constitutional Law at UMass, notes an apparent misconception among many people that the Supreme Court had made some kind of ruling on the case. Goldman said the court's refusal to hear the case did not indicate either its approval or disapproval of the issues involved. Goldman said he thought the impression that a decision had been made would be damaging to the gay right's movement and it was important for people to understand that such was not the case.

At the Southwest Men's Center, Frank Dorman said, "We are very disappointed in the Supreme Court decision not to review the case." He added," the ruling represents a gross misconception of what masculinity and morality are all about. We are convinced, however, that common sense will prevail and the civil rights of homosexuals will prevail in the judiciary system."

Trustees pressed to divest

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Amherst College students this afternoon will urge their Board of Trustees to encourage some corporations in which it owns stock to withdraw their holdings from South Africa.

"We're saying the corporations have to be out of there," said Josh Nessen, a member of the college's South Africa Support Committee. Nessen will be one of the students presenting proposals to the 18 Amherst trustees when they meet today at 1:30 p.m. at Alumni House.

Students will picket outside the meeting with signs, Nessen said.

Amherst trustees said last spring they would decide by November what position to take concerning their endowment fund investments in corporations operating in South Africa.

The students at today's meeting will first explain why corporations should not be in South Africa, and then propose methods to get them out, Nessen said.

The support committee is protesting the apartheid policies of South Africa.

The UMass Board of Trustees voted last month to divest University stocks in companies operating in South Africa. Hampshire college decided last spring to sell some of its stock in similar companies.

Amherst College has about $20 million invested in corporations in South Africa, Nessen said, with 500,000 shares in 21 corporations, including General Motors, Texaco, ITT, IBM and Citicorp.

Amherst Treasurer Kurt M. Hertzfeld said last night, "I'm sure we have several million dollars worth of stock in companies in South Africa, warehouses there, or just have products sold there.

Prof. Michael M. Thelwell of the UMass Afro-Am department, said that companies which do business in South Africa and pay taxes there are the ones that support that government, the principle regime of which is: "racial superiority for white people and racial inferiority for black people."

Thelwell, who has spoken at area colleges about apartheid in South Africa, said he will be at Amherst College for the meeting.

The first step Amherst should take, Nessen said, is to commit itself in urging withdrawal of corporations operating n South Africa, in which it owns stock.

Then, Nessen said, the college should follow up by asking these corporations to take action at their annual shareholders meetings, by encouraging the corporations withdrawal from South Africa.

The trustees "sort of have an idea that we're going to present a side of the story and then we're going to retire," Nessen said.

"We're taking them (the trustees) out of their private rooms," he said. "It worked at UMass."

Student Senate controversy over meaning of 'Third World'

By ROBERT KEY
and RENEE MOBLEY
Black Affairs Staff

During the Student Senate session, held last Wednesday, October 5, heated debate arose over the election of three non-third world students on the Third World ballot.

Two of these students, Richard Soldon and Angela Valu, were write-in candidates. They received three votes each. The third student, Craig Sherwood, signed his nomination papers as a Third World Student. His name appeared on the Third World ballot and resulted in him receiving approximately 110 votes.

The Senate recessed for 20 minutes to allow the Third World senators to caucus with these three students. The white students were asked why they ran as Third World representatives as opposed to a dorm representative. "I didn't know there were any special qualifications for running on the Third World Ballot" stated Solone. Valu expressed the same sentiments.

The two write-ins agreed that they could not be truly representative of the Third World community, until such time as they could familiarize themselves with the needs, struggles and issues of the Third World community. After further discussion Solone and Valu decided to resign from their positions.

The third student, Craig Sherwood, felt that it would be reverse discrimination on the part of the caucus, if he as not accepted as a Third World senator. Sherwood refused to resign his seat on the grounds that the Senate constitution has no specific definition of Third World. Although he felt it his right to remain a Third World senator, he stated repeatedly that he does not know the definition of Third World. Sherwood feels that he should be given a chance. Sherwood was allowed to remain seated. The New Africa House Steering committee will discuss the issue at its next meeting.

Carter grants clemency to Puerto Rican Nationalist

WASHINGTON [AP] – President Carter Thursday granted clemency to Andres Figueroa Cordero, a Puerto Rican nationalist convicted in 1954 for participating in an armed attack in the House of Representatives.

Cordero has terminal cancer and a White House spokesman said Carter commuted his sentence to the time he has already served because of his physical condition.

Cordero, serving a 25-to 75-year sentence, would not have been eligible for parole until 1981.

Cordero was expected to be released from the federal medical center for prisoners at Springfield, Mo., within 24 hours of the announcement. The three other Puerto Rican nationalists with whom he was convicted of remain in prison.

Cordero was convicted of assault and conspiracy to overthrow the government after Puerto Ricans opened fire from the gallery overlooking the floor of the House on March 1, 1954.

Five congressmen who had just answered a quorum call fell wounded to the floor as the terrorists sprayed 20 to 25 shots with four pistols. No one was killed.

About 100 members of the House of Representatives were in the chamber debating a farm bill when the gunfire erupted from the visitors gallery above the chamber floor.

A bullet hole remains in the House ceiling, a scar from the shooting.

Cordero and his colleagues shouted "Freedom for Puerto Rico" during their attack.

Cordero, who has had three cancer operations, claimed in a lawsuit asking for release that his "terminal illness could have been prevented had he received proper medical care."

Amherst College to hold concert

On Tuesday, October 11, at 9:00 p.m. Muhal Richard Abrams and his trio featuring Steve MCall on percussion and Leonard Jones, bassist, will present a full concert at the Buckley Recital Hall. All three musicians are from Chicago and have come out of the A.A.C.M. (Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians). These musicians are known for their high energy playing and persistent improvisations. Richard Abrams has been responsible for keeping the vanguard element alive in Chicago and also in the "Love Scene" in New York. Leonard Jones first record was "Levels and Degrees of Light" on the Delmark Lable. He also has recorded with Leo Smith and the New Delta Ensemble, plus he has worked with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. He can also be heard with Joseph Jarman. Steve McCall, a stalwart percussionist, has played with most of the major musicians and his most notorious works have been with Marion Brown and his own group called "Air".

The concert is free and open to the public.

Remembering Columbus Day;

I wasn't there, but I know

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

Call it a feeling, or a second sense, but I know what it was like when Christopher Columbus, one of the most famous made navigators of all times, compliments of U.S. history books, mistakenly stepped aboard the shores of America. (Remember that he thought he had reached India.)

I know what it was like, because that is when and where it all began. It was in the beginning, when Columbus first walked on our plentiful, green, fertile, bloodless land, and saw Native Americans, who then became Indians. It was back in those glory filled days of yore, that the weak pretense of friendship between Native Americans and the early pioneers was shattered, due to the ever growing progressive nature of early, early Americans. This "progressive" nature of early American pioneers, progressed so far that they progressed themselves wide and far over a land that was not theirs.

It was way back there in the many days of yesterday, that the concept of red-skinned, tomahawk swinging savages vs. the mild mannered pioneer settlers, and later the good all-American cowboy, originated.

While Daniel Boone found himself roaming the land from California to the New York Islands, and the Redwood forest, to the Gulf Stream waters, Native Americans found themselves corralled and restricted on a land once theirs.

As a result of the past, residents of Amherst may give thanks to Native Americans. Due to them trusting a man known as General Amherst (yes, Amherst College is named in honor of him), they traded the right to this area for blankets infested with smallpox.

I know these things well. With the arrival of Columbus, my history also began in this country, but that's another story.

I wish I could have warned you Columbus, of what you directly-indirectly caused, but I wasn't there to tell you, and you didn't know.

I wasn't there, but I know.

"Call It What You Want"

It's no secret that America is one ass-backwards country. Celebrating Columbus Day is living proof. Let's take a look at what we are actually celebrating.

We are celebrating the raping of Native Americans. A peaceful, nature-loving race stripped of their land. We are celebrating their being corralled onto uninhabitable land, their pride zapped, their culture destroyed and their belief in the goodness and honesty of all men shattered. We are celebrating their lives as alcoholics, drug users, and suicidal teenagers.

We are celebrating slaves, millions of them. No, I take that back. We are celebrating people, millions of them, people stolen from their land. Jammed into ships, riding thousands of miles, their bodies twisted in all types of positions. Living amongst death and sickness with little food and little fresh air.

We are celebrating their arrival to a strange and different land. They were unable to communicate with a strange and different people. Not knowing what is going on around them or what is being done to them, but the white man had his form of communication, the whip, the branding iron, a gelding, knife, his own horny body, chains of iron, twelve hours in a work field — torture unlimited.

We are celebrating Watts, Harlem, Brownsville, Bedford-Stuyvesant, Roxbury and the impoverished areas of Neward.

We are celebrating run down houses, dope addicts, starving babies, husbandless mothers, homeless children, penniless and unemployed men. We are celebrating ... Fuck it. Happy Columbus Day!

Jesse Jackson's 'moral contact' reaches inner city blacks

The Rev. Jesse Jackson has for some time been challenging groups of black ghetto youths to overcome the handicaps of their environment through tough determination, hard work and clean living. Although skeptics scoff at the appeal as a public-relations gimmick, his consciousness-raising program, stressing opportunity and discouraging self-pity, has been introduced, with apparent success, in a number of city school systems. The positive response of high school students owes much to Mr. Jackson's compelling personality. Veteran educators have been fascinated by the persuasive power of the combined talents of an old-fashioned preacher and tough civil rights leader.

Now, Los Angeles, the nation's second-largest school system, has allocated $400,000 to an effort to institutionalize Mr. Jackson's inspirational approach. The idea is to have minority youngsters, their parents and school staffs enter into a "moral contract" to strive for success through vigorous personal effort and rejection of drugs, alcohol and the temptations of the streets.

The hard question in this large-scale experiment is whether it can work without Mr. Jackson's personal charisma. Moreover, the program must be protected against exploitation by those who may seek to turn it into a cheap substitute for more costly social and educational reform. Mr. Jackson would be the first to insist that his formula cannot replace economic policies to open up jobs and social policies to remove racial barriers.

Retail prices up again

WASHINGTON [AP] — Wholesale prices turned upward by one-half of 1 per cent in September, but a government economist said yesterday there is no evidence that retail food prices will begin spiraling again.

The increase followed three months of declines or little change in the Labor Department's over-all wholesale price index.

The increase was the biggest since a 1.1 per cent increase in April, just before wholesale food prices began a dramatic decline.

Farm product prices dropped a total of 15.2 per cent in May through August, translating into a slower rise in food prices at the grocery store.

The September report showed prices of farm products declining only two-tenths of 1 per cent.

Courtenay M. Slater, chief Commerce Department economist, said, "There is still no reason to believe food prices will be rising much at the retail level. They should be moderate for the rest of the year."

She said food price increases should be in the 4 to 4½ per cent range in the next year or so.

Consumers will not see all the recent wholesale declines in farm products because some are absorbed by middlemen and retailers whose profit margins have been squeezed, she said.

Finance Committee blocks energy plan

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate Finance Committee voted down the last of President Carter's major energy-related tax proposals yesterday and then voted to block him from using an alternative weapon to force energy conservation.

But after rejecting the bulk of Carter's program, the committee voted 9 to 2 to endorse his goal of reducing U.S. dependence on foreign oil through some yet-to-be-determined system of tax cuts — but not through tax increases.

Meanwhile, the full Senate continued to labor over another section of Carter's energy package and was expected to turn down the President's proposal to force utilities to revise their rate structures.

On a 14-2 vote the Senate Finance Committee approved a provision that would reduce oil company taxes $3 for every barrel of oil they produce from shale. That could cost billions in lost taxes, but only if that promising but difficult source of energy is tapped.

It also rejected the administration's plan to levy a stiff tax on factories and power plants that use oil and natural gas.

After weeks of efforts, Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., chairman of the committee, concluded there was no way the panel could agree on an energy-tax program. So he proposed that the panel quit trying and leave the whole question to a Senate-House conference committee.

For that to work the full Senate would have to approve whatever minor tax credits its committee endorses. A conference committee then would decide between the no-tax approach of the Senate and the House version of the energy bill, which includes major taxes.

There is no assurance the Senate would go along with such a plan.

The issue that has split the Senate panel so badly is whether energy producers should get greater tax incentives to stimulate new production. The administration and the House want virtually no new aid for the industry. Although most members of the committee appear to favor more incentives, they can't agree on how to do it.

Carter's energy proposal included four major taxes. The first, a new tax of up to 50 cents on a gallon of gasoline, was rejected by the House and is not being considered by the Senate committee.

Racism fought at UConn

STORRS, Conn. [UPI] — A flood of anti-Semitic, racist literature at the University of Connecticut has prompted some students to band together to fight what they think are two on-campus white supremacy movements.

Leaflets and stickers advocating white power have appeared recently in UConn buildings. One of the leaflets seeks "white fighters" to work for a national society based on "the eternal truths" of Adolf Hitler and to fight "nigger crime, nigger quotas and commies and fags."

About 150 UConn students rallied Wednesday to protest the leaflets they say are being distributed by groups called the National Socialist White People's Party and the National Alliance.

Officials of the two Virginia-based groups said they have active members at UConn, but no formal organizations.

William Pierce, editor of "Attack," the National Alliance's newspaper, said the alliance thinks white Americans of European descent should organize "to secure and promote the welfare of their people."

He said a lot of the controversy surrounding his group stems from exaggerations Against Racism, which sponsored Wednesday's rally at UConn.

Speakers at the rally challenged persons responsible for the white power literature to come out in the open rather than spread their ideas secretly.

During the rally, a young man threw a cake of soap into the crowd and shouted, "Hey, you dumb commies, take a bath." The man, dressed in a plaid shirt and bluejeans, stalked away from the crowd unmolested.

Among those at the rally was a Jewish student who said he has received several harassing letters and phone calls because he is trying to form a Jewish fraternity on campus. He asked that his name not be published because he said he is afraid of reprisals.

The student said he has gotten a permit to carry a gun because he is afraid he will be physically harmed.

Steel industry seeks federal relief

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — The leadership of the United Steelworkers of America said yesterday the union would turn to Congress for help if President Carter fails to aid the depressed American steel industry.

At a news conference, USW President Lloyd McBride, flanked by the union leadership, sought government guarantees that the industry will use federal relief to ensure the best protection of steelworkers' jobs.

"If our trade representatives ... are unable to develop a rational steel trade policy, then the union will have to seek political relief through Congressional action," the leadership statement said.

The administration has opposed the immediate imposition of restraints on foreign steel imports, maintaining the domestic industry's problems are largely internal and that long-range solutions are the answer. McBride identified the structural steel market line as the one most endangered by imports.

But the industry and union leadership now believe the U.S. Treasury Department's tentative decision that five Japanese steelmakers have been dumping carbon steel plate in the U.S. may change the administration stance.

"I see a greater degree of flexibility than there has been up to this point," McBride said. McBride said the interest being shown by the government and public to help the industry may cause the administration to change its policy as early as next Thursday's White House "steel" meeting.

Carter, top administration officials, representatives of Congress, and union and industry leaders have been invited to Thursday's session.

The union's plan includes:

— Full employment legislation. "Without a full employment economy, it will be impossible to have a strong and healthy steel industry," the leadership said.

— To have the Carter administration negotiate an orderly marketing arrangement, "There must be quantitative or quota arrangements to stabilize and to prevent further damage to employment and disruption to domestic markets."

McBride said the union would support quota restraints on imports of 10 to 18 per cent of the domestic output. He also said that an USW official had informed him yesterday that the European Economic Community has "a greater interest to work out a voluntary restraint agreement" on imports. Japan already has indicated a willingness to negotiate voluntary restraints.

— That any import relief be conditioned with an enforcement commitment by the industry to modernize at existing plant locations.

— Tax relief or tax incentives to modernize existing facilities and to build new facilities accompanied by the stipulation that "if the government assists the industry in other ways through marketing arrangements or quotas, the industry must make a firm commitment to improve its facilities and not use such relief as a cover for continuing to operate under present conditions."

— The establishment of an international mechanism to handle future problems and growth in the industry.

The news conference followed announcements of additional layoffs by No. 1-ranked U.S. Steel and No. 3-ranked National Steel.

Murder threats plague frightened suburbanites

NEW HOPE, Minn. [AP] — Authorities are assuring frightened residents of this Minneapolis suburb that they are not in danger, despite threats spray-painted on the walls of homes near where a newlywed was found stabbed to death.

A black spray-painted message saying "There are more," was on the kitchen wall of the victim's home. Other threats, saying "Maybe you" and "You are next," were painted on the walls of neighboring homes in this quiet suburb of $60,000 to $70,000 homes.

A Hennepin County medical examiner's report yesterday said Susan Rosenthal died of "massive blood loss due to multiple stabbings." Her body was found by her sister Tuesday.

Fear gripped the neighborhood Wednesday as word of the slaying circulated. Some parents kept their children indoors, and others escorted them to playmates' homes.

"Really, there's not much you can do to assure people they're safe after something like this," Police Chief Colin Kastanos said.

Pet store closed 'due to robbery'

WESTFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — The sign on the front window of Westfield's only pet shop says "closed due to robbery" and Jeff Waitt said yesterday his store may wind up being permanently closed.

But it isn't the theft of $114 in cash that may put Noah's Pet Store out of business. It's the deaths of more than 1,000 exotic fish that were killed when a burglar poured nine bottles of dog shampoo into 20 of the store's acquariums.

Waitt said "there was no point" to killing the fish, which ranged from poisonous lion fish to more common guppies.

"At first he apparently couldn't find the money so he decided to do as much damage as he could. That stopped when he found the money hidden behind the last tank he destroyed," he said.

A discouraged Waitt has been picking up the pieces and trying to clean up the small store since his wife found it flooded with shampoo suds Tuesday morning. It might take as much as a year to replace the dead fish, said Waitt, and he's not sure he can do even that.

"It's ridiculous and malicious. This prank has just about wiped me out," he said. The loss of more than $1,000 worth of fish may be the last straw for an eight-month old business that was just starting to turn the corner.

Car insurance rates debated at hearing

BOSTON [UPI] — Industry and public interest representatives fired opening salvos yesterday in the first of what promises to be arduous hearings on proposed 1978 auto insurance rates and the way companies determine individual premiums.

Insurance spokesmen defended age, sex and residency classifications used to determine premiums and attacked rate reductions proposed by the Insurance Department's State Rating Bureau as being based on faulty claims projections and other errors.

The State Rating Bureau last month recommended a 15 per cent, $117.6 million rate reduction for 1978. The difference between the state and industry requests is almost $173 million.

Spokesmen for Massachusetts Fair Share and the State Rating Bureau along with other state officials accused the industry of mistreating policyholders, using invalid group classifications and running inefficient operations.

The insurance industry has asked for a $55 million rate increase for 1978, the same amount of money it was forced by the state to refund this year. At the time the rebates were ordered by the legislature, Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone said the industry had abused the assigned risk pool which is supposed to be reserved for bad drivers.

"The major reason for the reduction in rates recommended by the Insurance Department is a projected decrease in claim frequency," said Acheson H. Callaghan Jr., counsel for the Massachusetts Auto Rating Bureau, an industry organization.

Maritime students seek reinstatement

BOSTON [AP] — Three students, suspended from Massachusetts Maritime Academy for breaking rules, including entering the room of two coeds, sought a court order yesterday for immediate reinstatement.

Judge George Hayer in Suffolk Superior Court heard arguments on the request for a preliminary injunction against the suspension and said he would try to rule on the case today.

The Bourne school charged the cadets with breaking three rules last Sept. 1.

The charges were: leaving duty stations aboard the academy training ship, Bay State; being off-limits, and entering a dormitory room occupied by two first-year women cadets.

Lee Harrington, president of the academy, said in a telephone interview the charges were among the most serious made by the institution, and were even more serious because it is the first year women have been admitted to the 86-year-old institution.

Blackout reaction praised by White

BOSTON [UPI] — Mayor Kevin H. White said yesterday he was pleased with the response of citizens and the police department to a 40-block blackout Wednesday night.

White said citizens helped by "helping to direct traffic in Kenmore, Copley and Park squares and in maintaining public order while the area was blacked out."

There was "a very fast and thorough response" by police, he said. Police directed traffic and an extra 50 police went to the area to guard against looting or other trouble. No disturbances were reported.

The mayor said the city developed a plan for police to cope with such blackouts after New York City's blackout in June.

The power outage lasted 3½ hours in the Back Bay, Kenmore Square and Park Square areas. Lights went out at 9:58 p.m. They were restored to most before midnight and to the remainder early yesterday.

Minimum wage may rise soon

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate voted 76 to 14 yesterday to increase the federal minimum wage in four steps to $3.40 an hour in 1981.

The present minimum of $2.30 an hour, in effect since Jan. 1, 1976, would go to $2.65 an hour on Jan. 1, 1978, to $2.90 an hour in 1979, and to $3.15 an hour in 1980.

The House in September voted to increase the minimum to $2.65 in 1978, to $2.85 in 1979 and to $3.05 in 1980.

The Senate defeated that proposal on a vote of 60 to 32.

Differences in the minimum wage rates will have to be worked out in a House-Senate conference committee after the Senate passes a final bill, probably today.

News in Brief

Senate debates marijuana amounts

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Amid Senate Judiciary Committee deliberations on revising the federal criminal code, the question of what constitutes a "small" amount of marijuana popped up.

It was a legitimate subject since legislation before the panel, written by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., contains a provision that would legalize possession of a small amount. It defined that as 10 grams or less.

Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., opened the discussion by offering what he called "my agricultural amendment dealing with the cultivation and use of grass."

Bayh said he thinks marijuana should be decriminalized, not legalized — but that whatever is done should apply to an ounce, not 10 grams.

"I'm no expert," he said, but from "what I'm told" by users, 10 grams is "a rather unrealistic supply as far as the distribution system goes."

Carter to act on Indian land dispute

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter has designated a three-man task force to deal with two Indian tribes that claim 12 million acres of Maine land, congressional sources said yesterday.

One source said an announcement from the White House was expected within a few days. He said White House officials had emphasized that the team would not be authorized to negotiate but would be a "point of contact" with the Indians.

Members of the team, it was reported, will be Leo Krulitz, Interior Department solicitor; Elliott Cutler, deputy director for environment and natural resources in the Office of Management and Budget, and Steve Clay, an assistant to retired Georgia Supreme Court Justice William Gunter, Carter's adviser on the Indian claims dispute.

The Indians have filed suit in federal court, contending that Maine took the land in violation of a 1790 law requiring federal approval of all land transactions between Indians and non-Indians.

117 year old man weds sweetheart

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia [AP] — A 117-year-old man married his 40-year-old sweetheart yesterday in the same court where they were fined earlier for living together out of wedlock.

Lebai Omar Bin Datuk Panglima Garang was all smiles as he pledged to love and protect Doyah Bin Dan before Moslem priest Sheikh Azmi Bin Abad at the Kuala Nerang district religious court, about 260 miles northwest of here.

Lebai Omar said, after the simple wedding ceremony, that they could now live together without fear of arrest for living out of wedlock.

A doctor who had heard that the old man had financial problems gave the couple $78, the approximate amount of the fine, after the wedding.

Concorde jetliner supported in court

NEW YORK [UPI] — A federal appeals court ruled yesterday that the Concorde Supersonic jetliner, bitterly opposed by residents of New York City and its suburbs as an unbearable noisemaker, may begin operations at Kennedy Airport immediately.

The decision is expected to be appealed before the Supreme Court in Washington for a final ruling.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit granted a motion for permission for immediate service made by British Airways and Air France, operators of the Concorde. The court rejected a bid by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey to maintain its 18-month ban against SST operations at Kennedy.

The decision means the Port Authority must now go to the Supreme Court seek an order maintaining the ban.

The ruling followed by only a few hours the filing of the Port Authority's appeal for a 30-day stay to allow it to appeal to Supreme Court.

Prisoners may be home by Christmas

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A return to the United States in time for Christmas was urged yesterday for more than 500 Americans imprisoned for drug violations in Mexico.

Texas Attorney General John L. Hill and Rep. Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., asked a House Judiciary subcommittee to speed up on work on legislation covering a joint transfer of prisoners.

Stark urged subcommittee members to "cast your vote to bring Americans imprisoned in Mexico home for Christmas." Hill said, "Let's get our kids home. Can't we get our treaty out of here and get it done?"

"I don't believe people understand the human factors involved," Hill said. "We should just take this step and do it."

The legislation also would permit Mexicans imprisoned in the United States to be transferred to Mexican jails.

The (unintelligible) puppet show

It has been rumored, nay, reported in the Collegian, that there exists a group of anti-union students who are seeking Recognized Student Organization (RSO) status. That such a group is long over-due, that there exists considerable anti-union sentiment on campus, is reflected in the fact that the group is already close to the ten signatures needed to gain RSO status.

bob melia

Student Senator James Potts and freshperson Pat O'Donnell are the apparent leaders of this organization, and I understand that their first priority is to get the other eight signatures they need to gain RSO status.

A reliable source, high up in the administration, has given me the minutes of the group's last meeting.

O'Donnell: "Jim, I don't think we're ever going to get those eight signatures. I've been walking around the upper floor of the Student Union all day asking people to sign and I haven't had any luck. I don't know what the problem could be; I use Scope every morning."

Potts: "Don't worry about it. They probably just didn't have a pen handy."

O'Donnell: "But you'd think they'd realize that trained administrators, with 20 or 30 years more experience than students have, should make all the decisions. It only stands to reason that they know best. But not even the students still living in the Campus Center Hotel would listen to me."

I guess you're right. The only way I can think of to get signatures would be to offer a free bottle of California wine to everyone who signs our anti-union petition...

Potts: "To tell you the truth, Pat, I've been having some problems myself. I know most students are very busy, so I thought the ideal place to ask them to sign our petition would be at the Bursar's office while they're waiting in line to cash checks. But all I got were dirty looks."

O'Donnell: "Perhaps we should put off getting signatures for a while and concentrate on something else. Anyway (unintelligible) said that if we had any problems getting the signatures to go over to Whitmore right away and he'd help us out."

Potts: "I guess you're right. The only way I can think of to get signatures would be to offer a free bottle of California wine to everyone who signs our anti-union petition, and I can't see spending all that money on wine when we could pay greatly increased tuition and fees with it."

O'Donnell: "Maybe it's just because I'm an inexperienced freshperson who doesn't know that much, but one thing bothers me. If students elected pro-union co-presidents last spring and just last week overwhelmingly elected a pro-union slate of Senators, doesn't it seem kind of stupid to be forming an RSO group to put the question on a school-wide referendum in the hopes that students will repudiate the idea of a union?

Potts: "Not at all. Lots of student unionists think the co-presidents aren't really that pro-union. And as for students electing the pro-union slate, well, students don't know how to think for themselves anyway."

O'Donnell: "How do you know that?"

Potts: "(Unintelligible) told me so."

O'Donnell: "If you say so."

Potts: "Believe me it's true. (Unintelligible) said that if students could think for themselves they'd have thought of a union a long time ago."

O'Donnell: "I never thought of that."

Potts: "It's nothing to be ashamed of; I hadn't thought of it either until (unintelligible) told me. So you see, Pat, we really have a sacred mission to destroy the idea of a union. If we're successful, (unintelligible) won't have to waste his time speaking at student unionization conferences anymore. Instead he can devote all his time to breaking the faculty union."

O'Donnell: "How come he wants to break the faculty union?"

Potts: "Probably because he doesn't believe that they can think for themselves either."

O'Donnell: "But if they can't think for themselves how are they supposed to teach us to think for ourselves? My God, what am I doing here?"

Potts: "Get a grip on yourself, O'Donnell. We have a mission. Remember our prayer. Are you ready?"

O'Donnell: "(Gulp) I guess."

Potts and O'Donnell:

"Our Duke, who art in Boston,
Hallowed be thy budget.
Thy surplus come,
It won't be done,
At UMass as it is at Swarthmore.
Give us this day our level funding,
And forgive us our union,
As we forgive those
In union against us.
And lead us not into small classrooms,
But deliver us from education."

(Unintelligible): "Amen."

Avoiding reality

The period that most disrupts the idyllic life of a student here at Camp UMass is upon us. The exam and paper season has officially opened. This occurrence has several accompanying phenomena which are the telltale signs of how the campers react. Contrary to mom and dad's rosy perceptions on how busy their beavers are, the traditional settings of intellectual bastions are not reasonable measures of how the reality factor of academia has set in. The library has not run out of room. The Newman Center has not brought in extra seating for untold hordes of serious minded scholars. How then can a seasoned veteran of UMieland ascertain the period of frantic reaction to the lowering of the academic boom? There are several factors which are easily discernable to the trained eye. First, if you travel to the Student Senate Lecture Notes Service and see a line so long that those at the end have shaving kits and pillows, you'll know that someone is brewing blue books.

For many of the new students the first exam of the college experience is traumatic. Their reaction may be to rely on their old norms of behavior and do mundane things like study. But many are wiser now and look for other role models, like their older dorm folks. Depending on who these folks are determines what the new students will do. Some old folks will study, but the majority have devised innumerable schemes and means to perpetuate their insulation from doing much work. For example, we have the specialist syndrome. One person on the floor has had eight semesters of calculus. You have an exam in elementary arithmetic. The object is to use the overkill of the Albert Einstein clone and squeak by the exam. This can only work for limited situations but has been known to work well with languages, and anything which requires a little less than a familiarity with the material. Other strategies for exams have been developed, but you must learn them from the older campers.

The paper can pose more of a headache for the new student because it requires a conscious effort to buy the paper, write something down, and actually do work. Don't despair! Some budding Andrew Carnegie has though of your dilemma. Many firms produce papers on anything from The Effect of Aardvarks on Terrestial Life to Xenophobic Trilateralists (they even do editorials).

All the people who are showing signs of preparation for exams and papers really don't give you a clue of the ensuing crisis. When people line up and wait for pinball machines that are broken, exams are here. When the crowds swell beyond capacity at the Bluewall, with 1966 N.F.L. highlights as the main attraction, the pressure is on. Health Services doesn't have to look at any exam schedule to know. The fact is, the real test is not in studying and taking the exam. Anybody can do that. When you have begun to avoid this messy business by other means, you have passed. You're a UMie!

Rights of homosexuals

"As long as the Lesbian is vulnerable to the written and unwritten laws of a society that has legally restricted sex to reproduction, as long as she can be fired from jobs, denied an education, kept out of government service, made unwelcome in churches and synagogues, and banished from her home, Lesbianism is very much a public matter. Unfortunately, what some people do in bed affects their involvement with the human community.

"Liberals who say Lesbianism is strictly a bedroom issue condemn the Lesbian to eternal denial of her identity and what it means. If they understood what they were asking, they would not ask it. Passing for straight is a torture chamber....", --from Sappho was a Right-on Woman by Abbott and Love.

Monday the Supreme Court handed down the word that gays are "immoral and may be fired from their jobs."

What right does the Supreme Court have to tell us who we can love, in private or in public? Can we sit by and let this go on?

All you straights (heterosexuals) out there, how would you feel if you were thrown out of restaurants for holding hands across the table, spit on in the street because you were walking with an arm around each other? Could you stand to live in almost-constant fear?

Why does this fear have to exist and be perpetuated by rulings like this one? There is no reason gays should not be able to hold all the same jobs as straights.

Straight parents are afraid their children will be affected — mentally or physically, by gays with child-related jobs.

What people have failed to remember is that a lot more heterosexual child molesting goes on than homosexual.

Children often idolize adults they associate with, especially if the adult is kind, intelligent, mature. In our society these idolized adults are usually teachers, so teaching is the profession in which gays most fear job loss if "discovered."

fifi ball

Why are straight parents so afraid their kids will "turn out gay"? The only rational reason might be because the child will be ostracized and live a much less happy life than s-he would have had s-he gone the straight way.

The notion that gayness is sick is founded on the myth that sex is for making babies, not for pleasure. Well, it's pretty obvious that most people don't subscribe to that.

Anita Bryant followers must learn about the separation between church and state. Can we continue to let them lay their religion on us so forcibly?

Couched in the security of being accepted, straights must take a stand and work for gays' rights — the liberation of all people.

The idea that someone can be exorcised from housing, a job, or any public situation, because of wearing a label, is not new. Will we look back to this time with the same horror we still do to the McCarthy era?

Radiation — a serious problem

By S. TRACY

Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit our nuclear wastes...

Radiation and nuclear wastes, as issues of public health, preventive medicine, and life itself, require a long-term medical perspective above politics or profit.

Radiation equals thalidomide forever.

Nuclear plants add to the normal background radiation, increasing the frequency of mutation in all life forms, chemically changing cells and genes as the rays penetrate them.

An individual may not know they have been contaminated for 15 to 40 years, because it is undetectable to all human senses. Then one damaged cell will go crazy, producing millions of cells which sap the nutrients of the body, eventually killing the individual.

This is cancer.

But radiation concentrates twice as much in the gonads as in the rest of the body, damaging chromosomes which form offspring. The next generation may produce horribly deformed children, or the damage may not show for many generations. So, by accepting the mismanagement of lethal technologies, we not only risk increased disease, premature aging, and cancer in our lifetime, we pass on a heritage of mutations to people who may live after us.

The higher it goes in the food chain, the more radiation concentrates. In algae, fish, and shellfish, it is 1000 times higher than in the water in which they live. Hundreds of thousands of gallons of radioactive waste have leaked into the ecology because of inadequate storage. At least 16 tons of bomb quality radioactive material is missing in the U.S. Twenty years of open air bomb testing have not been harmless.

There are many cancerous food animals and crops which are consumed by an unwary public. Mother's milk, at the top of the food chain, is the most radioactive. Babies and foetuses are most susceptible to damage. You can't tell the radiation is there any more than you can detect calcium in the milk.

There is a cancer epidemic now.

In 1975, $60 million was spent by the National Cancer Institute to research the causes of cancer. $57 million went to research virul causes, and $7 million to investigate environmental causes like radiation and newly created dangerous chemicals. This year, the three foundations in the U.S. doing research on environmental causes had their funding withdrawn. How bizarre!

The regulatory bodies which decide the allowable limits of exposure to radiation admit there is no safe level. Those established are said to be a balance between benefit and risk. Why, then, are neither the public nor those who work with radioactive materials informed of the risk?

Recently, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) quietly lowered the permissible radiation dose for the general public by twenty times. At present the nuclear industry does not have equipment which can measure levels that low. This lowered dosage limit does not apply to those who work with nuclear materials. Although these workers have always been allowed exposures 1000 times higher than the general public, they are not informed of radiation hazards.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) has a standard statement about health and radiation: "There is no record of any member of the general public having died from cancer caused by radiation." Looks impressive, but it falls apart upon examination.

"No record" ignores the notorious suppression of record in the nuclear industry. People who work with nuclear materials are excluded from this statement. Many people who have cancer die of other diseases because they have been weakened. Radiation lowers resistence to infections like dysentary, rheumatic fever, and pneumonia.

There is no system to collect public health data about environmentally caused illness. Death from cancer and other diseases can't be traced to radioactivity in a community. There are no organized statistics on public health before a nuclear facility was built there.

Some of the greatest brains at Harvard say there is less than a 50 per cent chance humans will survive to the year 2000.

Considering the delight politicians are taking in the proliferation of nuclear weapons, those odd seem likely. Nuclear power is the offspring of the military development of generators to produce nuclear bomb materials. Those who govern us don't know the facts about this technology and are under tremendous pressure from the industries which profit from nuclear proliferation.

We must educate yourselves and the country about this life and death issue. Our freedom must be used to create sane, life-sustaining policies.

We are at the crossroads of time. We are the curators of all life on earth. We hold it in the palm of our hand.

Congratulations for sale of stocks

Editor's Note: The following letter was sent to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery from the American Committee on Africa following the UMass Board of Trustees' decision to sell its stocks in corporations operating in South Africa.

Dear Mr. Bromery:

It has come to my attention that the Trustees of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst voted to sell stock in companies which have investments in the Republic of South Africa. We wish to congratulate you on making this decision. We would hope that your decision also encompasses relations with banks making loans to South Africa. As you know, there are an increasing number of universities and also other large institutions in the United States coming to this same position. The American Committee on Africa has long taken the position that American investments in South Africa are helping to strengthen the apartheid regime with its extreme policy of racism.

For your information I am enclosing an article by Ms. Jennifer Davis, director of research with the American Committee on Africa, outlining this position.

If there's any further information we can supply to you which might be useful as you look further into this situation, we shall be glad to do so.

Sincerely yours,
George M. Houser
Executive Director

Vaughan review knocked

To the Editor:

The review of the Sarah Vaughan concert in the Oct. 6 Below the Salt by Steve Waldman is totally ludicrous. Mr. Waldman shows an amazing ignorance of the style, background and calibre of this great singer, and should not pass himself off as a music critic of any sort.

Miss Vaughan showed an incredible range of tone color and expression, rhythmic subtlety and a varied repetoire. The reviewer calls her singing "bland", and was disappointed that she sang only one Beatles song. If Mr. Waldman wanted to hear Beatles songs, why did he come to hear one of the greatest jazz singers of all time? Comparing her voice with Barbra Streisand's, comparing jazz to pop, is also an inappropriate comparison.

If Below the Salt is going to have a music review section, it should be written by people who know something about music.

Butterfield union issue clarified

To the Editor:

As residents of Butterfield House, we wish to correct some false impressions left by the article "Butterfield dorm seeking status as union council," [Collegian 10-3-77].

While a vote concerning unionization did take place at the House meeting mentioned in the article, it was simply a vote of support for the unionization effort. It did not represent an endorsement of the Student Organizing Project's [SOP] unionization proposal. The issue of filing a petition for status as a union council was not included in the vote. No concrete action to that effect is being taken at this time.

In response to the statement in the article that "the decision for a Butterfield dorm council was derived from long discussions held this summer by SOP members and the Student Senate," we wish to make it clear that if such discussions took place, it was without the knowledge of those who participated in the vote. We resent the implication that our advocacy of a student union was the result of manipulation by forces outside the dormitory. The pro-unionization sentiment expressed in the vote came from within Butterfield House.

While we do advocate the formation of a student union and support efforts in that direction, we feel that further education, discussion and exploration of options are needed before a specific course of action is decided upon. The SOP proposal is an option; not the only one.

We encourage other students to take the issue of unionization seriously. Simple acceptance of a pre-packaged plan without consideration of alternatives does not reflect the sentiment that brought about the struggle for unionization in the first place; that there is a need for greater participation of all students in determining the course of their education.

Develop awareness of the handicapped

To the Editor:

I would like to extend an invitation to all members of the University community to join me in observing Handicap Awareness Day on Tuesday, October 11th. The activities planned for that day are designed to highlight the barriers, both physical and attitudinal, with which handicapped students, staff, faculty, and others must cope each day.

For the handicapped, routine daily activities may present difficult problems that require unique planning and extra time and energy to overome. Our Handicapped Awareness Day activities provide for each of us the opportunity to reflect on how we, on this campus, can make life easier for our handicapped colleagues.

I urge each of you to participate in Tuesday's special programs, and to experience the barriers and problems which face the handicapped that day and every day.

Randolph W. Bromery
Chancellor

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Deadline for all letters is 4:00 p.m. the day before publication. Any letters received later will be published at some later date.

Committee approves police and firefighters arbitration bill

BOSTON [UPI] — A legislative committee yesterday approved a compromise bill which attempts to resolve a four-year controversy over collective bargaining and arbitration procedures for local firefighters and police officers.

Local city and town officials, the state's only firefighters union and some police unions supported the bill, but unions representing several thousand other police officers called it "a sellout," drafted without their knowledge.

In 1973, the Legislature passed a temporary law — opposed by town officials but supported by the unions — mandating both sides when negotiations have reached an impasse submit a last best offer to an arbitrator who makes a final and binding decision.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said the law resulted in costly arbitration awards and increased property taxes. Last June, the Legislature overrode a Dukakis veto and extended the binding arbitration law another two years.

Meanwhile for the past five months, the Professional Firefighters of Massachusetts, the Massachusetts Policeman's Association and the International Brotherhood of Police Officers worked with town officials in drafting a second experimental law to go into effect Jan. 1, 1978, to June 30, 1979.

The proposal calls for a joint Labor-Management Committee composed of six union representatives, six local government officials and an impartial chairman who is expected to be former Labor Secretary John Dunlop.

The committee would have wide ranging powers over all collective bargaining and arbitration procedures. It could choose to review and decide any case instead of submitting it to the state Board of Conciliation and Arbitration.

The Boston Police Patrolmen's Association and a representative of 25 municipal police unions said they were unaware of the drafting of the compromise measure until it was reported in the news earlier this week.

Frank McGee of the BPPA — representing some 2,000 police officers — told the crowded Public Service Committee hearing, "issues that have a broad-base social impact should not be formed, should not be considered and should not be enacted in haste."

McGee said the bill made broad and sweeping changes, and "I don't know how anyone in their right mind can ignore 2,000 policemen." He said it gave the committee the right to see all negotiation and collective bargaining documents.

"There are six management people on this committee. One of the basic premises of bargaining is not disclosing your hand until you get to the table," he said angrily.

Mandatory retirement poll planned

BOSTON [UPI] — The House Thursday gave initial approval to a bill to poll Boston voters on the Nov. 8 ballot on whether they support abolishing mandatory retirement for municipal employees.

And the Senate gave initial approval to a proposal to have the Retirement Law Commission study raising the retirement age for state police from 50 to 55-years-old.

In related action, the House Tuesday passed and sent to the Senate a bill ending mandatory retirement at age 70 for all state employees except state police, correctional officers, forest wardens or any other hazardous jobs.

"I put that bill in because a lot of state police officers asked me to," said Rep. Arthur McKenna, D-Springfield, sponsor of the bill authorizing the study on extending the retirement age for state police to 55.

"That retirement age was put into effect 30 years ago," said McKenna. "It used to be they could get a very good job when they retired. But now it's very hard for them."

Under the measure, the study by the commission must be completed by March 31, 1978. The bill goes to the Senate after the House gives it final approval.

The Senate without debate gave preliminary approval to a bill sponsored by Rep. Michael Flaherty, D-Boston, to place a non-binding referendum on the Nov. 8 ballot in Boston asking voters whether mandatory retirement or municipal employees should be abolished.

The Public Service Committee held a hearing Tuesday on two retirement-related bills — the one sponsored by Flaherty and one offered by Sen. William Owens, D-Boston, to end mandatory retirement for all workers in government and in private industry.

Flaherty said at the hearing mandatory retirement was "a slap in the face of our senior citizens."

Balloonists still delayed by stiff winds

BAR HARBOR, Maine [UPI] — Stiff southeasterly winds yesterday again kept two Colorado balloonists who hope to be the first to cross the Atlantic in a free flight balloon grounded.

For three weeks and three days, Dewey Reinhard, 47, and Steve Stephenson, 44, both of Colorado Springs, have been waiting for a weather clearance from a Washington forecaster.

"I'm not going to get psyched or excited until I see the gas going into it (the balloon)," said Stephenson, a pilot with limited experience in helium ballooning.

The duo hopes to succeed where 14 others have failed. Five men have died in attempted balloon crossings.

The weather information which prompted pontponement of the flight Thursday indicated a high pressure ridge would have drifted them north and possibly forced them to land on the polar ice cap, Reinhard said.

"If the weather is right we could leave at sunup, Friday Reinhard said. The yellow, orange and red gondola, shaped like a boat, sat in a field in the drizzling rain Thursday. Beside it was a truck carrying $5,000 worth of helium to be used to fill the 85-foot balloon.

Child abuse preventable according to two experts

DENVER [AP] — Child abuse may be predictable and preventable by observing the actions and attitudes of parents immediately before and after the birth of their children, two child care experts say.

Dr. C. Henry Kempe, president of the American Pediatric Society and professor of pediatrics at the University of Colorado Medical Center, said a four-year study he conducted with Dr. Jane Gray at Colorado General Hospital helped identify certain clues to potential child abusers.

"Picking up the signals is not all that difficult," said Dr. Gray. From prenatal interviews and questionnaires, she said, "You can tell a lot. One of the big things beforehand is the parents' own upbringing — was it secure or were they, themselves, abused?"

In the delivery room, she said, mothers and fathers who refuse to ask about their newborn offspring may be potential child abusers.

And a mother's behavior in the maternity ward is important in indicating her "parent-preparedness," Dr. Gray said.

"Is she happy? Is she smiling? Does she want the baby with her? When she does hold the baby, does she want to look into its eyes and get to know her child?"

Beginning in 1971, doctors and nurses at Colorado General began identifying parents who "needed extra help," Kempe said. One hundred parents were placed in this category and were divided into two groups of 50 each, he said.

One of the groups was considered the "risk" group and received only normal pediatric and maternity care. The other received special attention from pediatricians and specially trained nonmedical workers who visited the families and helped care for the new babies.

A third group of 50 parents was identified as needing "no extra help" and was used as a control group for comparison," Kempe said.

Researchers monitored the groups for signs of "abnormal parenting practices," such as physical or emotional abuse or failure of the children to thrive.

As a result, Colorado General now employs four persons who pay at least one home visit to the parents of each child born at the hospital. Extra visits are paid to those who seem to need help.

Ninth graders unable to write Pledge of Allegiance correctly

HONOLULU [AP] — When 111 ninth-graders were asked to write the Pledge of Allegiance, not one could do it correctly. One response described the United States as a nation "under guard" and dedicated "for richest stand."

A schoolteacher, who asked not to be identified so her students would not be embarrassed, called the results frightening. She said all the students, Americans coming from varying racial and ethnic backgrounds, had spelling problems, and they apparently had little grasp of what the pledge meant.

The word "indivisible" for example, came out as "in the visible" in many papers, or with spelling mistakes like "vissable" or "visble".

Two students said the nation was "under guard" instead of "under God". The phrase "to the Republic for which it stands" appeared in some papers as "of richest stand" or "for Richard stand."

The teachers said 12 students had trouble spelling the word "America". The word appeared in some papers as "Americain," "Americai," "Amereca," "Amicra", and "Amica".

UM spikers meet Chiefs

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The rapidly improving but still winless UMass volleyball team hopes that its luck will change tomorrow as the spikers (both junior varsity and varsity) travel to Springfield College squad at 1 p.m.

Coming off Tuesday's hotly-contested battle which they lost to Southern Connecticut in five games, the Minutemen will again have their hands full with Springfield.

The Chiefs were the Division I state champ last year, and during the regular season, they handled the UMass squad twice 7-15, 8-15 and 4-15, 4-15, with little trouble.

However, Springfield coach Mimi Murray has lost four starters from last year's squad and the UMass junior spikers, many of which are members of this year's varsity, pushed the Springfield JV's to five games before bowing last year. Based on this logic, UMass coach Dianne Thompson figures that this year's respective squads should be pretty evenly matched.

Also, just because the spikers have yet to capture their first victory, anyone that has attended the last couple of matches knows that the winless skein cannot go on for long. As Thompson said yesterday, "If we improve as much in the Springfield match as we did from the Bridgewater State games to the Southern Connecticut match, Springfield has a lot to look out for."

Batsmen win

The UMass fall baseball team Wednesday defeated Western New England College, 3-1, getting all of its runs in the first inning while receiving fine performances from four different pitchers.

Paul Bortolloti, Chris Collins, Jim Higgins, and Jamey Benelli pitched eight innings of shutout, four-hit ball, and struck out 12, before letting in the lone WNEC run in the ninth.

In the first, UMass went to work, showing some speed and clutch hitting. Tom Grimes and Glenn Dooling drew consecutive walks. Grimes then stole third, with Dooling going to second.

Designated hitter Brown singled to left, scoring two runs. He went to second on the throw home, which went by the catcher, and then took third on a stolen base. Tom Good walked. Doug Welenc flew to right, scoring Brown. UMass had a quick 3-0 lead.

In the bottom of the eighth, UMass had an excellent opportunity to add to its lead. Mike Stockley walked, Grimes reached on an error by the third baseman, and Dooling bunted his way on and the bases were loaded. But Charlie Ciccone fouled out, Good popped to center field, and Welenc flew out to center.

WNEC finally drew Minutemen blood in the ninth off of Benelli. Hilly walked and went to second when the ball got by the catcher. Paine reached on a passed third strike, with Hilly going to third. Kirartoulis struck out. Sarvaidio grounded to second, as WNEC's first and only run scored.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEDNESDAY, Oct. 5, 1977

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 7 — Born today, you are given to fits of temper and occasional periods of sulkiness. Even so, you cannot be said to be difficult to get along with or hard to live with. For though your immediate reactions may be negative you quickly turn these into positive and progresseve channels. Thus you have the advantage of being able to "let go" on the one hand and gain the profits of controlled behavior on the other.

Yours is basically an artistic temperament. This does not mean, however, that you necessarily have the artistic talent to go with it. It may be that you are a practical, scientifically minded individual whose approach to life is one of skeptical distance; except, when you become -- as you often do — emotionally involved.

Highly active, you do not thrive on rest periods. You try to make it a point to include moments of relaxation among the hours of work. You have no difficulty initiating projects; indeed, your difficulty often lies in not waiting to complete one project before initiating another.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Don't allow a depression of mood to keep you from giving your best to a demanding project on the home front. Clue children in.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Unless you are willing to take more than your usual time and use more than your usual caution, there may be a sad end to this day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Undertake a journey at your own risk. Heed the warnings of those who have your best interests at heart.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Those who may be seeking to remove you from your present position of leadership may appear to be courting you. Be on your guard.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Protect your own interests and you will protect the futures of loved ones. Seek out an old friend at evening.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — If you are willing to lend a hand with a project you have no real interest in, you will endear yourself to one you admire.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Asking another's pardon is the simplest way to settle an uncomfortable situation on the home front. Don't be falsely proud.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Keep your emotions under control, at least insofar as other people are concerned. Deep feelings must be recognized by you, however.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Activities begun some time ago may begin now to show results. Progress in several areas at once during afternoon hours.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An unwanted purchase, though not particularly offensive at the moment, may haunt you in the future. Don't fall for "bargains."

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Your spot on the employment scene is safe – but you can safeguard it further by doing your homework this weekend.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Keep from making any kind of statement that smacks of the technical or legal. Conversation should be be light and relatively unimportant.

Golfers finish second, qualify for ECAC's

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team, showing the consistency that has been its mark all season, hung on tough and ended in a tie for second place at the ECAC qualifying tourney yesterday at Glastonbury Hills Country Club in Connecticut.

In finishing in a tie for second, the Minutemen thus earned a spot in the field for the ECAC Championship, to be played on Friday and Saturday, October 14th and 15th at Seven Oaks Country Club in Hamilton, N.Y.

The linksters finished with a 312 aggregate three strokes behind the winners, Southern Conn. Tied with the Minutemen for second was URI. Bryant College finished third at 313, only a stroke behind the duffers while Providence took fourth at 315.

With one player left on the course, Providence needed a score of 75 to take second place away from UMass and URI. But the final man, Bob Millich, shot a 79, and the Minutemen triumphed once again.

The duffers received good, solid performances from all five players, with all four qualifying scores below 80.

Co-captain Jim McDermott was the low man for the linksters with a 77. Co-captain Flynt Lincoln and Junior Vic Lahteine fired 78's that could have been much better.

Lincoln knocked one out-of-bounds on the tough 16th, that produced a double-bogey, while Lahteine took a triple bogey at 16 and a bogey at 17, taking the heart out of a hot round.

Freshman John Lien, one of the heros last week at the Toski, came through again with a solid 79. Junior Jeff Orr, who has played fine golf all season, suffered five straight bogies on the back nine en route to an 80 score that did not figure in the final scoring.

The course was not in the best of condition, as the rain made the fairways and greens soggy making an already tough layout even more difficult.

Coach Ed Vlack was pleased with his squad, which has surprised everyone this fall. "I'm really pleased," said Vlach, "this really caps off a fine season."

Awaiting the Minutemen at the ECAC's will be the best teams on the east coast. Vlach is expecting the linksters to continue their fine play and finish in the top third, which would be some accomplishment considering the competition.

Roadwomen prepare for Brandeis invite

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team will be back in action this weekend when it travels to Franklin Park in Dorchester to compete in the second annual Brandeis Invitational Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

UMass will be defending its team title it won by defeating Brandeis last year individual champ Marina Buckley of Amherst is not running this fall, so a new individual champ will be crowned.

As of yesterday, head coach Ken O'Brien and women's coach Charlotte Lettis knew little about which teams would be at the meet.

"We know UConn and Brandeis will be there," said Lettis. "There's also the possibility that several AAU teams, such as the Liberty AC, Falmouth Track Club and Seacost Striders from New Hampshire will be there."

Most other New England schools have meets on Friday or Saturday, or may be planning on competing in the Bonnie Belle Mini-Marathon in Boston on Monday, and will not be at Franklin.

"It depends on the competition, whether we'll treat this as a practice meet or a regular race," said Lettis. "It would be too bad if only Brandeis and UConn showed up, since we've run them already. It's nice to know what the competition is, although I'm not worried about it."

UMass will be at full strength for Sunday's meet. Barb Callanan is almost recovered from her cold, and Tina Francario has shaken a slight cold she had at the beginning of the week.

Co-captain Jane Welzel, who has led the team in every meet so far this season, will be seeking to lower her time again on the 3.1 mile Franklin loop.

Francario, fellow frosh Priscilla Wilson, co-captain Sue Swartz, Deb Farmer and Linda Welzel have been filling the middle positions and should continue to do so.

Jo Chapman is still coming back from a sore knee, along with Sue Mulligan. Lettis said she hoped to bring 14 runners to the meet.

She received bad news when she found junior Anne Bradshaw would be lost for the season with an inflamed achilles tendon.

"It's a serious injury that you have to rest," said Lettis.

Netmen host YC tourney

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team will close out its fall season today and tomorrow as it hosts the Yankee Conference Championships. Matches will be held on the lower Boyden courts starting at 9 a.m. today, with semi-final and final singles and double matches beginning tomorrow at 9:30 a.m.

UMass was second in the YanCon's last year, as New Hampshire notched the title. According to UMass coach Jay Ogden, the Wildcats are favored to repeat as titleists.

"They're certainly the favorites, but not the heavy favorites," said Ogden. "They're very strong, though, with the likes of Jeff Aarts, who's seeded number one in singles and doubles."

Ogden said his Minutemen picked up some good spots in last night's seeding meeting.

Al Green was seeded number three in flight on singles. In flight two, Rick Sharton is number two seed. Jim Barnhart is the number six seed in flight three.

In flight four, captain Steve Heyl is seeded second, with Keith Hovland seeded second in flight five and Mark Huetteman seeded third in flight six.

Green and Barnhart are seeded second in flight one doubles, with Sharton and Heyl the first seed in flight two and Hovlan and Huetteman seeded third in flight three.

"We seem ready to play," said Ogden. "Our players seem eager to go."

Slumping booters travel; aim for Terrier victory

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team will try to return to its winning ways when they take on the Terriers of Boston University at Nickerson Field tomorrow at 1 p.m. It is a matchup of a red hot team vs. a slumping one.

BU has won its last four successive games to even its record at 4-4. It is even more impressive when one sees to whom those first four losses were attributed. New Hampshire, Babson, Vermont, and Brown, four of the area's top teams, all defeated the Terriers. The victories have come over Stonehill, Tufts, Boston College, and Providence.

Mark Pilger, who scored two goals against Providence, is the big gun for BU. After him the Terriers have a fairly diversified, though potent, attack.

Howie Freedman will probably do the netminding. He had an especially strong game against Providence, allowing only one score in a 3-1 win.

Offensively and defensively, BU has a very solid club, one that should give UMass a good fight. Like UMass, the Terriers feild a young club, with a strong core of freshmen and sophomores, which looks to bode success for several seasons to come.

The game will be played on BU's artificial turf, a playing surface the Minutemen aren't used to. This could present somewhat of a problem for the UMass troops.

The key factor in this game is attitude. If UMass plays like it did against Harvard, then the outlook looms dim. But if it can recapture the spirit of the early season, then hope springs eternal. A strong victory would be the proper medicine to get the Minutemen back on the track, and hopefully prevent a reincarnation of the past two games.

Harriers run in Bronx

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Carrying a 6-1 record and a second place ranking in New England, the UMass men's cross country team travels to Van Cortland Park in the Bronx Saturday for a tri-meet with Manhattan, Syracuse, and UConn. Meet time is scheduled for 12 noon.

With a traveling squad of 11 runners, coach Ken O'Brien and Arnie Morse expect little trouble in picking up three more wins.

"Manhattan will be our toughest opposition with some good frontrunners, but again their overall depth is no match for ours. We don't know that much about Manhattan but we don't anticipate any problems," said Morse.

Morse said he will be expecting UMass to run very hard and to go out fast as if this was the IC4A meet, which will be run on the same five-mile Van Cortland Park Course six weeks from Monday.

"We want to simulate the same type of IC4A conditions where we want to go out as hard as we can and establish position. Even though the IC4A's are a month away, we want our team to prepare for the course," said Morse.

He added it was extremely important that his roadmen prepare themselves psychologically for the course. According to Morse, Van Cortland Park is a treacherous course.

"There are some level parts but mostly it is steep hills, treacherous terrain, and a course built for endurance runners rather than speed runners," Morse said.

In last year's meet against these three same teams, UMass led by Mikd Quinn, outlasted hurricane warnings, three inches of rain, 50 mph winds, hail, and mud in beating Manhattan, 25-32.

Quinn outran Manhattan's Louis Ostalazager in winning the race at 26:32. Ostalazager, a highly recruited cross country runner out of high school, finished second, 30 seconds back. According to Morse, the number one Manhattan runner was hurt most of last year but is expected to battle for first place tomorrow.

The Orangemen lost many seniors and went out to recruit. Marty Lowankoski, former New Jersey state cross country champion, and a freshman from Newfoundland are expected to provide most of the competition. But other than those two, Syracuse has little else.

Last year's meet score against Syracuse was 21-38 but again graduation hurt the team from upstate New York. With a new coach and two new freshmen, Neil Rosenblatt (former Long Island champ) and Brian Tripponi, Syracuse has two talented runners. But the Orangemen are rebuilding and inexperienced.

UConn is in the same boat as Syracuse as the Huskies lost one of New England's best runners, Bruce Clark, a four-minute miler. They have three good runners in Pat O'Neil, Bob Sloss, and Tim Kane, but again do not have depth. UConn last week lost to Yale, 28-30, and is winless on the year.

Morse cited last week's tri-meet win against Northeastern, St. John's and Rhode Island as a good team triumph with extremely good performances from Stetson Arnold (second), Lou Panaccione (fourth), Kevin McCusker (sixth) and Matt Wolff (ninth).

"Last week we ran aggressive, ran together, and this is what we have to do this week," said Morse.

"This week, we have to lay it on the line early, blow them out real good and have seven of our runners in the top ten of the race. We want to make some noise up in the Bronx this weekend," said Morse.

Stickers face two NY foes

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The undefeated UMass field hockey team packed its overnight bags for its New York twinbill against Colgate today and Cortland tomorrow.

UMass coach Judith Davidson is "expecting to win both games." Davidson's optimism is well-founded. Her squad is riding on four straight impressive shutout triumphs.

The Minutewomen's latest victory was against Mt. Holyoke, 1-0. Cheryl Meliones scored her fourth goal against the Lyons to give UMass its winning margin.

The UMass stickers face off against Colgate today at 3 p.m. for the first time in UMass field hockey history.

The MInutewomen intend to avenge last year's season 3-2 lost against Corland in its 11 a.m. contest tomorrow. The UMass stickers hope to capitalize on Cortland's loss of eight graduated seniors.

The Minutewomen have added bulk with the return of three ailing starters. Ginger Bulman at right outside, Sue Kreider at right link and sweeper Gayle Hutchinson are expected to return to action against Colgate. Their absence was definitely felt in UMass' game against Mr. Holyoke. Davidson considers her team lucky to have walked away with a victory last Tuesday against the Lyons.

The UMass field hockey team is planning a trip to England in the autumn days of next year. Field hockey patrons can enjoy coffee and donuts in the main lobby at Boyden. Contributions will help finance the stickers' journey. Coffee can be purchased on weekdays from 8 to 11 a.m.

Mac's men aim to tame Terriers

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

In the corridor outside the UMass football coaches and players locker room at Alumni Stadium is a bulletin board with the number four drawn in red, and the initials BU stenciled inside. That is the magic number for the Minutemen, at least for this week.

Tomorrow at 1:00, (12:50 WMUA) the Minutemen will be seeking their fourth straight victory when they host the Terriers of Boston University at Alumni Stadium.

The game marks the return to Yankee Conference play for the first time in two weeks for both squads. The Minutemen enter the game having defeated Harvard 17-0, and DEMOLISHING Youngstown State 54-13 in their last two outings. But the Terriers did not fare as well in their independent games. They split a pair by defeating Northeastern 37-15 two weeks ago, before being trounced by Dartmouth 38-0 last weekend.

Boston University first-year head coach Rick Taylor has seen only one other Yankee Conference team so far this season. That was New Hampshire, who beat the Terriers 27-14 in their first game of the season. After viewing the films of UMass' convincing win over Youngstown, Taylor has had to reconsider a statement he made before his first game at the Terriers' helm.

"Before the season started, I said that we were going against the best in the Conference (New Hampshire) in our season opener," said Taylor. "But, I might have to reevaluate that after seeing UMass on film."

BU, 1-3 over-all, should be fired up after the castigation it received from Taylor concerning last weekend's loss to Dartmouth. Taylor was quoted in the Boston press earlier this week as saying, "we played with no emotion out there," and he is obviously going to be looking for a change in attitude from his team this weekend.

For the past few seasons the Terriers have been referred to as "that other college team from Boston," and they have done little to wipe away that stigma. However, the hiring of Taylor this season is an indication that BU is looking for better things to come from its football program.

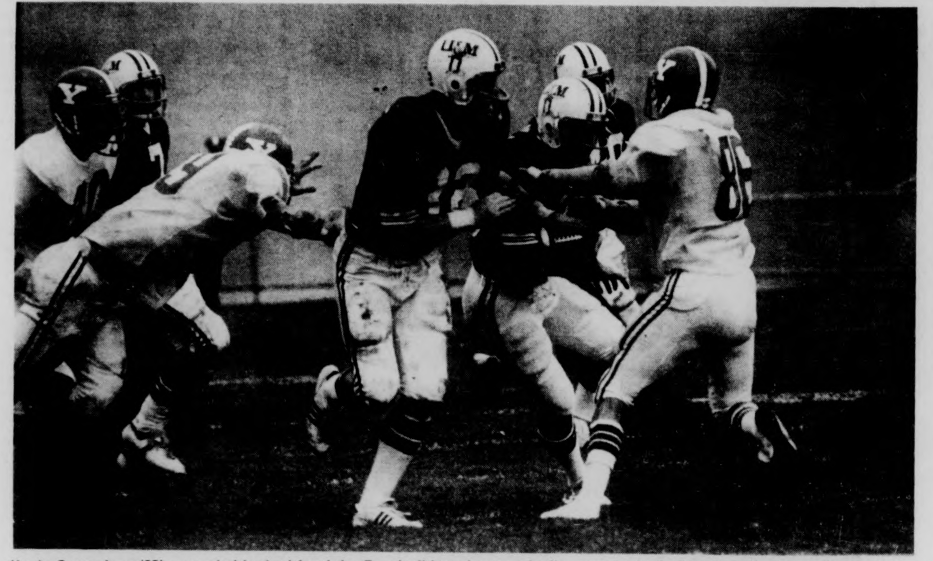
Taylor has inherited an experienced offensive unit which, so far this season, has been able to move the ball, with a good deal of consistency. However, the defensive unit has caused Taylor many worries, and last weekend's performance didn't help dispel them. Dartmouth rolled to 468 total offensive yards against the Terrier defensive unit, with 386 of those coming on the ground.

The Terriers' offense revolves around senior QB Greg Geiger, who ranks fifth among YanCon quarterback with a little better than 50 per cent passing completage percentage. Geiger is the field general but the man to watch when BU has the ball will be tailback Charles Hall. Hall is a senior from Baton Rouge, La., who at 5'11", 187 lbs. contains breakaway speed. He is the second leading rusher in the YanCon up to this point with 371 yards gained.

"He's an outstanding running back," said UMass defensive coordinator Bob Pickett. "They can control the football and we expect them to run right at us."

When Geiger goes up top he will most likely look for split end Tom Hailey or Hall coming out of the backfield. But for the Terriers to stay in the ballgame their defense, which has allowed 25 points a game so far, is going to have to tighten against the Minutemen's diversified offense.

Those looking for another aerial display from QB Mike Fallon this week may be disappointed. The Terriers' weakness on defense is right up the middle and that is where the Minutemen will attack. "Mike can throw the ball against anybody," said Pickett, "but we have to respect their excellent defensive backfield."



Kevin Cummings (82) not only blocked for John Romboli but also caught five passes, including three for touchdowns, in last week's 53-14 win over Youngstown State. The Minutemen entertain B.U. tomorrow at 1 p.m. (Staff photo by dave Rodgers)

Netwomen face Tufts; seek 2nd straight win

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team travels to Medford this afternoon to take on Tufts, in a match which was rescheduled from Sept. 24.

Tufts, under coach Rick Shapiro, should give Bill Yu and his UMass team some good competition.

This will be the team's sixth match this season, and its third this week. The women lost to Boston College, 3-4, on Sunday, but downed UNH Wednesday to bring their record to 3-2 at midseason.

Winning for UMass at Sunday's match were singles players Cathy Maher, Carolyn Mooney, and Dawn Minaii. Maher, in the first singles spot, won 6-4, 3-6, 6-2 for her third victory this season. Mooney also captured her third season victory, by topping her BC opponent, 6-2, 6-1, in the fourth singles match. Minnai took her sixth singles match, 6-1, 7-5, for the final UMass win.

Falling to their BC opponents Sunday were second and third singles players Lee Robb and Sherie Lurie, and the two UMass doubles teams which included Jane and Cathy Carson, Martha Awsiszus, and Cathy Sullivan.

At Durham Wednesday, Jennifer Ranz, Lee Robb, Cathy Sullivan, Martha Awiszus, and Sherrie Lurie led the netwomen to their 4-3 victory over UNH. Ranz was moved to first singles for the match, and won 6-3, 6-2. Awsisus and Lurie came off the courts next with a 6-0, 6-1 victory in the second doubles spot. Robb captured a 4-6, 6-4, 7-5 win at third doubles, and Sullivan came up with a 6-7, 6-2, 6-2 score in her fifth singles match to seal the UMass victory.

Yanks romp to tie series

NEW YORK [UPI] — The New York Yankees parlayed Cliff Johnson's mammoth homer and tie-breaking double with Ron Guidry's three-hit pitching last night to even the American League championship series at one game apiece with a 6-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Guidry, the soft-spoken left-hander who has been the Yankees' most dependable starter all year, tamed the hard-hitting Royals on a bloop single by Frank White in the third, a double by Fred Patek in the sixth and a single by George Brett in the ninth. Challenging the Royals' batters with his blazing fastball, Guidry struck out seven and retired nine straight batters from the sixth through the ninth.

We might have had a shutout, too, if it had not been for Mickey Rivers' weak throwing arm, which allowed one run to score on a line drive sacrifice fly to short center field, and a wicked cross-body block by Hall McRae which allowed another run to score in the sixth.

While Guidry was supplying the pitching, Johnson — obtained in mid-season from Houston for his bat — came through to help the Yankees even the best-of-five series. The Herculean designated hitter homered to tie the game in the fifth and doubled to snap a 2-2 tie an inning later.

The Yankees, aroused when McRae's flying cross-body block on second baseman Willie Randolph allowed Patek to race home with the tying run in the sixth, broke the game open in the bottom of the inning with a three-run burst capped by Brett's costly error.

After Andy Hassler struck out Graig Nettles to start the sixth, Thurman Munson stroked his second of three singles.

Don't blame me!

News Item — Boston Red Sox pitchers Rick Wise and Ferguson Jenkins have blamed manager Don Zimmer for the Sox failure to win the American League Eastern Division. The two veterans, boasting a combined earned run average of 4.05, have cited Zimmer's lack of communication with them as the prime reason for Boston's faltering down the stretch.

Remarks such as these are like a breath of fresh air. It's about time the modern-day athlete shed his shroud of false modesty and started to point the accusing finger in the direction it should be pointed — away from himself. One can only hope that this turn of events will be perpetuated ...

GRIESE SEES OPTOMETRIST AS CULPRIT IN DOLPHINS' DEMISE

Miami Dolphins' quarterback, Bob Griese, stating that he "couldn't even see the line of scrimmage clearly," has placed the burden of guilt for the Dolphins horrendous 1976 season squarely upon the shoulders of his optometrist, Melvin Myopia.

Said Griese, "I think that Melvin's refusal to fill a prescription, and his saying that my creeping blurred vision was only a result of getting hit in the head too many times, clearly showed his lack of farsightedness in such matters. Fans here in Florida have been screaming that I'm responsible for our bad showing in '76. Well, this is for the record: I should have been framed."

'CUBBIES NEEDED ME' - RAMON

"The Cubs were just one left-handed reliever short of winning the Eastern Division of the National League, and I'm a left-handed reliever," said former Red Sox bullpen ace, Ramon Hernandez.

Speaking candidly at a press conference, Hernandez told both reporters that "even when Bruce Suttor was healthy, he couldn't do it alone. If they hadn't traded me to a loser like Boston, I could have done for the Cubs what I did for the Red Sox."

The Cubbies needed me," continued Hernandez, "yet they sent me packing. You can't blame me for the Cubs folderoo. Nope, you can't blame me."

NHL PLAYERS ASSOCIATION CENSURES CANADIENS

The National Hockey League Player's Association has accused the Montreal Canadiens of taking the competitive spirit out of what was once known as the fastest game on ice.

In a 15-page document approved by a vote of 17-1, the Canadiens were reprimanded for displaying pride, a burning desire to excel and for showing none of the crippling effects of a watered-down league in their personnel.

Said one disgruntled opposition representative, "The Canadiens refused to communicate with us. I remember one game when they beat us 14-0. They didn't even invite us into their zone."

CONNORS BLASTS MOTHER

Tennis immortal Jimmy Connors has said that his mother is responsible for his poor play of late, and further stated that her presence in the stands was directly related to his dropping the U.S. Open title.

"She's not nice to me!" Connors fumed after taking his thumb out of his mouth. Upon calming down Jimmy became more specific.

"She makes me take a nap just before my matches. I'm so well rested I've been over-hitting the ball," said Connors. "When she attends the tournaments she yells at me to pick up all drop shots that fall just over the net and die. She tells me it's not good to leave my court messy," whined Connors.

TAMPA BAY SAYS FAULTY WATER KILLING TITLE HOPES

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers, fighting for the wild card slot in the National Football Conference of the NFL, have leaked the fact that the lack of a familiar water boy may jeopardize their chances for a post-season playoff berth.

Teammates, and former USC Trojans, Ricky Bell and J.K. McKay concurred that "the water boy has not helped matters any."

"When we were at SC, we got used to a certain way of drinking water," said McKay, son of John McKay, Tampa Bay head coach and former USC head man. We've had to get used to a whole new system and it's throwing off our timing," added the younger McKay.

Yes, only when athletes begin to "tell it like it is" will sports fans truly understand who is to blame for their heroes' shortcomings.

SUNDAY

MURDER ON THE ORIENT EXPRESS

Agatha Christie's classic murder mystery, 'Murder on the Orient Express,' the smash hit motion picture, will air as 'The ABC Sunday Night Movie,' October 9.

The star-studded cast includes Albert Finney (in photo) as the indomitable, if eccentric sleuth, Hercule Poirot; Lauren Bacall as a tough American divorcee; and Ingrid Bergman as a repressed missionary.

Set in the 1930's, the stylish 'Murder on the Orient Express' revolves around a deceptively simple situation—a passenger is discovered murdered in the sleeping coach of the fabled train, which becomes stranded in a snowbank near Istanbul. However, the interplay of the brilliant international cast creates a thoroughly absorbing whodunit, as Poirot painstakingly interviews each suspect, methodically breaking down all subtle deceits and sorting out an overabundance of clues. His final re-creation of the murder—using flashbacks—reaches a crescendo in a stunning climatic twist.

DICK CAVETT SHOW

dc
DICK CAVETT

As host of the new program on PBS, 'The Dick Cavett Show,' Dick Cavett will be interviewing comedians Harry and Jimmy Ritz (two-thirds of the zany Ritz Brothers Trio), Wednesday, October 12.

Other guests include architect Philip Johnson (Thurs., Oct. 13) and singer/composer Carly Simon (Fri., Oct. 14).

"Public television is the best place for 'The Dick Cavett Show'," said its host. "The show can be unrestrained and uninterrupted. I'm getting the best and most interesting people and intend to provide a very special setting and atmosphere in which my guests can be provocative, amusing and at times surprisingly revealing."

With no commerical interruption, Cavett will be free to do what he does best: conduct intelligent, entertaining interviews with some of the best known personalities of our time. Cavett's reputation for getting the 'ungettables' will make the new series topical and often newsworthy.

Bakke controversy to be debated tonight

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Mahar Auditorium will be the scene tonight of a debate on the controversial Allan Bakke case being heard before the U.S. Supreme Court this month.

The debate, which begins at eight, is being organized by Stan Kinard, coordinator of the Office of Third World Affairs. The debate will consist of two teams of two or three members.

Three of the debators are from the Boston academic community. Arguing in favor of the Bakke side will be Eric Greene, professor of law at Boston University with knowledge in constitutional law. The pro-Bakke side will also be represented by Allan Kort, a Russian history professor and Director of Outreach of the Hillel Society of Greater Boston.

The anti-Bakke point of view will be conducted by Denise Carty Benia, professor of law at Northeastern University and advisor to the Congressional Black Caucus on the case.

Prof. Playsel Benjamin, historian, writer, and former member of the UMass Afro-American Studies faculty, will also argue against Bakke.

Kinard said Greene and Benia will represent the opposing legal points of view, while Kort and Benjamin will deal with the political and sociological implications of the case.

In addition to these four, both teams will have a UMass student debating. The pro-Bakke side will have Robert Corn, a first year graduate student in communications studies and a member of the debate team. John Yong, a member of the Asian American Student Association, will argue against Bakke.

"We feel that it is very important that students are involved in the debates," said Kinard. He added that the large number of commentaries and letters in the

Amherst College keeps stocks

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The Amherst College Board of Trustees yesterday unanimously decided to maintain its present investment policy dealing with corporation's operations in apartheid South Africa, rather than to divest $20 million worth of stocks.

Amherst College President John W. Ward in an interview yesterday afternoon said, "We would consider divestment, if the corporation is unresponsive to our objections. However, we at Amherst College think it more morally responsible to try to affect change than to wash one's hands of a problem by simply selling out governmental stocks."

Both UMass and Hampshire College have decided within the past year to divest stocks in corporations operating in South Africa.

UMass President Robert C. Wood in a telephone interview yesterday said "The Amherst College situation in terms of endowment is very much different than ours. It is much larger, much more complex. One can respect every college or university for making its own determination. We took a different position... we believe we're affecting change in our policy as well."

In a trustee statement issued yesterday, the Amherst trustees outlined five points of their investment policy.

They said they do not presently or in the future intend to own shares of securities of any principal South African corporation.

They also said they will support shareholder resolutions against any new loan commitments or the renewal of existing loans to the government of South Africa.

Trustees gave support in the statement to any shareholder resolutions dealing with the end of the sale of military weapons to the government of South Africa.

They outlined expectations of corporate activities in South Africa, specifying periodic reports of progress made in the achievement of specific goals. These goals are contained in the "Statement of Principles", a publication subscribed by the group of 54 corporations in which Amherst College has invested.

The trustees also agreed to consider divestment if their objections as owners of stock do not succeed in changing a corporation's policies and practices.

The decision of the trustees to issue this statement came after a Friday afternoon meeting between the board and two student representatives, Karl Seidman and Josh Nessen, co-chairpersons of the Amherst South African Support Committee.

Seidman and Nessen argued at the meeting the students' views in regard to Amherst College's investment in these stocks.

"Our demands were a two-stage strategy to get corporations out of South Africa," said Seidman in a telephone interview yesterday.

"In the first demand we urged Amherst College to use its power of ownership to reach this end. If no reaction then was effected, our second demand urged divestment of stocks," Seidman said.

New England Telephone attacks PIRG plan

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

In an effort to thwart public support of the proposed Telephone Consumer Action Group (TELCAG), New England Telephone (NET) has released a statement calling the proposal a "new fund raising scheme."

Consumer activist Ralph Nader, after reviewing the NET statement, told the Collegian the statment was "filled with verbal foolishness".

The TELCAG proposal is an effort by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) to establish the right of consumers to use the phone company's billing system to collect funds and disseminate consumer information. The funds would then be used to hire lawyers and researchers to support consumer interests before the courts, legislature and regulating agencies.

The statement announced NET's opposition to TELCAG claiming that consumer interests are already adequately represented by the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) and the office of the state attorney general.

Nader refuted NET's claim during a Collegian interview while he recently visited the U-Mass-Amherst campus.

"What they're saying is that because there is a government agency that's suppose to regulate phone rates, there is no need for a consumer action group composed of and representing telephone consumers before the agency, the legislature and the courts," Nader said.

"That's like saying there should be government without citizenship, which is exactly the way the telephone monopoly wants it," he added.

According to data supplied in the statement, NET was assessed $61,000 by the state last year to cover the state attorney general's costs of defending consumers positions before the DPU.

Mass PIRG attorney Peter Rider called this amount "peanuts."

"That much would only cover the cost of one lawyer and his back-up staff. You've got to put these figures into context," said Rider.

The NET release also boasted of another $400,000 levied against them by the state last year to defray the costs of operating the DPU.

"This money," argued Rider, "just goes to set up the DPU as a judge to rule over rate increases requested by the phone company. What we must have, and what is lacking now, is an advocate on both sides. We need outside advocates," he added.

Both Secretary of State Paul Guzzi and Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti reportedly advocate TELCAG's inception and have already accepted PIRG's initiative petition to put TELCAG before the voters on a referendum if need be.

Paula Gold, chief of the Consumer Protection Division in the state attorney general's office has publicly said

Energy Dept. overestimates capabilities

WASHINGTON [AP] — The new Department of Energy has seriously overestimated its ability to cope with another cold winter and resulting natural gas shortages, a congressional report says.

Federal officials have said they will be able to make up 60 per cent of expected shortages like those that closed schools and factories last winter.

But in a report released yesterday a Senate subcommittee said "the federal government will not be in a position to help very much," even though it credited officials with doing more than ever to deal with anticipated shortages.

The subcommittee on intergovernmental relations based its conclusions on three days of hearings in which officials outlined a Winter Emergency Energy Plan for 1977-78.

"Another cold winter is on its way and we are not ready for what it may bring," said Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, the panel's chairman.

The report's authors said they were impressed with both the detail and scope of the emergency energy plan, prepared by the Federal Energy Administration. The FEA's responsibilities have been taken over by the new Department of Energy, which went into existence Oct. 1.

The subcommittee report said the mere existence of the plan represents a far higher level of concern than the federal government has shown previously.

But at the same time it said the plan "appears to seriously overestimate the government's ability to increase natural gas supplies and decrease demand should another cold winter bring about natural gas curtailments."

Legionnaires' outbreak spans Vermont

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — The confirmation yesterday of two more cases of Legionnaires' disease — including the first outside this area — has provided the first concrete evidence the current outbreak spans the state.

In all, 18 cases of the mystery pneumonia-like disease — 12 of them fatal — have been confirmed, most since Aug. 1. Another 10 cases were described by officials as "highly suspect."

The toll rose yesterday when the National Center for Disease Control (CDR) reported one more case had been confirmed and five others were suspected at the Medical Center Hospital here.

The five "suspect" patients have since recovered, hospital officials said.

Spokesmen at Putnam Memorial Hospital in Bennington, meanwhile, said an elderly male patient, whose name they withheld, has been stricken with the mysterious pneumonia-like illness, but is "doing well."

Senate begins riders debate

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Senate is slated to take up debate again today on a vastly swollen supplemental budget which contains $17 million in pay raises for state employees and a bitterly fought anti-abortion rider.

An attempt failed last week to separate the pay raises from a supplementary budget which has swelled with almost every floor debate.

The separation was defeated last Wednesday when Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, cast deciding votes in two roll calls. A number of other senators immediately attached their own amendments which inflated the document from $33 million to almost $70 million.

It appears the measure is headed for a conference committee where a compromise will be worked out. It was apparently with that in mind that abortion advocates in the senate attached so many new money items to the bill.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has said he will reject any budget which would "restrict the right of poor and minority women to choose abortion." The House is expected to override any such veto, but the Senate is expected to sustain it.

Women's health series

This is the fourth in a weekly series of articles on women's health care.

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

"I knew that no one would ever want to marry me. I had no breasts. I would never have breasts."

So writes Nora Ephron (Crazy Salad, Knopf, 1974) about her experience as a preteenager who was slower to develop than her peers.

"Here are some things I did to help:

"Bought a Mark Eden Bust Developer. Slept on my back for four years. Splashed cold water on them every night because some French actress said in Life magazine that that was what she did for her perfect bustline. Ultimately ... I began to wear padded bras."

For many women, this is a painfully familiar story. From the belief that the failure of their breasts to "measure up" makes them undesirable as women, to the artificial solution, the course is predictable. Not because women like wearing foam rubber protrusions on their chests but because, once again, we have taken a quality that few women naturally possess and label it the height of femininity. Few people, faced with the choice of sexual undesirability or "faking it", will brave the former.

A breast is a functional part of the female body. If worthy of worship at all, it should be for the breast's role as the source of nourishment of human infants. Sadly, Americans seem to have lost the ability to view the breast as anything other than a pornographic object.

Shrines to the breast have been created in the form of "topless" clubs and porno magazines. These institutions are an accepted part of the American way of life, while it remains generally unacceptable for a woman to nurse her baby in a public place.

Women tend to think of their breasts in terms of men's use and pleasure, rather than their own or their infants'. Health care aspects of breats, as with other parts of the female body viewed as sexual, are often ignored as long as there is no visible problem.

Most breast disorders are not detectable by sight. Women will have to reclaim their breasts as part of their bodies that need to be taken care of. This will mean overcoming their squeemishness about touching their own breasts.

It may also mean that by the time young women reading this article are 37-55 years of

Mixup causes meeting delay

Campus Center residents charge indifference

By LAWRENCE UCHMANOWICZ
Collegian Staff

In response to a cancelled meeting last week, the students living in the Campus Center Hotel have scheduled another meeting for tonight at nine. This meeting is to deal with the negotiations by the students and the Legal Services Office (LSO).

These parties claim that the administration has turned a deaf ear to the problem.

"There is no unwillingness on the part of the administration to meet with students," said Dean of Students William F. Field this weekend. "The problem was that the group involved contacted Jerry Quarrles in the Housing Office, instead of this office, or the chancellor's office."

"I will be more than happy to meet with students personally said Field, but not with the LSO. If the students and I can't work out something between us, then Legal Services can sue the administration."

"Dean Field does not want us around when he meets with students," said Marie Gutierez of the Legal Services Office. "But we will be there, he can't tell us to leave."

"They can be at the meeting," said Field, "But I won't talk to them, this is between the students and the administration."

The demands of the CC Hotel Students are:

- Rent rebates appropriate to the amount of time spent in the hotel be given out.
- Students who are no longer able to cope with the problem of housing be allowed to leave the University and receive a full refund excluding meal costs.
- If any student in the future has to accept temporary or otherwise inconvenient housing (s)he be given a discount for an unspecified amount.
- That students who live in the hotel be allowed to remain and any students wishing to move back into the hotel who were there before be allowed to do so.
- Any student who had to live in the hotel be given first priority for any open room assignments next semester.
- Any students who had to live in the Hotel for more than three days be allowed to move off campus next semester if they choose to do so.

> "There's no unwillingness on the part of the administration to meet with students"—
> Dean Field

"Most of the demands are pretty good," said Field, "but some are plain impossible.

"The one dealing with first priority to open rooms is the worst one, he said. "The dorms have their own points system and to put students into those rooms would not be fair.

"The thing that bothers me," he added, "is that the students did not even come to see me about the problem. If they had, a lot of the problems could have been avoided. The administration is dealing with the problems, only a fraction of the original students are still living in the hotel and most of those are the ones who showed up two weeks late and did not tell us.

In addition to the list of demands, the hotel students are passing around a petition for other students to sign supporting their demands.

Tonight's meeting will take place at nine in room 126 Hasbrouck. At that time the progress of the negotiations will be discussed and possible options for the future actions by the students will be discussed. All interested students will be welcome.

2700 Benson tickets still unsold

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The UMass Undergraduate Student Senate could lose up to $13,500 if the remaining tickets for the George Benson concert this Thursday night at the Curry Hicks Cage are not sold, according to Jack Albeck, acting co-chairperson of the Music Committee of the Union Program Council. The loss would affect the future of similarly sponsored concerts by the senate, he said.

The Benson concert at 8 p.m. is the first large concert to be held in the Cage in seven years and the only college audience on Benson's national tour, which he will end here. Ticket sales have been slow because "students think the show is sold out so they haven't tried to get tickets", said Albeck yesterday.

A total of 4,200 tickets went on sale two weeks ago when the contract was received and 2,700 still remain unsold. The deficit spending against ticket receipts policy of the senate means that it will absorb all losses on the concert, although the purpose of the concert is to break even.

Costs for the Cage concert include Benson's contract agreement, allocations for publicity, security and sound and light preparations. Benson will receive the same fee he received at his concert in Hartford — $12,500, according to Albeck.

Albeck said plans for the Cage concert began this summer and that Benson was selected because he would appeal to all members of the University community. "He has sold out every single concert on his tour — there's no reason why this shouldn't be a success here," Albeck said.

The Union Program Council is selling tickets at several locations both on and off campus, including TIX, Faces of Earth, Sun Music, Backroom Records, and the Sound Room in Northampton. The cost of tickets is five dollars for students with a UMass I.D. and $6.50 for the general public.

The Cage will be used for a concert for the first time in seven years after an incident on Nov. 12, 1970 resulted in damage to the building. The trouble occurred at a concert given by Traffic, Dave Frye and Buffy Ste. Marie when the Cage, which holds approximately 4,500 persons, was jammed by as many as 9,000 people who forced their way into the Homecoming concert.

In a Collegian story reporting the 1970 incident, Dean of Students William F. Field was quoted then saying "It's perfectly clear that we have to rethink the whole idea of major concerts being held in the Cage.... I don't think that we'll do any more contracting until a thorough study has been made."

Field yesterday said that the problems of the 1970 concert were due to isolated reasons stemming from the fact that there were two concerts in the Cage that night. He said there are no anticipated problems for the Benson concert this Thursday and that both Benson and the sponsoring group should be a "reasonable attraction."

Ticket sales and crowd behavior for the Benson concert will help determine the future of subsequent Cage concerts, according to Albeck, who said he wants to "make the students aware" of the remaining tickets for Benson and the opening act with comedian Robert Shaw.

The Union Program Council is able to sponsor the Benson concert because of budget funding by the Board of Governors (BOG) and the Student Senate, Albeck said. BOG has a stipulation that the Union Program Council only use money inside the Student Union building. Any concerts outside the Student Union draw money from the senate.

The Cage concert with the Grammy award winning Benson will feature the latest hits from his new album, "In Flight". Albeck said that the "top name act" should be a "mellow show in the Cage, which is being "activated for concert facility."

Participation in faculty contract talks

Student involvement: an uneasy acceptance

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A recent decision by the faculty union and administration now negotiating the first faculty collective bargaining contract in UMass history will allow students to sit in on contract sessions, with power to speak if recognized by either of the two groups.

UMass students are not the first in the state to participate in faculty contract talks, however. Students at North Adams State College, Salem State, and Fitchburg State all have participated in contract talks in the past.

What follows is an account of the effect student participation in faculty contract talks has had at the three state colleges, as told to the Collegian in recent interviews.

The trend of higher education teachers organizing into bargaining units is a relatively new one in this state. North Adams, Salem, and Fitchburg State teachers organized in 1973. The UMass faculty voted in a bargaining agent in February of this year after several years of organizing work by two faculty associations.

The faculty at the three state schools as well as at UMass affiliated their local associations with the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA). The MTA in turn affiliated with the National Education Association.

The MTA has become a chief spokesman and one of the most powerful teachers groups in Massachusetts. Statewide, the MTA has 350 local associations in non-higher ed, represents five state colleges, UMass, the University of Lowell and 15 community colleges.

As such, the MTA is a major force in Massachusetts education.

Depending on where one looks in Massachusetts, student involvement in faculty collective bargaining has had varied effect.

At North Adams State a school of 2,500 full time students, contract talks began in 1973-74, after the faculty organized.

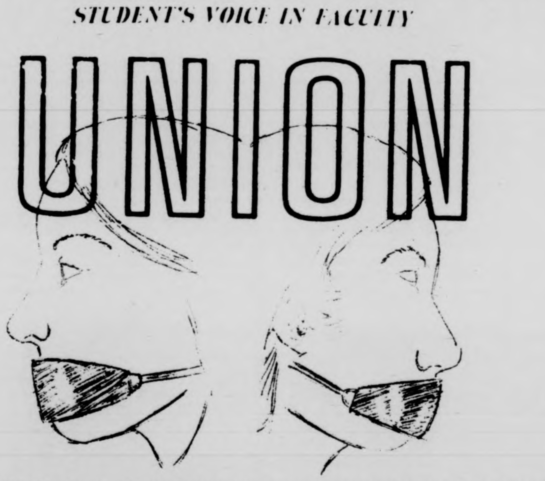
Anthony F. Ceddie, assistant to the president at North Adams, said "right from the very beginning, they (the students) were involved at the table" with contract negotiations.

Brian Fitzgerald, a former member of the student bargaining team at North Adams and now coordinator of Student Affairs at Bates College, said at the outset of negotiations to determine student participation there was debate as to whether students should be part of the faculty or administration team. Students eventually ended up as an independent "third party" to the talks.

Under the teams of the agreement to allow student participation, said Fitzgerald, students had the right to caucus and to make proposals, but did not have voting rights.

As contract talks progressed, Fitzgerald said two things happened: "tensions" arose and students sided with the administration on contract matters.

Fitzgerald said there "tended to be student-faculty tensions." Due to student tendency to side with administration, the faculty "resented" student presence. Fitzgerald also, said he noted condesencion toward students by faculty.



Donald E. Washburn, president of the local MTA association during 1976-77 and a member of the faculty bargaining team for three years, agreed that student-faculty tensions arose.

"I think struggle and strain are part of it," Washburn said. He thinks bargaining is "antagonistic" by nature, and that might have added to the tension.

As for students siding with administration, Ceddie said perhaps this was because concerns of students were also concerns of administrators: academic planning, faculty evalation, etc. Ceddie noted that at the outset of contract talks the faculty thought students would be their "ally" at the bargaining table.

Washburn too said students tended to side with administration, but added "it varies with the issues."

All in all, Ceddie said, "it was valuable to have students participating. They provided insight into issues that would have been solved differently otherwise."

Fitzgerald agreed, and said student participation "posed a different mode of resolution."

At Fitchburn State, where some 3,200 full time students attend classes, students no longer participate in the bargaining process because the faculty union no longer wants them to.

Douglas Hebb, president of the union representing the Fitchburg faculty, the Fitchburg State College Education Association, said in May of 1974, that the association no longer wanted students to participate in the talks.

Since students participated by mutual agreement of faculty and administration, the union's decision to exclude the students was binding.

Fitchburg Student Government Association (SGA) President David Monroe declined to comment when asked about the union's decision. He referred all questions to another SGA official who was not available for comment.

Hebb said the reason for the exclusion of the students was two-fold.

He explained that following agreement on a contract in 1974, talks began on "money matters" of a new contract for when the 1974 contract expired. Money matters, Hebb said, had to do with faculty salaries.

Hebb said some faculty felt the "money matters" were not students' business.

Secondly, Hebb said, some faculty were "concerned" over student sentiment regarding implementation of the 1974 contract. He said "almost without question" students sided with administration, a trend observed earlier when a question of how to implement the various provisions of the 1974 contract arose.

As an example, Hebb cited the Fitchburg All College Counsel, a body composed of students, faculty, and administrators dealing with college governance.

Hebb said such action by students "was not in the best interest of the Association."

Similar to the situation at North Adams, students at Fitchburg had the right to caucus and speak, but not to vote.

Carleton LaPort, assistant to the president at Fitchburg, said many issues otherwise not considered by faculty and administration, such as college governance, were brought up by students. Furthermore, he added the administration "would not be opposed to having them (students) come back to the table."

At Salem State, a school of 4,900, students were involved in the bargaining process from 1972-74, then dropped out.

However, Salem Student Government Association President John T. O'Connell, a psychology major from Sommerville, said students are now trying to get back into negotiations.

Vincent McGrath, president of Salem's local chapter of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said he believes the reason students dropped out was because the students involved graduated, and no new students took their place.

O'Connell said in May 1977, students gained authorization to participate in contract talks but "just before" students went to sit in, the talks ended. He added that new talks begin "in about a month."

A new authorization is needed for students

Amherst Briefs

Gripe investigations may be expedited

Area tenants this winter may be able to shorten heated arguments with landlords if modifications to a new state sanitary code are approved. A proposed modification of Article II, which deals with inspection of rental housing, would speed up investigations of heat-related complaints by tenants. At present, building inspectors must inspect an entire building if a single complaint on any item is received.

The proposed modification would allow inspectors to investigate heat-related complaints without inspecting the entire building. A hearing on Article II will be held tomorrow morning at ten in Morrill Science Center at UMass, in the Mass. Western Regional Health Office conference room.

Amherst receives loan for dorms

And speaking of winter, the hatches at Amherst College will be battened down a little tighter this year, thanks to a $205,000 loan from the federal government. Aimed at rehabilitating some of the older dorms on campus, the HUD loan will be used to install storm windows and for replacement of one dormitory roof.

Amherst panel considers DNA

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

A review of material on recombinant DNA gathered at workshops last week will top the agenda at the Amherst selectmen's meeting tonight.

Also scheduled to be discussed at the meeting, though not scheduled as a separate agenda item, is the question of whether names of delinquent town taxpayers will be made public.

The meeting will be held at 7:30 in the Town Room at Town Hall.

A series of informational workshops to better acquaint the board and the general public with the DNA issue were conducted last week. The selectmen have up to this point, postponed making a decision on the controversial proposed ban on recombinant DNA testing. An article appearing on the warrant, or agenda, for the special Town Meeting Oct. 17 calls for a moratorium on recombinant DNA research at area schools until potential hazards and ethical implications can be explored.

Recombinant DNA testing is a process in which two separate genetic units not normally found in nature are spliced together to form a third unique combination.

Selectmen chairperson Diana Romer last night said the board will decide this week whether to support the article at the town meeting next Monday.

Town Attorney John F. Murphy, Jr. will present his decision not to publish the delinquent taxpayers' names until a similar "test case" in Essex County is resolved later this month. Town Manager A. Louis Hayward will present Murphy's decision to the board. Romer last night said she will ask the board if it wants to accept and discuss the report at that time. It is not likely a decision will be made tonight Romer said.

Murphy's ruling not to release the names of residents who owe back real estate taxes came after a recent request by the Daily Hampshire Gazette to make public the list.

Amherst bank cited by state

The First National Bank of Amherst has been cited by the state legislature for offering low-interest, alternate energy loans. A proclamation passed by both branches of the Massachusetts legislature was last week presented to two senior officers of the bank at the State House. The bank offers 9.55 per cent interest rate on homeowners exploring alternate energy sources for their homes. The rate is 1.5 to 3.5 per cent lower than for home improvement loans. Commented Sen. John W. Olver and Rep. James G. Collins, both Democrats in Amherst: "It is our firm belief that our serious energy problems will not be solved without the private sector playing the dominant role."

DNA research forum planned

Two public forums on recombinant DNA research are scheduled for this week in preparation for next Monday's special Town Meeting. The first session is scheduled for 7:30 tonight in the Amherst Jr. High School Auditorium.

The second will be held at 8 p.m. in Bowker auditorium at UMass on Thursday night.

★ Bakke case debate

Collegian indicated a high concern among students.

The U.S. Supreme Court case centers around Allan Bakke, a 37-year-old space engineer from California. In 1972 and 1973 Bakke applied to the University of California-Davis Medical School and was rejected both years. Bakke found out that his grades and aptitude scores were well above many students accepted, including some minority students.

UCal-Davis sets aside 16 of its 100 medical school seats for "disadvantaged students." Bakke charged that the school was accepting minority students or lower qualifications and therefore was discriminating against him because he was white.

Bakke's case was upheld in the California Supreme Court when the court rejected the University's procedures and ordered that Bakke be enrolled in the medical school. UCal-Davis has appealed the case to the U.S. Supreme Court where it will be heard this month.

The case has received much national attention and has been heralded by both sides as a landmark case of enormous importance to affirmative action programs. NAACP general counsel Nathaniel Jones has been quoted as saying that "if the Supreme Court agrees with Bakke, we will have to start over again with desegregation."

Critics of affirmative action see the case as a challenge to what is termed "reverse discrimination." Bakke argues that this is a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Kinard said that tonight's debate is meant to educate the UMass community about what he termed one of the most important issues of the seventies."

"We are concerned that some of the facts of both sides of the case have not been put forth properly by the media," explained Kinard.

Kinard said all concerned members of the University community should attend the debate because "the implications of the case are broad based and affect us all."

Aide killed

BOSTON [UPI] — A man who drove Dick Gregory's car from Plymouth into Boston yesterday was later killed by a hit-and-run driver as he stood on Providence Street. Police said a black van is being sought in connection with the fatal accident.

Mike Watley, 38, of Long Pond Road, Plymouth was pronounced dead on arrival at New England Medical Center an hour after the accident. He was an associate of comedian-activist Dick Gregory.

Gregory was contacted last night by Nkrumah Olinga, a friend and graduate student at UMass-Amherst, about the death.

Olinga told the Collegian the killing was an attempt to "put fear into us. It was an attack on all of us, of the black movement and of the progressive elements in this country."

Olinga noted Gregory was speaking around the nation, several times a day and had been "very threatening" to certain elements of the country.

He said this "hit-and-run homicide" was a warning to Gregory and others in the movement to cease their work. Collegian Black Affairs will follow-up the story tomorrow.

★ Effect of student participation varies

to participate in those negotiations, said O'Connell, and present student government leaders will seek someone to sit in on them.

McGrath echoed the feelings of North Adams and Fitchburg students and officials concerning the effect of student participation in the talks.

However, he said at Salem students sided with faculty on contract matters and also helped to "loosen" the administration.

"The administration seemed more willing to sacrifice with students there at the bargaining table," McGrath said. "Students tended to loosen them up."

Salem State differes from North Adams or Fitchburg because students there did not have the right to make independent proposals. Rather, they had to make their desires known using either the faculty or administration sides as intermediaries to voice their wishes for them.

Meanwhile, back at UMass, Student Government Association co-President Pinky Batiste commented on student participation here.

"We're going to be watching both sides," Batiste said. "We are really going to make them look at things affecting students."

She said it would be "pretty realistic" to expect students to side with administration. But she added that students "have got to be careful not to get sided with one group right away."

Batiste said it would be "unrealistic" to not anticipate problems and tensions during negotiations, especially with the faculty. She said that when issues are considered that concern students, such as class size, advising hours, etc., students are put in an "adversary relationship" with faculty.

She added that students will expect administration and faculty to "justify their actions."

Student participation in collective bargaining has had varied effects. The effect it will have at UMass remains to be seen.

Two Soviet cosmonauts fail with space laboratory

MOSCOW [AP] — Two Soviet cosmonauts headed home yesterday after failing to link up with an orbiting space laboratory in a disappointing start to Russia's third decade in space.

Soyuz-25 commander Lt. Col. Vladimir Kovalenok and flight engineer Valery Ryumin, both first-time space travelers, were lofted into orbit with some fanfare Sunday. Their flight came 20 years after the Soviets inaugurated the space age with the October 1957 launch of Sputnik, the first manmade earth satellite.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the spacecraft closed to within 393 feet of the Salyut-6 orbiting space station yesterday. But, said Tass, "because of some deviations from a planned docking regime the linkup was cancelled." The report gave no further details.

Western space experts here suggested two possible reasons for the failure, the latest problem in the trouble-plagued Soviet space program.

The experts said the docking mechanism on either spacecraft might have malfunctioned, or more likely the cosmonauts may have overshot the space lab, orbited Sept. 29, and not had enough fuel for a second pass at the target.

This was what apparently happened in April 1975 when a Soyuz capsule failed to link up with the Salyut-4 space station.

Another mission was aborted in October 1976 after Soyuz-23 failed to make a scheduled docking with Salyut 5, but there was no clear indication of what caused the Soviets to abort the mission.

The Russians succeeded last February in linking Soyuz-25 with Salyut-5 in a 19-day mission.

Western observers say problems in the decade-old Soyuz-Salyut program point up a basic shortcoming in the Soviet rocketry. They say the Russians do not have a booster powerful enough to put more than a seven-ton payload into orbit.

Because of the weight deficiency, the observers say the Russians carefully have to juggle their spacecraft's food and fuel supplies. Soyuz normally carries a five-day supply of food and fuel, but fuel is reduced to make room for additional food on longer missions.

By comparison, the Saturn-V rocket used by the United States in the Apollo and Skylab programs can put 120-140 tons in earth orbit and loft a 50-ton payload to the moon.

Western space experts said the docking problems "could put a serious crimp" in future Soviet space exploration, which is believed to focus on a series of linkups with orbiting laboratories.

The first Soyuz spacecraft, launched in 1967 and designed to dock with a space station, crashed on its return to earth, killing cosmonaut Vladimir Komarov.

Russia's first attempt to link up with a space station, Salyut-1, in 1971, was aborted without explanation. The next manned shot, Soyuz-11, put three men aboard the space station.

Hearings are going slow in search of FBI director

WASHINGTON [UPI] — FBI director-designate Frank Johnson has suffered complications from artery surgery, the White House said yesterday and Senate hearings on his nomination have been postponed.

The statement said Johnson's "condition is not serious but will require several weeks of bed rest" at his home in Montgomery, Ala.

Confirmation hearings for Johnson, a U.S. District judge from Alabama, had been scheduled to start today.

The chief counsel of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Francis Rosenberger, said "I understand he's had a slight relapse" in recovery from an operation in August to repair a weakened artery wall in his abdomen.

Grover Smith, press secretary to Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., who had been scheduled to introduce Johnson at the confirmation hearings, said "I understand Johnson's doctor has ordered him back to Alabama and to bed."

Johnson underwent the surgery after President Carter announced his selection to succeed Clarence Kelley as FBI chief.

The White House statement said Johnson "has developed a herniated area in his abdomen as a result of abdominal surgery performed in August which successfully corrected an aneurysm of the aorta.

"Because of Congress' anticipated recess, it is expected that the hearings will be rescheduled for January."

The White House announcement said Attorney General Griffin Bell requested the postponement.

Johnson, 58, a Republican, first declined the FBI post last December, but reconsidered earlier this year.

He became nationally known in the late 1950s because of a series of court decisions that quickened the pace of racial desegregation in Alabama.

Mrs. Carter in Caribbean to discuss Lat.-Am. policy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rosalynn Carter yesterday returned to the Caribbean to tell news executives about the President's Latin American policy, which hinges partly on approval of the new Panama Canal treaties.

The administration's top hemispheric spokesman, Assistant Secretary of State Terence A. Todman, leaves Tuesday to discuss the Panama Canal treaties and U.S. relations with Cuba.

Mrs. Carter and Todman will address separate meetings of United Press International's 18th annual Conference of Editors and Publishers, held this week near San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Mary Hoyt, the first lady's press secretary, said Mrs. Carter's speech would focus on changes the administration has made in U.S. relations with Latin America. President Carter helped Mrs. Carter with her speech and "went over it with her."

Mrs. Carter visited Jamaica in June as part of her seven-nation Latin American diplomatic mission.

While Mrs. Carter will deal with the administration's hemispheric policy in general, Todman — who addresses Edicon during a Wednesday luncheon meeting — will concentrate on the Panama Canal treaties and Cuba.

Earlier this year, Todman became the first top-ranking U.S. official to visit Havana since the United States and Cuba broke diplomatic relations over 16 years ago. He helped negotiate agreements on fishing and an exchange of envoys through "diplomatic interest sections."

The Panama Canal debate is now in full swing on Capitol Hill and the administration has reopened talks with Panamanian officials to clarify the precise meaning of U.S. defense and maritime rights after Panama gains full control of the Canal on Jan. 1, 2000.

Todman will also visit the Dominican Republic and Haiti before returning to Washington on Oct. 19.

Handicapped people have more job chances now

BOSTON [UPI] — A bill prohibiting employment discrimination against the handicapped has passed the Massachusetts Senate and awaits action by the House, but one senator says the measure is now "toothless".

The measure makes it unlawful to dismiss or refuse to hire, rehire or advance in employment any qualified handicapped individual, solely due to the handicap.

The employer must show "a reasonable accommodation to the physical and or mental limitations of an employee or applicant would impose an undue hardship on the conduct of the employer's business" if charged with discrimination.

Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, whose attempt to amend the bill was rejected 20-15 in the Senate last week, said "it's a toothless bill. Big business lobbyists were trying to kill the bill and one way was to make the bill toothless — and they did."

He said the measure provides "no enforcement mechanisms in Massachusetts."

Under the bill, if an employer charged with discriminating against a handicapped person falls under federal jurisdiction, the state Department of Labor and Industries is precluded from taking any action.

Backman said "This takes jurisdiction from the state of Massachusetts any employer subject to federal laws — schools, colleges, large corporations and agencies or groups receiving federal funding."

He said federal enforcement of discrimination laws is limited since only one person in New England handles these types of cases. If federal jurisdiction is ruled out, the department is then given enforcement power.

Also the measure prohibits court action unless the claimant has exhausted all possible remedies through the department.

Under Backman's bill, the claimant could file for damages or injunctive relief, or both, in Superior or Probate Court 90 days after filing a complaint with the Department of Labor and Industries.

The petitioner, under Backman's amendment, also could seek temporary injunctive relief through the courts prior to filing a complaint with the department or while his or her case is pending before the department.

Backman, who voted for the measure — which passed unanimously — after his own amendment was defeated, said "it's better than nothing. It's a step forward, but a very slight step."

Mascara can cause blindness

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration announced yesterday it plans to require inclusion of a preservative in mascara and other eye makeup to prevent infections which can produce blindness.

The agency said the action was prompted by reports of cases in which the cornea was scratched by an applicator or fingernail, introducing bacteria which caused damage to the eye.

The bacteria identified in all of the injury reports is a very common one, the FDA said, often present on the skin and readily absorbed by the cosmetics.

A notice of intended rule-making was published in yesterdays Federal Register, meaning that the agency will formally propose a rule requiring a preservative. The FDA said this will be included in a package of rules spelling out proper manufacturing practices for all cosmetics.

The notice said: "FDA has received several reports of corneal ulceration associated with the use of cosmetic mascaras containing pathogenic microorganisms.

"Without an adequate preservative system microorganisms introduced into the mascara with the applicator wand can survive and multiply inside the container. When the mascara is used again, if the microorganisms on the applicator wand come into contact with a scratched or damaged cornea, the eye may become infected."

And, the notice said, if the infection is not recognized and treated immediately, it can lead "to partial or total blindness in the injured eye."

Jewish temple attacked with high-powered rifle

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Police increased patrols yesterday at synagogues in the wake of a weekend sniping attack that killed one man and wounded another at a Jewish temple in suburban Richmond Heights.

Nonetheless, most Jewish leaders discounted a possibility the attack was a show of anti-Semitism.

"We don't think it was directed at us or to the Jewish community in general," said Rabbi Benson Skoff of the Brith Sholom Kneseth Israel Congregation.

A gunman with a highpowered rifle Saturday opened fire on a small group of people leaving a bar mitzvah at Skoff's synagogue. Gerald Gordon, 42, suburban Chesterfield was killed and William Lee Ash, 30, Akron, Ohio, was wounded.

An intensive search failed to find the sniper. Lt. Thomas H. Boulch, commander of the Major Case Squad investigating the case, said police are keeping an open mind regarding the motive.

"We don't want to close any avenue," Boulch said. "We're following up on kooks, radical groups, anti-Semitic groups, anyone."

Rabbi Mark Shook of Temple Israel in suburban Creve Coeur said many telephone callers were making a connection between the sniping and American Nazi Party activity in Florissant, a suburb 10 miles to the north of Richmond Heights.

The attack at the synagogue occurred an hour before 10 Nazis held a scheduled demonstration at the Florissant City Hall. Members of an anti-Nazi group attacked the Nazis and more than a dozen persons were injured, one of them seriously. Two persons were arrested.

Michael Allen, St. Louis Nazi leader, said he had no knowledge of the sniping.

"It may have been a sporadic act of protest," Allen said. "Maybe he the sniper, had enough pressure from the Jews and he cracked.

"I'm not cheering him or anything. He should be brought to trial and his reasons found out. If the Jew was worth killing, he, too, should have had a trial first."

Police said the sniping was well planned. The sniper fashioned a stand to hold the rifle with two large spikes driven into a telephone pole on a grassy knoll overlooking the parking lot.

Gunmen rob hotel for thousands hidden in vault

NEW YORK [UPI] — Four gunmen disguised in wigs and false mustaches walked into the luxurious Sherry Netherlands Hotel before dawn yesterday, handcuffed four employes and made off with tens of thousands of dollars in cash and gems from the hotel's vault.

No one was injured in the holdup at the Fifth Avenue hotel, which was the scene of a similar stickup in 1974 that netted some $900,000 from the safe deposit boxes containing valuables of the hotel's wealthy clientele.

The lobby of the plush hotel, which overlooks the south end of Central Park, was empty when the four men, dressed in business suits and wearing wigs and false mustaches, calmly entered about 4:30 a.m. EDT, police said.

The four heavyset suspects walked up to the desk, pulled handguns and herded night manager Robert Clancey and three other employes into a storage room, handcuffed them and left them inside.

"When a man points a gun at you, you just listen," said bellman Steve McPartland, one of those handcuffed. "I didn't have time to get scared. It happened so fast. You just blindly do what they said."

As the night security man was making his rounds on the upper floors, the bandits spent the next 45 minutes prying open more than 100 of the 554 small boxes in the vault room behind the main desk.

Hotel officials said they would not know the exact amount in gems, cash and other valuables taken until an extensive audit is completed.

We should halt diplomatic relations with the Vatican

ROME [UPI] — President Jimmy Carter's personal envoy to the Vatican says he doesn't believe the United States should establish diplomatic relations with the Holy See.

"I don't see any need for full diplomatic relations," said David Walters in an exclusive interview with UPI.

"We've established a unique means of communicating and exchanging ideas that works quite well," the 60-year-old Miami lawyer said. "We don't need all those diplomatic trappings."

Walters, the first Roman Catholic in 110 years to represent the United States at the Vatican, relaxed in a large leather armchair in his office off Rome's elegant Via Veneto and said he had just returned from his first official meeting with Pope Paul VI.

"We spent an hour and ten minutes together which was more than I expected," Walters said. "I presented my letter of introduction from President Carter and also conveyed the President's greetings for his Holiness' 80th birthday."

A native of Cleveland, Walters said he was immensely pleased with his appointment to the Hoy See, with which the United States has not had diplomatic relations since 1867.

"The Vatican and the United States have a really beautiful relationship and I can't foresee any problems cropping up," he said. "Now there aren't too many ambassadors who can say that.

"My task is very special and much easier than that of other ambassadors because it is unfettered by red tape and bureaucracy," the dignified but jovial international law expert added. "Anyway, I believe in communication, not in titles."

Walters said he plans to spend three months — October, January and April — in Rome each year.

"Of course I'll come whenever I am asked," he said, "but my work really doesn't require that much time.

"I don't have a large staff, I don't have to worry about passing out visas or bailing out American kids who get jailed for smoking marijuana."

Walter's mandate from President Carter was to open a conduit of communication for the exchange of views on international and humanitarian subjects of interest and concern to both the Vatican and the U.S. government.

Despite the diplomatic wording, the appointment touched one of America's longest-lived sensitive spots.

U.S.—Vatican relations have been a subject for debate since 1848 when the first U.S. minister to the Holy See was appointed after stormy discussion in Congress.

In 1867, Congress decided to ban the use of public funds for a Vatican envoy and there have been no U.S.—Vatican diplomatic relations since.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1939 appointed Myron C. Taylor as his personal envoy to Pope Pius XII in a bid to maintain valuable contacts during the critical war years.

Truman nominated Gen. Mark Clark as a full-fledged ambassador to the Vatican in 1952 but withdrew the nomination in the face of a furious Protestant outcry that such a move would violate the principle of church-state separation.

There was no American envoy in the Vatican for 20 years until President Richard Nixon named former diplomat Henry Cabot Lodge as his personal representative in 1970.

Carter's appointment of Walters to succeed Lodge sparked bitter criticism, particularly from the President's fellow Southern Baptists who charged that it was "in violation of the spirit and probably the letter of the first amendment to the constitution."

American Catholics were also disappointed since they had hoped Carter might move to open diplomatic relations with the Vatican is a slight on that tiny sovereign state.

"For the President to send a personal envoy to the Vatican shows a very high degree of respect," he said. "You know there are not many ambassadors who can talk to the President of the United States and who can see him on two hours notice as I can as his personal envoy."

Two men attempt to cross the Atlantic in a balloon

BAR HABOR, Maine [UPI] — After four weeks of weatherwatching and waiting, two Colorado adventurers yesterday launched their attempt to become the first men to cross the Atlantic in a free-floating balloon.

Pilot Dewey Reinhard, 47, and co-pilot Steve Stephenson, 44, both of Colorado Springs, Colo., lifted off in the 85-foot black and silver balloon dubbed "The Eagle" at 5:35 p.m. yesterday catching what a technical advisor called "a weather window."

The pair had planned a number of launchings only to have them scuttled by turns in the weather, including a hurricane. But Stephenson was confident yesterday would be the day, checking out of his motel room a little before 3 a.m.

"There's a weather window, squeezed between a low pressure system to the north and a high pressure system to the south," Jack Vaeth, a spokesmen for the $250,000 project said shortly before takeoff. "This pattern is as good as you could order it. "It's perfect. It's what we've been waiting for," he said.

Vaeth said computer projections show the balloon should remain aloft for five days and land "someplace in Ireland, but we'll accept any place over there."

Reinhard and Stephenson, their families and crews have made many friends while waiting in Bar Harbor to take off. Townspeople have given them balloon shaped floral arrangements with good luck banners, baked cakes for them and invited them to dinner.

The pair of adventurers carried an assortment of items with them, some for safety and some for peace of mind.

On board the craft is a radar beacon which will allow officials to track their progress with a National Aeronautics and Space Administration satellite.

A similar device was instrumental in locating two New Mexico balloonists who tried Atlantic crossing last month and ended up ditching off Icelend in a blizzard.

Also on board are paperback books, several pounds of red licorice, food, water, a rabbits foot, St. Christopher medal, and a reprint of a newspaper clipping heralding Charles Lindberg's solo crossing of the Atlantic.

There is also a box full of medals and notes from well wishers to be pitched into the chilly waters in stopped-up bottles that will carry the good tidings far and wide.

Reinhard, the sponsor has said "I wouldn't go if I didn't think it was safe. I love living." While Stephenson has flatly stated he is "more afraid of not making it across the Atlantic than of dying."

Five men have died trying to make a trans-Atlantic free flight balloon trip. There have been 14 unsuccessful attempts to conquer the Atlandtic by balloon since 1873.

Reinhard wore around his neck a gold medal from his wife. The inscription reads: "If I ride the morning winds to the furthest ocean, even there your will guide me, your strength will support me."

Springfield man shoots two

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — A factory worker described as "a quiet kid" who never caused trouble was charged yesterday with gunning down two foremen, killing one and critically wounding the other.

"I don't know what happened," said a worker who witnessed the rifle attack at a sprawling production area inside the American Bosch factory that straddles the Springfield-Chicopee line.

William A. Cole, 31, of Springfield, was held without bail pending arraignment Tuesday at Chicopee District Court.

He was arrested by Springfield police who rushed into the plant with attack dogs. Turned over to Chicopee authorities, Cole was charged with murder, assault with intent to commit murder and two counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

The company said Cole, a drill press operator, had worked at the factory for five years. Investigators said they could find no motive for the alleged attack.

"The only thing I understand it's supposedly job-related. Now, what precipitated something like this, we just don't know yet," said Chicopee Police Capt. Edward J. Rojowski.

Witnesses told police a gunman entered the rambling factory at noon and shot general foreman Thomas G. Coppola once in the chest. Coppola, 52, of Springfield, died an hour later at Baystate Medical Center.

The second victim, Joaquim N. Goncalves, 50, of Ludlow, underwent emergency surgery at the hospital. He suffered two small-caliber gunshot wounds and was listed in critical condition.

Goncalves was named a foreman only recently, company officials reported. Coppola was described as Cole's immediate superior.

The gunman "entered the plant right after lunch and fired a single shot at Tom Coppola, point blank," said Wallace Baker, public relations director for American Bosch, a division of AMBAC Industries, Inc.

"Then his department foreman Goncalves was aware of the situation and tried to flee. But this fella chased him and shot him twice and beat him over the head," Baker said.

"The police came very quickly and they found him standing over Goncalves."

A worker standing nearby in the shop when the shooting began called the arrested man, "a quiet kid. He never said much. Never caused no trouble." The man refused to give his name.

Man trapped in sofa bed

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI — An elderly Concord man remains hospitalized after being trapped for up to five days in a heavy folding sofa-bed.

Hospital officials said Colby was listed in serious condition yesterday suffering from cuts, bruises and malnutrition.

Colby's landlord told police something might be wrong with the retired railroad worker when he failed to pay his rent several days after the due date.

"His head, one shoulder and an arm were wedged between the springs and the iron edge of the bed," said Ed Anderson, a member of the rescue crew.

Fire Chief Clayton Higgins said it took his men 35 minutes to free the man from the bed. Police said Colby either fell into the bed while trying to open it or just stumbled into it.

No money to clean oil spills

BOSTON [AP] — If an oil tanker spilled its cargo on the beaches of Cape Cod, Massachusetts wouldn't have a dime to clean it up.

The legislature has not yet approved a plan to pay for the cleanup of an oil spill and environmental officials are getting impatient as winter and its rough ocean weather approaches.

Since April, the House Ways and Means Committee has been sitting on a bill that would create a $25 million fund to finance the cleanup of both minor and major oil spills.

The money, which would be collected by assessments on the oil companies, would also pay for damages suffered by beachfront residents, fishermen or others after an oil spill.

Now another plan has been proposed by House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, covering only large spills and placing responsibility for payment in the hands of an insurance company.

Under the new plan, the state would ask insurance companies to bid on a policy that would cover up to $15 million in clean-up costs and other expenses arising from an oil spill. The cost of the single group policy would then be divided among the oil companies.

The group insurance policy would cover individual claims only in cases where the oil company responsible for the spill was unknown. In other instances, the fisherman or property owner would have to go to court.

Environmental officials still privately support the first, more comprehensive plan, modelled after a Maine program. They concede, however, the only way to get a program through the legislature may be to support the speaker's plan.

Bakcers of the trust fund criticize the speaker's plan because it does not provide a source of ready cash.

Topsfield fair

TOPSFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Officials of the Topsfield Fair announced Monday that the all-time record attendance of 305,256 had been broken.

At 4:15, the fair's 306,000th customer passed through the turnstile, officials said, causing them to celebrate by passing out fruits, flowers and vegetables to the customers. Final attendance figures will be available Tuesday.

The 10-day fair, in its 153rd year is the oldest continuous fair in the country.

At the close of the fair Monday, Mrs. Joan Shea, a 28-year-old brunette mother of two from Andover, was crowned Mrs. Essex County. First runnerup was Mrs. Patricia Carter of Lynnfield and second runnerup was Mrs. Beverly Fabianao of Georgetown, Mass.

Handgun and assault arrest

BOSTON [AP] — A 20-year-old Boston man arrested by police guarding Mayor Kevin H. White's Beacon Hill home will be arraigned today on charges of carrying handguns and assault on a police officer.

Boston Police Dep. Supt. Anthony Leone said Michael C. Habicht will face charges of possession of two firearms — one with a silencer — and assault on a police officer in today's session of Boston Municipal Court. He said Habicht was being held on $100,000 bail pending arraignment.

Police told the Boston Herald American they doubted that Mayor White was an intended victim of the man arrested Sunday.

White's home has been guarded since a July 4 burglary there. Police were watching the mayor's Mount Vernon Street home about 3:20 a.m. Sunday when they saw a man park a car nearby.

Fifteen minutes later, a second car drove up, a man got out and walked toward the parked automobile, and the second car drove away, officials said.

Police said they thought the man walking toward the parked car was concealing something. Police said the officers identified themselves and arrested him after he started the car.

Dolphins found

WEST BREWSTER, Mass. [UPI] — Four young dolphins, rescued after getting caught in the nearby Herring River, are being coaxed back to health on a diet of herring stuffed with vitamins and antibiotics.

Officials at a commercial marine attraction, Sealand of Cape Cod, yesterday said the four rescued dolphins will need four to eight weeks of care before they will be healthy enough to return to the ocean from which they wandered.

The four mammals were rescued Saturday by rangers from the Cape Cod National Seashore and by Sealand officials after they became stranded about two miles up the Herring River in Wellfleet, Mass.

Four other dolphins stranded in the same water died of cuts from shells in the oyster beds where they were stuck, Sealand spokesman Robert Fish said.

Zamora's trial is going on

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — The psychologist who would have been the "heart" of Ronny Zamora's "television intoxication" defense said Monday TV violence can cause some children to imitate what they see.

Dr. Margaret Hanratty Thomas, an associate professor of psychology at Florida Technological University, said studies have shown that "exposure to television violence can cause some children to imitate what they see.

"It certainly seems likely that television violence could cause aggressive behavior on the part of children," Ms. Thomas said.

"Many, many studies do show a trend for people who watch a lot of violent material on television also to be more aggressive in real life," she said. "When you couple that with experimental evidence, it kind of lends more credence to television causing aggressive behavior."

Although she had not interviewed Zamora, Ms. Thomas had been prepared to testify about the general effects of television violence last week in the 15-year-old boy's Miami murder trial.

But Judge Paul Baker refused to let her testify because he limited testimony to television's effect on Zamora, not on all children.

Defense attorney Ellis Rubin, who called Ms. Thomas the "heart of my defense," sought to prove Zamora was under the influence of "involuntary subliminal television intoxication" and momentarily insane when he killed an elderly neighbor.

Zamora was convicted of first degree murder, robbery, burglary and possession of firearms and will be sentenced Nov. 7. Rubin, who will appeal, said Baker's refusal to let Ms. Thomas testify was the "death blow" to his case.

Ms. Thomas said "hundreds and hundreds" of studies have led to similar conclusions — that it is likely television can cause aggressive behavior in children.

"When you have so many different studies done by so many different people, it seems to me to be very clear that excessive violence on television can have a harmful effect and is something we should really be worried about," she said.

Women still have lower paying jobs than men do

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. [UPI] — A university professor says women would still have lower level and lower paying jobs than men even if there were no job discrimination because of the jobs they pick.

Dr. Solomon W. Polachek, an economics professor at the University of North Carolina, said his research indicates women are in the lower end of the economic scale because they tend not to go into the labor force on a fulltime basis. They choose an occupation according to how much time they expect to spend working.

However, Polachek, in a recent interview, said men typically enter the labor force after school and remain there until retirement. His statistics show only 17 per cent of all women, married and single and between ages 30 and 44, had worked almost every year since leaving school.

"The average married woman takes about 10 years off to raise children," Polachek said, "thereby losing about one-fourth to one-third of her working life."

During the years a woman is not working, her skills depreciate, he said, so when she returns to work, her real wage not her actual salary, but her wages adjusted for cost of living is lower than it was before she quit work. This depreciation varies according to occupation with losses the greatest in highly skilled and professional jobs.

Given two equally qualified people of opposite sex applying for the same job, Polachek said, the man may be selected because if the woman has a child she will likely quit work to care for it. If her husband is transferred, the woman is also likely to quit to move with him.

"If women were to have full commitment to the labor force, the number of women professionals would increase by 35 per cent, the number of women in managerial professions would more than double, and women in unskilled occupations would decrease by more than 60 per cent."

Study says that non-whites are less healthy than whites

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A Congressional Budget Office study reported yesterday non-white persons generally are less healthy than whites.

"The health of non-whites is not as good as that of whites, yet non-whites get less — and possibly less effective — health care than whites do," the study said.

"Despite considerable progress in narrowing the health gap between white and non-white Americans in the last 20 years, substantial differences persist."

Non-whites include blacks, American Indians and Orientals. The term whites in the study applies to Caucasians and persons of Hispanic heritage.

Non-whites experience nearly 50 per cent more bed disability days, 70 per cent higher infant mortality and a life expectancy six years shorter than that of whites, the study said.

White persons make about 10 per cent more visits to doctors than non-whites.

Although the proportions of whites and non-whites hospitalized each year varies little, non-whites tend to remain in the hospital longer because they are sicker, particularly poor non-whites, it said.

The study, Health Differentials Between White and Non-white Americans, is part of a series of CBO studies on racial inequalities.

CBO's study was based on published and unpublished data about various health care indicators and their relationship to race.

It was found, for instance, a non-white is 60 per cent more likely to die of flu or pneumonia and five times as likely to die of tuberculosis, the latter a supposedly "conquered" disease with causes related to poverty.

The non-white male or female is nearly twice as likely to die of cirrhosis of the liver and more than seven times as likely to be a victim of homicide, both of which indicate social or psychological problems, the study said.

Screenplay to be written for documentary on K. Silkwood

Scriptwriter Andrew Laskos has been commissioned to write the screenplay for an upcoming documentary drama on the Karen Silkwood case.

The documentary, to be produced by Carand Productions filmmaker Buzz Hirsch, will examine the events which led up to the death of the plutonium fuel worker. Silkwood died suddenly in a car accident years ago as she drove to meet a reporter and union officials over alleged safety violations at the Kerr-McGee atomic fuel plant in Crescent, Oklahoma. Some investigations have alleged she was murdered.

Hirsch won a major First Amendment victory last month when the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver ruled that Hirsch did not have to turn over to Kerr-McGee lawyers sources of confidential information used in gathering material on the case for the movie.

Kerr-McGee sought Hirsch's notes, tape recordings, and research results as part of its defense in a suit brought by Silkwood's family against the company.

The Denver Court of Appeals ruled First Amendment privileges protecting confidential sources were not limited to traditional journalists, but applied also to filmmakers and others gathering information to be disseminated to the public.

Silkwood's family has granted Hirsch exclusive rights to her story.

Eclipse visible to many people

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — A total eclipse of the sun will be visible Wednesday from some points in the Pacific and in South America when the Moon passes between Earth and the Sun.

It will appear as a partial eclipse to persons in Southern California, Ron Oriti, a Griffith Park Observatory astronomer said, with 47 per cent of the Sun covered at its maximum.

The total eclipse will be visible in some portions of Colombia and Venezuela and along a narrow band of the Earth, mostly through the Pacific Ocean.

It will begin in Southern California at 11:58 a.m. PDT and end at 2:30 p.m.

Although the Sun is 400 times larger than the Moon, the Moon appears in a total eclipse to cover the whole suface of the Sun because the Sun is 400 times further away, Oriti said.

Total eclipses occur about once every year or two at some place in the world, he said.

Photos of earth and moon seen together for first time

PASADENA, Calif. [UPI] — The first photos of the earth and moon together have been transmitted across nearly 19 million miles of space from Voyager 1 to Jet Propulsion Laboratory, it was announced yesterday.

A JPL spokesman said the six frames, which were sent over the weekend and early yesterday, are undergoing image-processing in a computer and it's not immediately known when the photos will be released.

Voyager 1 and its sister ship, Voyager 2, were headed for Jupiter and the outer planets of the Solar System.

The photos were taken shortly after the Sept. 5 launch of the instrument-packed space probe and stored in a computer.

Two more pictures of the Earth and its satellite remained stored in the spacecraft's computer. They were to be transmitted back to Earth in November.

Translating the images from the radio signals to photos "is a rather agonizing process," Don Bane of JPL said.

"The pictures were taken so they could be reconstructed in color," he said.

He said Earth and the Moon show up small in the photos but some detail of the Earth can be seen.

Vt. man shoots family

RUTLAND, Vt. [AP] — Police say a woman and her daughter suffered "multiple gunshot wounds" here yesterday and that they later used tear gas to force the woman's husband out of a house.

About 15 policemen surrounded a Cherry Street residence after the shooting incident on Summer Street, police said.

A man identified as Richard Mecier, 49, was forced out of the house by tear gas after he refused to surrender, police said. Neither Mecier nor police were injured, police said.

Mecier was taken to Rutland County Correctional Center and was being held there, police said.

The shooting victims were identified by police as Mecier's sife, 45-year-old Delores, and their 19-year-old daughter, Kimberly.

Police said the women suffered "multiple gunshot wounds" and were in stable condition at Rutland Hospital.

Columbus statue immobile

WASHINGTON [AP] — After decorating the East Front of the Capitol for 114 years, a marble Christopher Columbus lies in exile 12 miles away, unwept and unsung.

Executed by Luigi Persico, "The Discovery" portrays Columbus holding aloft a symbolic globe, somewhat like a bowler poised to heave one down the alley. A scantily clad Indian maiden, says an official description, "cowers with surprise and awe" at his feet.

And 19 years after the controversial statue of the famous explorer was removed from the East Front steps, the government still hasn't decided what to do with it.

The statue caused a furor when it was unveiled in 1844.

"Is Columbus getting ready to play a game of ninepins?" demanded Sen. Charles Sumner.

And the furor sputtered for 114 more years.

Indian groups protested the girl's near-nudity, critics derided the statue's artistic merit, and jokesters had a field day with the tableaux conceived by the Italian sculptor.

The invention of basketball in the 1890's dealt a further blow. There was an inevitable comparison between Persico's depiction of Columbus and a referee about to toss up the ball for a jumpoff.

Moshe Dayan contradicts himself concerning peace talks

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan yesterday restated Israel's opposition to letting the "terrorist" Palestine Liberation Organization take part in Middle East peace talks, but minutes later left the door ajar for diplomatic maneuvering that might admit the PLO.

Dayan told reporters, and repeated to the full U.N. General Assembly six hours later, that Israel has no intention of agreeing to an independent state of Palestine — a "PLO mini-state" that "would be a base for attempts to destroy Israel."

The Israeli military hero sharply rejected any participation by the PLO — "a terrorist organization whose record is one of deliberate and indiscriminate atrocities" — at Geneva.

That position again appeared to put him in a position directly opposite his Syrian and Egyptian counterparts, who insist on PLO participation in Geneva.

But Dayan left open what appeared to be room for maneuvering. Asked whether credentials of Palestinians at peace talks would be closely checked for PLO membership, he replied, "I don't think so."

Without replying directly to the question, Dayan added, "as long as the Palestinian representatives are living in the Gaza Strip or the West Bank and they say they represent the people of Gaza or the West Bank, they would be acceptable to us."

This left open the possibility of at least low-level PLO representation at the opening of Geneva talks.

The important point, Dayan said, is that whatever Palestinian representation is involved must come from Gaza or the West Bank, not from outside such as Jordan or Syria.

Dayan said flatly that if Arab nations insist on PLO representation at Geneva, "there will be no Geneva."

An appeal for ban on weapons at Belgrade security review

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia [UPI] — The Soviet Union appealed at the Belgrade security review conference yesterday for a ban on weapons which lower the nuclear threshold — a clear reference to the neutron bomb.

In his only reference to human rights, Soviet ambassador Yuli Vorontsov was quoted as saying, "Can we seriously speak of the rights of man and leave man exposed to the effect of such weapons?"

Vorontsov's appeal came as NATO defense ministers met across the Adriatic in Bari, Italy, for discussion of nuclear strategy including potential deployment of the neutron bomb and cruise missile.

The final decision on whether to produce and deploy the neutron bomb, which kills with radiation but causes relatively little property damage, depends on President Carter. NATO military commanders see the bomb as a way of offsetting the Soviet bloc's advantage in tanks, since radiation can easily pass through armor.

Vorontsov's 43-minute speech came during a close plenary session of the conference reviewing the results of the 1975 Helsinki final act of the European conference on peace and security.

Conference sources said two Western nations, France and the Netherlands, criticized alleged Soviet human rights violations in even stronger terms than they had in their public opening statements last week.

Vorontsov accused NATO countries of constantly building up their forces and increasing military appropriations — a reference to the agreement by the 15 Western allies to increase annual defense spending by 3 per cent in real terms.

Vorontsov said the Warsaw Pact had not increased its forces in central Europe, and asked why NATO would not agree to a reduction or freeze on troop strengths.

Pres. of bank reports Lance's innocence concerning deposits

ATLANTA [UPI] — The president of the National Bank of Georgia, once headed by former budget director Bert Lance, said yesterday Lance had nothing to do with more than $1 million in federal bankruptcy deposits last spring.

Robert Guyton issued a statement following published reports Sunday that the bank had $1,366,000 in federal funds in savings accounts as of March 31.

Newsday, a Long Island, N.Y. newspaper, said much of the money was deposited after Lance became budget director in January.

The newspaper said all other national banks in Georgia had a total of $39,000 in federal funds in similar accounts at the time.

However, Guyton said the money was deposited by trustees in bankruptcy cases, adding, "Bert Lance had nothing to do with it."

"This is not federal money," he said. "It's not taxpayers' money. It's not even under the control of the federal bankruptcy court."

The money, he said, comes from the sale of assets of bankrupt businesses. It is held in bank accounts until it is divided among creditors.

"We solicit the deposits from attorneys who handle bankruptcy cases for the trustees," Guyston said.

Lance, contacted outside his church in Calhoun, Ga., Sunday, denied having anything to do with obtaining deposits for his former bank while he served as budget director.

Ruth Elder, first woman who tried to fly Atlantic, dies

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Ruth Elder, who tried unsuccessfully to follow up Charles Lindbergh's historic flight by becoming the first woman to fly the Atlantic 50 years ago this week, died Sunday in her apartment at the age of 74.

Although her flight, five months after Lindbergh's solo transatlantic journey, ended when she was forced down in rough seas short of her goal, she became a heroine in the United States and Europe, eventually earning a fortune from movies and personal appearances.

She took off from New York in a yellow monoplane called "The American Girl" Oct. 11, 1927, with a co-pilot, George Haldeman. But mechanical trouble forced their plane down into the Atlantic, 360 miles from the Azores, where a ship picked them up.

Miss Elder had arrived in New York that Year from Anniston, Ala., proclaiming she would be the first woman to fly to Paris.

She and Haldeman were 36 hours out over the Atlantic when their oil pressure dropped dangerously low. They sighted a tanker below and dropped a message asking "How far to land?"

Crewmen aboard the Dutch tanker painted an answer on the deck. Miss Elder and Haldeman, knowing they could not make it to the Azores, about 1,000 miles from Europe, landed in the ocean and were picked up by the ship.

Despite her failure, she received a tumultuous welcome in Paris and was greeted home by a parade in New York. She later earned a reported $250,000 from films and other appearances.

A native of Anniston, she was married six times. Her last husband, Ralph King, a retired Hollywood camerman, was with her when she died. She had no children.

King said there would be no funeral services and that her body would be cremated.

More than 1,000 persons were arrested in India

NEW DELHI, India [UPI] — Police arrested more than 1,000 persons demonstrating against the arrest of former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on corruption charges, the national news agency Samachar reported yesterday.

Some 900 members of Mrs. Gandhi's Congress party were arrested in her home state of Uttar Pradesh in northern India during protests arranged by the party on what it called an "anti-repression day" Sunday.

In Calcutta, police fired tear gas to disperse Congress party demonstrators who tried to break through police lines and storm state government offices. Police said the tear gas firing following incidents of stone throwing. No injuries were reported.

Samachar reported the arrest figures increasing with later information yesterday, but gave no total except to say it was more than 1,000.

Mrs. Gandhi was arrested on two charges of official corruption while prime minister.

'The Bakke decision— is it justified?

By JOHN YONG

The Bakke Decision is a recent California Supreme Court ruling that threatens to eliminate Special Admissions, Affirmative Action and other related programs on the campuses, communities and workplaces across the country.

In 1973-74, Allan Bakke, a white engineer in his mid-30's, applied to the University of California at Davis Medical School. Both times he was rejected. Later, with the help of the UC-Davis Administration itself, he filed suit against the special admissions program. Bakke charged that he was the victim of reverse discrimination, that he was rejected because he was white, and that other "less qualified" Third World (Black, Asian, Chicano, Native American) students were admitted into the school through the special admissions program. A Newsweek article on the issue stated that the minority students had cums lower than Bakke's (3.5) but forgot to mention that 34 other white students who were admitted also had lower cums than Bakke.

When people say that these Third World students are less qualified, we have to look at who is making up the qualifications. Are cumulative averages and entrance exams objective criteria by which people are judged without regard to their color or background? Studies have conclusively shown that these criteria are culturally biased. A person from a low socioeconomic background would score poorly on a test designed strictly from a white ethnocentric perspective. This is not unreasonable, because the person's experience is so different from that of your "average American kid." Conversely, there was a black psychologist who designed a test from ghetto experience and found that white people who took this test received signigicantly lower scores than blacks.

Many white people feel threatened by these special programs feeling that these quotas restrict their chances of getting into professional schools. But before the special programs almost all medical schools were exclusively white. In the first year the medical school was open (1970), UC-Davis had an enrollment of one Third World member among 100 students. The argument of the Third World is then that white people weren't happy with a quota of 84, they now want the whole 100. The United States Justice Department said in its brief that it favors affirmative action, but is opposed to quotas. Let's look at what the consequences of that will be by reviewing past statistics.

Although the Association of American Medical Colleges set a goal of 12 per cent first year minority admissions by 1975, in 1976 medical schools enrolled only 6.9 per cent minority students. It is a fact that even with the expansion of various slots in different medical schools less and less of these slots are filled with minority students. In California, 25 per cent of the population are minorities; one per cent of the lawyers are minorities. The ratio of white doctors to the white population in the United States is about one to 700. The ratio of minority doctors to minority populations is as follows: Black - one to 3,800; Native American - one to 20,000; Latino - one to 30,000; Asian- unknown. Doesn't it seem a little unfair to you?

Various organizations have charged that special programs amount to favoritism. They use the word favoritism as if they have never heard of the word before. UC-Davis has a private admissions program for the sons and daughters of influential California (politicians, or people who have made a contribution of $50,000 or more). Dr. C. John Tupper, the school's dean, has justified this stating that UC-Davis needs political and financial support. You've heard of athletes being accepted with a special program. So this is nothing new.

The question of reverse discrimination is indeed a critical one. Minorities have been the victims of racist and sexist oppression for hundreds of years. To say now that these programs discriminate is to say that there has been no prior oppression of Third World people. Reverse discrimination is under the premise that we are all equal and that people should get ahead on their own merits. Obviously, this is not the case in this society. Look at the 50 per cent unemployment rate among Black youths, look at the difference in pay scales between white men, white women and the Third World people. We do not get the same pay for the same work. Therefore we can see that this is not and never has been an equal society.

What we ask for is support to defeat Bakke's argument; not only because it would take back all the militant gains won in the 60's but also because it would make professional schools a home for the rich and powerful. White students must realize that it is advantageous to work with Third World students to promote greater diversity in every campus and workplace.

Third World Student Affairs has been working on this issue. The two major events we have organized are the Bakke Debate on Oct. 11 and a big demonstration on Oct. 15. If you feel that this is a relevant issue and want to hear from two different sides (pro and con) please come to The Bakke Debate tonight at 8:00 in Mahar Auditorium.

Female expression

By JAMES LEWIS, JR.

I really enjoyed reading Lisa Melilli's article of last Monday, and hope she continues to write her feelings about women's liberation.

I want to say I think its very important for women to express their feelings. I don't believe women should hide themselves in feminine ego.

When women don't express themselves, this leaves men the job of guessing what the woman is thinking. More often than not the man will misperceive the woman's feelings and make mistakes. One reason men do not understand or know women is because women's egos will not allow them to express their thoughts, and this provides for the misconceptions that occur in relationships. The male ego (pride, selfishness, superiority) will make him think that he provoked everything in the relationship, and women should not allow men to think like this. This is another reason men don't understand women.

I cannot trust a women who will not let me know what she thinks about me. I try naturally to respect the person a woman may be, but if I don't get some clear indication about what's happening, then I might feel forced to assume the prerogatives of the relation and this is sexist, and probably will end up in insulting the woman. How can a man know what's happening with a woman unless she tells him? The hints, suggestions and smiles will not provide a realistic approach to the problem.

I also feel that women have to find the power within themselves to find a place of effective being in this society. The solution to the oppression of women lies more with woman gaining their own power and deciding their own relation than with men giving them power. Power is partially the result of an increased counsciousness, and it is clearer now more than ever before that the power necessary to throw off this oppression lies in the consciousness movement of women. Racism will not dissolve unless sexism dissolves, and women are going to have to be the ones to desolve Sexism. I am sick of the lie of this society suggested for Third World People and Women. I am extremely disgusted with the movement of women's consciousness. I would like to see women define themselves distinctly and clearly so that I can be free.

The politics of 'objectivity'

John Fisher, Economic Development Coordinator for the Student Senate, has a story he likes to tell his friends. It's about his days as a writer for Modern Plastics. (Yes, this is a true story.)

John was assigned to do a story on the use of plastics in the housing industry, complete with projection figures and expected percentage of increases. When he asked his editor how the hell he was going to come up with the figures, the editor replied, "Do what I do. Go out to lunch and have a few martinis, come back to the office and make them up."

He dutifully obliged the editor, made up the figures, and submitted the article, which was later published.

A few months later he came across an HUD publication on noneother than the use of plastics in the housing industry. He checked the accuracy of his figures, and to his amazement, they matched exactly.

There was an asterisk beside the figures which referred to a footnote at the bottom of the page. It read, "See John Fisher, Modern Plastics, May....."

Tom Hayden also had a good story when he spoke here last month. It seems that portions of Hayden's Port Huron Statement (the document which virtually established the SDS) were used by former President Nixon to justify his revenue sharing program.

Hayden didn't say which passages Nixon used. I doubt it was the part about the American Democratic system being "apathetic, and manipulated rather than 'of, by, and for the people'."

One must consider the source of information today, sometimes even more than the information itself. Hence there is a new responsibility placed on the receivers of information: reader beware.

Information, its accessibility and dissemination, is fast becoming a major national issue. While the technology of communications "progresses" with astounding speed, the actual information we receive from the government and the media is subject to intense but subtle political and social manipulation.

b.j. roche

The incestuous nature of the newspaper business, for example, makes for a closed circle of information, despite how "liberal" or "objective" a paper may be considered. In his book, The Boys on the Bus, Tim Crouse explained the press hierarchy in its coverage of the '72 election. Certain "heavies" like R.W. Apple, then of the New York Times, dominated the copy published by the election correspondents. There was also a hesitancy among editors of smaller papers to publish certain stories unless the Times had published the stories first, regardless of accuracy. Crouse even implies that had these unwritten rules of the journalism trade not existed, the election might have had a different outcome.

More often, news biases occur in what is not printed, or where a story is placed in the paper. The Collegian tips its hand in a subtle manner when it places a story on Chancellor Bromery's negative opinion of a student union on the front page, while a story on Tom Hayden's speech endorsing the idea takes page three.

The press is not the only information source for which we should maintain a healthy skepticism. Government figures and reports (as John Fisher's story pointed out) are often subject to manipulation.

Due to the great American respect for numbers, it is hard to think that they could lie (or at least not tell the whole truth). But the elitism of information exists here as well. Examine a Federal Energy Administration report on oil supplies, for example, and the odds are that the figures will be supplied by oil companies. After all, who else has done as much research into oil supplies at Exxon?

A drop in the percentage of unemployment is hailed as an economic breakthrough by the President. But there is no explanation that these figures reflect only those unemployed who are actively seeking jobs. The unemployment rate does not account for those who have dropped off the unemployment rolls, or who, in frustration, just quit looking for work altogether.

There is no real defense against these limits of information except to be aware that they exist. Critical reading (and viewing) is something we learn too late in life, and the reverence with which we hold Newsweek, the New York Times or Karl Marx is frightening. Every author has a perceived audience as well as a message he or she wishes to convey. And if you think you're not the target, think again.

B.J. Roche's column appears every other Tuesday in the Collegian.

Reorganizing student government a must

Unfortunately, I did not have the opportunity to read Jim Paulin's column last Thursday while shit-faced. Needless to say, I did wade through the extensive garble, and came to the conclusion that the notorious "asshole" made some good points; whether he knew it or not, of course, is not at question.

You see, Mr. Paulin is partially right: Most of what goes on in the Student Senate, short of discussion of dismantling it, is frighteningly obsolete. While several of the active senators are administration lackies, or defacto administration agents, Paulin is wrong to imply that the other senators naturally sieze the opportunity to present themselves as he does.

I'd venture to say that the majority of the people presently active in the senate are making a unique personal sacrifice. Not a school work — senate meeting trade-off. Not an ethical sacrifice in an effort to achieve the luminous summits of stardom so tempting in the political arena, but a sacrifice which lies in the psychic dungeons of the politically self-conscious. That's to say, many of the senators elected in the last election have no intention of meeting in the Campus Center from seven to ten every Wednesday night for the rest of the year. Many of them approach the limits of psychosis when talk of parlimentary procedure emerges, and argument over the correct way to make a motion become the prime entree of the night. Many others nearly vomit at the thought of dealing with senators who claim that things like racism and sexism are merely "a state of mind". Most importantly, all are sick of sitting around debating and passing motions which have no real impact on the campus community, or are found to lie ultimately within the authority of the administration. Each of them have their own individual gripes, some common, some not. Something definitely unites them, however: senate reorganization.

Senate reorganization is a bureaucratic way of saying "dismantle the senate and replace it with something effective"; a vehicle through which students can voice their disenchantment together and be heard; through which they can be seen and responded to as a viable, intelligent, and unified force, to be reckoned with, not ignored.

Mr. Paulin made note of the "union slate" of which he wanted so desperately to be a part. He did not say why, however. He made it appear as though the 22 commuters elected (i.e. the whole slate) were interested in entering into the same petty political relationships senators of the past have thrived on to the point of orgasmic display. It's not true. This group, and senators elected from dorms on a union platform, have a very different set of interests. They recognize that: (1) for too long student government at UMass has not been responsive to the needs of the student body as a whole, (2) as an organization, it is often bogged down by the intricacies of its own procedure, (3) as a movement, it lacks active participation from its own constituency at basic levels of University life — living and learning, (4) as a decision-making body, it lacks ultimate authority over most of the subjects it debates, so that it is not really a government in any concrete sense of the word, and (5) most importantly, as Paulin correctly summarizes, it is perceived — and rightly so — as ineffective in advocating student rights and interests within the University. Simultaneously, those interested in effecting meaningful change have few avenues by which to proceed.

The senators elected on a platform of unionization are interested in voting the senate away, abolishing it, and beginning to organize students in dorms and departments over issues of more immediate concern than putting someone on an administration committee, on which students have little opportunity to make constructive change.

Every one of the ten members of the anti-union RSO group formed last week was wrong, according to many students, in stating that students can't look out for themselves. Hundreds are in a rage, saying "to hell" with that comment. "If we don't, who will?" Surely, the administration must be last on the list of potential contenders for that honorable position.

So, this year's senate should prove to be a different experience. We still have administration "echoes" in the senate. We'll always have them, however, as long as our governance structure is the one the administration "grants" us, and as long as a student's price is low enough. We'll always have them as long as students conceive of themselves as unable to change things. The main objective of this year's senate is to change things — first the senate, then the position students find themselves in this community of rules made for administrators and trustees, and layers of bureaucracy which impede our organization, and our ability to find the ultimate layer of authority.

Tom Hayden said he didn't know whether student unionization would be "accomplished" this year at UMass, but he had faith that it would be done. The senate voted last week to call this "The Year of the Union". Can the senate do it? I don't think so.

But the student body can.

Housing Office no help

To the Editor:

For the first eleven days of the semester I was a resident of the fourth floor of the Campus Center Hotel. Now that the housing crisis of the beginning of the semester is near its end [less than 10 students remain in the Hotel] it is time to look at how the university has handled the situation.

The purpose of this letter is not to lay blame on any group for causing the housing pinch, but rather to question the behavior of one branch of the administration for the way they handled the situation after it occurred.

Before I do this, I think I should be fair to all sides and offer praise to those groups that did their best to help make those first weeks a lot easier. Among those giving a helping hand were; the Legal Services office, the CC Hotel staff, the local media, the Student Affairs office, and hundreds of inconvenienced UMass students.

However, the one group from whom we needed the support and did not get it was the Housing Office, whose spokespeople mishandled their role in this predicament. Among their offenses were remarks such as "do what we tell you, or else find a place off campus or drop out of school." Is this any way for an official of the university to talk?

The spokespeople also constantly lied to the residents of the hotel. When questioned about how long we would be without a room, instead of telling us they honestly did not know, they gave us false hopes that we would be out the next day or the day after.

The final reason that I am so upset at their inept handling of the job is that when I finally received word that I would be moving to Field House, I questioned them on whether this was a permanent location and they assured me it was. My present roommate, who spent the same time in the CC as I did, was told the same. Now, after living in my room for four weeks I have been told bluntly by two R.A.'s in Field that I have to get out of my room. When I informed them I was told by housing that the room was permanent, they responded there was nothing they could do about that.

A gallant effort by my floormates to keep me and my roommate where we are is now in process. However, I will probably have to move again anyway. And who is to say that this is the last time I will be forced to move this semester?

I doubt that housing can do anything at this time to correct the damage that has already been done. However, I believe they can prevent any further mistakes from occurring. Also, I believe they should come forward and make a public statement apologizing for their poor handling of the situation and a solemn promise that in the future they will act the way representatives of a great university should act.

RSO funding legitimate

To the Editor:

In the September 28 edition of the Collegian, Steven N. Mathieu wrote an article stating that some student organizations funded by RSO are not important to the well-being and survival of different student communities.

Since we, as members of the Third World, have been referred to, we have the right to respond and we want to do so to clarify possible doubts and misconceptions.

In this regard, we want to mention that the Bilingual Collegiate Program [BCP], as an educational and administrative office, has been dealing with issues such as personal counseling, tutoring, academic counseling and student recruiting, vital services for the "latino-americanos" and bilingual students. The BCP is a serious and responsible organization that has aided bilingual students in coping successfully with the social and intellectual life of this campus. The growing demands on this program necessitate even more funds to improve its vital services. At this point, we want to clarify that BCP and AHORA are independent but complementary organizations, and that the BCP will respond to Mathieu's article independently.

AHORA was founded by a small group of Latin American students several years ago, and is defined as an educational, sociocultural organization, whose main objective consists of meeting the needs of the Spanish-speaking students on this campus, who, for obvious reasons, are not able to participate in many of the activities sponsored by other RSO organizations.

From AHORA emerged the BCP leaving AHORA with the sole responsibility of organizing important activities such as educational conferences and socio-cultural activities. Since the formation of the BCP in 1974, the hispanic student population has increased from 50 to over 400 students.

In conclusion, we believe that the article published by the Collegian emerges from ignorance about AHORA and other Third World programs. We would like to extend an invitation to Steven N. Mathieu to discuss services other than AHORA or BCP that are offered to the Latin American community by UMass. We want to remind you that "latino-americanos" are economically producing for the state of Massachusetts while enduring low wages and poor living conditions, and that up to this date our demands have been minimal in comparison to the growing social demands of the non-Third World North American majority. Finally, we want to state that racism is historically a decaying ideology, but still sufficiently institutionalized to encourage the paradoxical union of racists and well meaning but ignorant North Americans. Racist thought, proliferated and promulgated by a small but surprisingly dominant group, must be stopped by everyone, including the nonracist majority.

To the Editor:

This letter is addressed to the students responsible for marking up and tearing down the posters we used in advertising the first meeting of the Lovers of Zion.

We are a Zionist group and being Zionists we are automatically controversial. We welcome controversy and discussions. However we don't welcome the tearing down or the marking up of our posters. We have a right to advertise ourselves and our meetings and we look upon the destruction of our posters as the work of immature vandals with nothing better to do.

If you want to discuss Zionism with us we will. So let's set up a time and place to have an informal meeting. You may call the Hillel office or call me at 546-6564.

Caught in a trap of words

To the Editor:

It hurts me to read the Collegian. We have so far to go. I know my sympathies and you might know them also as sometimes they are echoed in your words. But I think that your words lie and secretly puncture what it is that you wish that you were talking about.

I could call it politics and say, "to hell with it," which is what I suspect the majority of the people do, but it hurts me deeper than that. So here I try to fight it with your own social tools — lying words.

My love-interest has many possible universes in its domain. But in practice it has been pretty much restricted to my universe. So I won't talk about Kent State, abortion or racism because I have travelled along a certain lucky path in which I have been shelted from the need to be concerned with them directly. Having had such luck might lead someone to characterize or categorize me as a WASP male oppressor, but I am what I am. The issues which concerns me now is feminism as presented in the Collegian by Fifi Ball and Lisa Melilli in recent editorials.

I'd call them both liars and show them when and where I thought they were lying if I thought that would change anything. As it is it would probably seem like nitpicking and thereby antagonize the ones I am trying to communicate with. So instead I'll present an alternative perspective.

In real life day to day experience I have to cope with sexism all the time. The emotional capabilities which I feel that I have a right to are constantly being constricted and smashed. In particular by the sex and social attitudes that I encounter among both my male and female peers and in general by the social structures that give birth to these attitudes. These social structures have evolved with man and his technology. But their justification, when questioned, has always been words. Words of good and evil, of superiority and inferiority, of justice and injustice, of social imperitives, and of life and death. These words have lost some of their reality for me, because of their arbitrary, abstract and unreal nature, but their aftertaste overwhelms me with pain and laughter.

When you are using some of these words to defend or attack some other words you have been caught in a trap. A trap that creates other traps. A trap of unreality. You have added to and continued the very structure you hope to change.

The alternative is difficult and a path that is not obvious. Think around the structure until you have achieved an evolutionary and contextual understanding of the problem, in its relationship to the structure. Then the structure will disappear and human individuals can appear.

It is difficult because to achieve such an understanding of a problem of conflict requires a truce of understanding with your own head. Those of us who have been lucky enough to try, know how tenuous and difficult such a truce can be. It is worth the effort because self appreciation, by its nature, allows appreciation of others, which allows the love to flow free. That's what I think it's all about.

'Summit' proposal not just SOP's

To the Editor:

The residents of Butterfield house do the campus community a valuable service in their Friday letter to the Collegian. They point out that the specific unionization plan currently popular with many students in the SGA — the "union summit report" — is only one possible proposal about the shape of student unionization.

However, the same letter incorrectly attributes this proposal to the Student Organizing Project [SOP].

Some student and professional staff employed by the SOP helped develop the "summit" proposal. So did staff from the Legal Services Office, the Student Senate, and the Student Center for Educational Research ... to name only some of the SGA projects involved.

The SOP played no special role in sponsoring the proposal. In fact, the SOP Board has no policy advocating this particular approach to unionization over others.

After all, the decision about which union plan to implement has yet to be made by the Student Senate, though the time for that decision is fast approaching.

I for one hope that when the time comes, all of the options will be carefully studied. I also hope that the union councils will be closely consulted throughout the process.

Adam Auster

Selectmen drawing termed sexist

To the Editor:

I was struck — and appalled — by your drawing [10-4-77] representing the Amherst Board of Selectmen. It is always disconcerting to see publications fall into the sexist trap of depicting all such boards as 100 per cent male, but it is unforgivable when the actual state of affairs is so different.

I want to call to your attention the fact that two of the five members of the Amherst Board of Selectmen are women.

★ Telephone Co. blasts consumer proposal

telephone users "certainly could use much more representation."

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst this week told the Collegian the DPU is bogged down with work and could use more resources.

Collins said he endorses the TELCAG proposal because of its "potential to offer consumers a continuity of ongoing research capabilities and people."

Funding the Key

While MassPIRG attorney Rider was slightly offended by NET's use of the word "scheme" to describe TELCAG's funding idea, he did acknowledge the voluntary check-off concept as the "key to the proposal."

"Consumer groups are paralyzed by lack of resources. By using the phone company's billing system we can disseminate consumer information as well as solicit contributions," said Rider.

According to Collins, it was precisely the same funding mechanism which kept a similar bill he sponsored from ever getting out of its House-appointed committee.

Rider said he also feels the TELCAG proposal will lead to tighter budgetary control of consumer's monies.

"TELCAG is a new way of raising money and leads to direct pocketbook control over consumer advocacy. Consumers would lose budgetary control of the funds if they (the funds) were raised through the legislature in the form of higher taxes," said Rider.

NET objects to TELCAG's system of funding. According to the press release, implementation of the check-off system through the phone company's billing system" would entail serious administrative problems for consumers as well as the company."

A clause in the TELCAG proposal states "the telephone company will be fully reimbursed by TELCAG for any additional expenses it incurs because of the TELCAG donations account and mailings."

Despite this clause, NET cited in a Christian Science Monitor article "possible problems in reprogramming computers, or keeping track of TELCAG funds on bills that are either under or overpaid, and of training bill clerks to handle TELCAG finances."

Initiative Petition

"Practically speaking," said Rep. Collins, "the TELCAG proposal will have a difficult time in the legislature if it runs into the same opposition similar bills had."

According to MassPIRG spokesperson Karen Meenan, PIRG also expects the bill to have a difficult time in the legislature. To counter this problem, PIRG is using the initiative petition process as a "back-up approach".

An initiative petition requires 57,000 signatures. Once the signatures are certified by the attorney general, the petition mandates a vote on the proposal in the legislature where it is enacted as law or placed as a referendum question on the November, 1978 ballot.

"The reason you go with the initiative petition" said Rider, "is because the legislature is unresponsive to the need for reform."

Rider claimed the reason a bill to form RUCAG (Residential Utility Consumer Action Group) never got out of a house committee was due to tremendous lobby pressures applied by the electric and phone companies.

According to Rider, NET may decide to strike a compromise in the legislature instead of letting the people accept it as it stands in a referendum vote.

Meenan said she anticipates MassPIRG will be able to collect the 57,000 signatures needed to certify the initiative petition.

Should TELCAG go before the people, Meenan said she is confident the people of Massachusetts will recognize the need for it.

"So far, the issues presented by the telephone company are pretty weak. There's no real job issue and no legitimate revenue issue," Meenan said.

A representative of NET said if TELCAG should go before the people it would become a "pocketbook issue."

★ Femininity should not be synonomous with figure

age, breast cancer will no longer be the leading cause of death of women in that age group.

Here is some information about various aspects of breast care. The facts and statistics were taken from Our Bodies, Ourselves (Boston Women's Health Book Collective, Simon and Schuster, '76) and the Sept. '77 issue of Ms. Magazine.

There is no evidence that bralessness causes any medical problem. Some women are more comfortable with their breasts supported; others find bras uncomfortable. Left unsupported, breasts will eventually begin to sag. This is an aesthetic issue, not a medical one. It is up to the individual woman to decide whether she might be bothered by this at a later point in her life.

Many women experience swelling and painful tenderness of the breasts before each menstrual period. Wearing a stretchy bra at this time may be helpful. Some women report that avoiding excess coffee, tea, salt, sugar, alcohol and refined carbohydrates lessens their discomfort.

Women should examine their own breasts once a month, right after their menstrual period (normal thickening and lumpiness is least evident at this time). Breast Self-Examination (BSE) is very important, as 90 per cent of all diagnosed breast cancers are found by women, not doctors.

Many women are hesitant to examine their breasts. They are not used to touching them, and fear that they will discover they have cancer. Close to 90 per cent of lumps that are biopsied are not cancerous. And if a woman does have breast cancer, early detection and treatment can save her life.

Pamphlets with instructions for BSE are available free at the Health Center. The Health Education office arranges discussions and audio-visual presentations on BSE. Contact them at 549-2671 if you would like to participate in a BSE education session.

Two of the "remedies" offered to women who think their breasts are too small are surgical implants and silicone injections (the latter have not been approved for medical use.)

Breast implant surgery for strictly cosmetic reasons has a 60 per cent complication rate. In other fields of medicine, operations with such high complication rates are discouraged except when necessary to save a life or a vital function. It is a comment on our priorities that doctors still perform such risky surgery for medically unnecessary aesthetic reasons.

Silicone injections are extremely dangerous. The patient's body fights the foreign substance that has been injected into it. Severe infections may develop for up to 15 years after the injection. Approximately 20 per cent of the complications that develop as a result of silicone injections require removal of the breast to avoid gangrene or migration of infection to the brain or lungs.

Today, one woman in 15 develops breast cancer. Isn't that a frightening enough figure without adding to the chances of suffering breast disorders by subjecting our breasts to unnatural alterations?

More and more women are coming to believe that a man who would judge their desirability on the basis of breast size isn't a man they consider desirable.

A small flat breast can feed a baby as well as a large round one. And that, after all, is what breasts are really about.

Need reporter

The Collegian is looking for a graduate student to fill the position of beat reporter for graduate affairs.

This reporter would be responsible for attending and reporting on the meetings and affairs of the Graduate Student Senate, in addition to keeping the news department informed of the activities of graduate students in general. This is not a paid position.

Applicants must not be involved in the Graduate Student Senate.

A knowledge of news reporting would be helpful, but the newspaper's news department will teach basic reporting skills. Anyone interested should call the Collegian at 545-3500 and ask for Dottie Clark or Jim Kassner, campus bureau chiefs, or go to the Collegian office in Campus Center 113.

READ THESE LINES... THEY REALLY SAY "CAREER OPPORTUNITY"

If you can easily read the above lines, you may have the kind of language talent that the National Security Agency needs.

Opportunities now exist for candidates skilled in the languages shown, plus certain other unusual foreign languages as well. Those selected will be able to make valuable contributions in the production of national defense intelligence.

The National Security Agency offers a variety of challenging assignments for language majors ... translation, transcription, area research projects, to name a few. Newly-hired linguists receive advanced training in their primary languages and can plan on many years of continued professional growth.

Intellectual challenge is part of NSA's language, too ... plus attractive surroundings in our suburban Maryland headquarters. Salaries start at the GS-7 level for BA degree graduates, plus all the usual benefits of Federal employment.

U. S. citizenship is required.

Schedule an NSA interview through your Placement Office.

Employee safety sessions

All secretaries and custodians are encouraged to attend the fire safety orientation sessions offered by Environmental Health and Safety this week — Fire Prevention Week.

The program consists of information about fire reporting, evacuation procedures, and a movie about handling fire extinguishers. Each session will end with a "hands on" experience by actually dousing small fires with extinguishers. The last part will be held outside, so appropriate clothing should be worn.

The program schedule is: Today at 10 a.m. in the Public Health Auditorium, and 1:30 p.m. in Herter 227. Both sessions are exclusively for secretaries. Thursday at 10 a.m. in the Public Health Auditorium, 1:30 p.m. in Herter 227, and 7 p.m. in Herter 231. Thursday's sessions are for custodians only. Sessions will last about one hour.

Taxes, budgets highlight elections

BOSTON [UPI] — Property taxes, budget worries and local squabbles are highlighting preliminary elections today for mayoral, school committees and city council candidates in 12 Massachusetts cities.

Three-term New Bedford Mayor John Markey, who stripped to his underwear last January to dramatize the city's financial plight, faces a challenge from five candidates in the non-partisan election. The final elections in all 39 Massachusetts cities will be held Nov. 8.

Markey's rivals claim they can restore fiscal health to the city, which now has an unemployment rate of seven per cent — one of the highest in the state. But "there's not a hell of a lot we can do to lower it, except concentrate on economic development," Markey said.

Woburn voters are looking at the city's property taxes, which rose dramatically with 100 per cent valuation. The five mayoral candidates are campaigning against what they claim is the poor management of three-term Mayor Edward Gilgun.

Fitchburg Mayor Hedley Bray, 71, is defending his austerity program, which cut deeply into some city services, as he fights for a third-term against four rivals. Bray explains reductions in services, such as sanitation and snow removal and a ceiling on overtime for city workers, by saying: "I just believe in a day's pay for a day's work."

Six candidates are fighting for the mayoral slot in Springfield, which Mayor William Sullivan is vacating after two terms. One of the frontrunners is City Council President Theodore Dimauro, 44, a lawyer and former school commitee member.

Incumbent Mayor John Buckley of Lawrence is basing his campaign on the 20 years he's served as mayor, said bv his campaign manager to be the longest in the country. The issues in Lawrence are high taxes and a sluggish downtown area.

City clerks in Lowell and Holyoke are predicting a poor turnout. In Lowell, where there is a city manager form of government and the mayor is nominated by the city council, the main concern is a pending tax increase of up to $30 over the present $179 tax rate.

Holyoke Mayor Ernest Proulx, 45, faces two opponents. But even one of his opponents concedes it's been a "very quiet campaign" and the city clerk is forecasting a "dismal" turnout.

Nobel Prize awarded

OSLO, Norway [AP] — Two women who started a peace movement in Northern Ireland and a London-based organization that works for political prisoners won Nobel peace prizes Monday.

The Nobel committee of the Norwegian parliament awarded the 1977 prize to the London organization, Amnesty International, for 16 years of effort on behalf of "prisoners of conscience" and against torture and the death penalty.

It gave the 1976 prize to Betty Williams, 33, and Mairead Corrigan, 32, for organizing a broad-based "Peace People's" movement to end eight years of fighting in their homeland between Protestant and Catholic extremists.

The women launched the campaign more than six months after the Feb. 1 deadline for peace prize nominations last year, when all 50 candidates were rejected and no award was given.

Mrs. Williams said in London: "We've only been going 14 months and other people have been going for years. But I know how hard we worked and perhaps after all we have earned it."

Miss Corrigan, moved to tears by the news, said in Belfast: "I accept the prize on behalf of everyone throughout the world who works and longs for peace and the many people who have suffered and have been jailed in the interests of promoting peace."

The prizes are worth $141,600 to Mrs. Williams and Miss Corrigan and $145,000 to Amnesty International.

Amnesty International was the 10th organization to win the peace prize.

Strike threatens New Orleans economy

NEW ORLEANS [AP] — The shutdown of the nation's second-largest port in a longeshoremen's strike is threatening steel shipments to the Midwest and grain exports to foreign countries. But the impact is greatest on the city of New Orleans itself.

"Two-thirds of the economy of this area is related to the waterfront," H.G. Joffray, director of port operations, said Monday. "So if you shut two-thirds of it off, the dollars aren't coming in.

"People start socking that buck away and keeping it for red beans and rice," he said.

The strike, part of a work stoppage that began Oct. 1 at East and Gulf Coast ports by the International Longshoremen's Association, is cutting an estimated $2 million a day from the area economy. Unlike workers elsewhere who are refusing to handle only containerized cargo, the New Orleans longshoremen are striking all cargo.

Containerized shipments account for about 60 per cent of the cargo at the Port of New York, but only about 25 per cent here.

"You've not only got the longshore wages, but you've got the money that the crews off the ships spend here," said Edward Reed, port director. "You've got the bunkers of fuel oil, the supplies that the ships buy. You've got the normal fees that the ships pay to the port authority.

"You've got the wages of people inolved indirectly, ship chandlers, freight forwarders, custom house brokers. You know the whole smear. They're all static."

Reed said the bulk of the cargo coming into the port is destined for somewhere else, so supply shortages caused by an extended strike "would occur all the way up the Mississippi Valley."

Because the walkout is limited in other ports, supplies of critical goods can be diverted from New Orleans.

Meanwhile, talks aimed at settling the ILA walkout are at a standstill. Federal mediators last met with representatives of shipping organizations late last week in Washington and no progress was reported.

The union's chief concern is job security. Key areas include demands for compensation for dockworkers who are left jobless by the increase in containershipping, which requires fewer people to load and unload vessels since goods are put aboard in containers lifed from trucks.

The New Orleans port handles 42 per cent of the nation's grain exports and is the nation's major port for steel imports.

Sutton opposes Gullett, Series to open tonight

NEW YORK [UPI] — Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda Monday named his "money" pitcher, Don Sutton, to start tonight's first game of the World Series while the New York Yankees' Billy Martin countered with injury-prone Don Gullet in hope of squeezing one more miracle out of his wounded pitching staff.

The opener is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. EDT at Yankee Stadium with the second game the same time Wednesday night. After that the scene shifts to Los Angeles Friday, Saturday and Sunday for games three, four and five before returning to New York, if necessary Oct. 18-19.

Sutton, who never has lost a post-season game in four decisions, characteristically brushed off the pressure of opening the series — the eighth time the Dodgers and Yankees have met to decide baseball's champion.

"What's a money game," asked Sutton, who was 15-8 this year, including a victory over the Philadelphia Phillies in the Dodgers' playoff win. "I pitch for money, so every time out is a money game to me."

Sutton, who pitched at Yankee Stadium in the All-Star game this past July, was quick to note, however, the difference now.

"This is a day at the office," he said. "There's not the hilarity and levity of the All-Star game which is really only an exhibition. This time there are 33 full shares on the line."

Lasorda smiled knowingly watching his ace right-hander taking wind sprints in the stadium's spacious left center field.

"This guy, Don Sutton, has won more games than anyone in the history of the Los Angeles franchise," said Lasorda. "We couldn't ask for a better pitcher to start us off."

The Yankees, by contrast, couldn't be in a worse situation as far as their pitching was concerned.

"As of right now, it is Gullett," said Martin, still bleary-eyed from his nail-biting, pennant-clinching victory over Kansas City the night before. "I've got five months to set up my starting rotation for the playoffs," added the Yankee skipper glumly, "and one day to do it for the World Series. This should be set up so both teams can have their two best pitchers ready."

Martin's series plans were complicated when he was forced to use his best pitcher this season, left-hander Ron Guidry, as the starter Sunday night on only two days rest as a desperate effort to win the AL pennant.

Guidry lasted only 2 1-3 innings and forced Martin to summon his most effective right-hander, Mike Torrez, to pitch the next 5 1-3 innings before the Yankees' lifesaver, Sparky Lyle, nailed down the 5-3 clincher.

Gullett, 14-4 during the regular season in which he was sidelined most of the month of August, started the first game of the playoffs against the Royals and was kayoed after two innings, complaining of the same sore shoulder which plagued him earlier in the year.

At that time, it was said his season was over. But the Yankees, who managed to keep finding ways to extend their season, had almost no other choice but to send Gullett out to the firing line again — sore shoulder or no sore shoulder.

Lasorda, in anticipation of the southpaw, inserted right-handed hitter Glenn Burke in place of Rick Monday in the outfield. The Dodgers, meanwhile, looking over the vast expanses of Yankee Stadium with all its tradition, seemed impressed but not awed.

Sutton and first baseman Steve Garvey both have early ties to the Yankees.

"I was a Yankee fan all my life," said Sutton. "If they had shown a little more interest in me when I was a kid, I might just be over in the other clubhouse now."

Garvey, who led all the Dodgers' hitters with a .381 average, two homers and five RBI in their last World Series appearance — 1974 — when they lost in five games to the Oakland A's, was a batboy for both the Dodgers and Yankees in spring training when he was a youngster.

"I was hoping for the Yankees and the Dodgers when we were in spring training in Florida this year," said Garvey. "It is a classic World Series with a lot of nostalgia connected with it. I think we're a better team all the way around with better pitching and a well-rested bullpen."

Bears edge out LA

CHICAGO [UPI] — Bob Avellini completed three touchdown passes, two on bombs of 70 and 72 yards to James Scott, and Walter Payton rushed over 100 yards for the third time in four games last night to lead Chicago to an upset 24-23 victorv over the Los Angeles Rams in a rainy nationally-televised NFL game.

The Bears' defense put a heavy rush on Rams' quarterback Joe Namath, sacking him twice for a total of 19 yards lost and picking off four Namath aerials, including two by Doug Plank. Namath finished the game with 16 completions in 40 attempts for 203 yards.

The Rams and the Bears are now both 2-2. Los Angeles is a game behind Atlanta in the NFC West and Chicago is tied for second with Detroit in the NFC Central, a game back of Minnesota.

Avellini had far better statistics, connecting on 11 of 17 for 219 yards and only one interception. Avellini hit Scott with a 70-yarder for the Bears' first touchdown and a 72-yarder for the second score in the second period, giving Chicago a 14-13 lead. On both plays, Scott caught the ball over cornerback Rod Perry. On the second TD, he pulled out of Perry's grasp to complete the scoring play.

"Charlie and I first met when he made a pass at my Bass."

There I was sitting in the library cramming for my mid-term in Psych 101. At about 11:30 I hear this guy across the table whisper:

"I dig your squiggles."

Now I've heard lines, but that one took the cake. 'Till I realized he was talking about my Bass shoes.

"What kind of shoes are they?" he asked.

Figured I'd play along. "They're my Bass Squeejuns. Those squiggles are natural, genuine rubber soles. They give me the bouncy kind of walk I like."

Then he wants to know how long me and my Bass have been together, and I tell him I switched my major three times but I'm still wearing the same pair of Bass.

I thought he must have some kind of thing for feet. So I tell him I really like the way Bass Squeejuns go with my whole wardrobe. And how they give me lots of support, and how comfortable they are and stuff.

To make the long story short, I aced my mid-term and Charlie and I have been going out for a year now. Would you believe it? I'm still wearing my same pair of Bass Squeejuns.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEDNESDAY, Oct. 5, 1977

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11 — Born today, you have a knack for spying the initial crack in the armor that signifies change. Whether it involves personal relationship, a business contact or a financial investment, change foreseen is change already halfway met and adjusted to.

You will find this ability advantageous where your career is concerned, for you can anticipate what will be needed before co-workers do and, thus, to appear extremely insightful to those in influential places. Only a timidity about putting yourself forward keeps you from using this talent to your best advantage.

Although you are at pains to hide your feelings, you respond deeply to what goes on about you. For this reason, it is important you must keep calm; should you fail to, you could upset your plans for the future. You have an inborn fear of expressing yourself emotionally, however, so you may overlay your feelings with a veneer of calm. Your dread is that other people could in some way influence you against your own interests by using your own emotions against you.

Highly intelligent, what you lack in emotional fortitude you make up for in intellectual capacity. However, you are inclined to overintellectualize problems to control your feelings about them. In such cases, you would be better off without the mental capabilities you have. In short, there are times when you are actually too smart to be smart.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Whatever frightens you is to be avoided. This is no time to try to prove how brave you are. Acts of rashness cause suffering.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Unless you are willing to forgive – even if you can't forget – you will know a restless day of expecting ill of an old friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Take advantage of your artistic leanings. You should be able to make progress in your relationship with a new friend at evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — This is an excellent day to press your advantage. Those in the know may be exerting some influence on your behalf.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A profitable venture may prove less than gainful at this particular time. Don't become discouraged. The tide changes soon again.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Concentrate on newfound means to progress on an old project. Co-workers may be willing to step aside – at least temporarily. Ask!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If possible, get an early start on what will ultimately prove to be a long day. Much to do; much to gain!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Whatever has a direct bearing on the achievement of immediate success is to be followed up today. Listen to good advice from an old friend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A change in your present way of life is on the horizon. Don't be frightened by initial signs which may seem to foretell upheaval.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You may be wasting your time waiting for the help another has promised. You would do well to begin to act on your own.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — While a little learning is said to be a dangerous thing, it may also impress another sufficiently to gain you a point in your favor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Be prepared to work through a difficult time alone. Those who seemed willing and able to assist discover they have other plans.

A criminal element in sports?

The man with flaming eyes protruding out from under the face mask of his silver helmet is George Atkinson. Sunday after Sunday, Atkinson lurks ominously in his strong safety position for the Oakland Raiders, waiting for some unsuspecting prey to stumble into his lair and be physically assaulted. Maybe George will drill him with a stiff forearm to the throat, or maybe this time he'll use his knee, his elbow, or even the very helmet which houses his apparently demented brain as a weapon.

George Atkinson is a licensed hit man, and there are several others like him, not only in the NFL, but in other sports as well. He is part of what Steeler coach Chuck Noll called "a criminal element in sports," an element which he admitted includes his own players like Mel Blount, Joe Greene, Ernie Holmes and Jack Lambert. Before I try to justify, or at least explain why players like this exist, let me first list a few of the major offenders.

Atkinson gets most of the ink, mainly because of his assaults upon Lynn Swann and Russ Francis last year, but the truth is that his teammate Jack Tatum is just as ferocious and just as dirty, if you will, as he is. The Raiders have long been decried as a dirty team, and players like Atkinson, Tatum, Skip Thomas, Ted Hendricks and Phil Villapiano certainly bear witness to that fact, but players like St. Louis' Conrad Dobler, L.A.'s Jack "Hacksaw" Reynolds, Washington's Ken Houston, Dallas' Tom Henderson, Buffalo's Tony Greene and San Francisco's Cedric Hardman certainly rate as headhunters first class as well.

How, you may be wondering by now, do all these animals get away with playing this brutal charade which barely resembles professional football? There are a number of reasons, not the least of which is the almighty dollar. Football is a game of brute force against brute force, in which the team which wins the most collisions gets the pot of gold (and a mighty handsome pot 'o gold it is, m' lads 'n lassies.) Intimidation is obviously a very important part of playing winning football, and, as a result, economically satisfying football. Those playoff, championship and Super Bowl checks feather many a football player's cold winter bed in the off-season.

Another reason might be recognition. Except for Dobler, all of the players I've listed are defensive performers, and it's not very often that their names replace those of Simpson, Staubach, Tarkenton, Harris, Stabler and Metcalf in Monday morning headlines. Savagery is a way of being noticed, even if for all the wrong reasons. Conrad Dobler may be one of the dirtiest players ever to play football, but as a result he is also the most famous offensive lineman in the NFL. How many other guards can you name?

There is a third reason why this kind of mayhem takes place in sports today, and it sits in section 22 every Sunday afternoon with a pint of brandy. It also plants itself firmly before the television set at precisely 1:00 p.m. and doesn't budge, except for essential reasons, until 7:00. If football fans didn't enjoy watching helmets roll and bodies wince, they wouldn't flock in such incredible numbers to the ticket window every week. Go to a Philadelphia Flyers hockey game and tell me fans deplore violence. Listen to the crowd hoot and scream when the elbows of Daryl Dawkins or Dave Cowens slam an opponent to the floor. Watch any boxing match, listen closely when a home player nails a catcher or breaks up a double play. The crowd loves the violence, and that's probably the sickest thing about this whole situation.

If there is a solution to this disease, I can't imagine it, but I for one feel a lot better knowing that these athletes do their thing on the playing fields. What would we do if they were allowed to run loose on the streets?

Caps select B's Forbes

BOSTON [UPI] — The Washington Capitals selected winger Dave Forbes, a five-year performer with the Boston Bruins, in yesterday's National Hockey League waiver draft.

The Capitals were to pay Boston the waiver price of $12,500 for Forbes, who had been used on a fourth line and as a penalty killer for the Bruins.

Forbes, a graduate of American International College in Springfield, gained notoriety for a Jan. 4, 1975 stick fight with Henry Boucha of the Minnesota North Stars. Forbes was indicted for assault and battery and stood trial in a Hennepin County, Minn., court. The trial ended in a hung jury and Forbes never was re-tried.

"We were sorry to see Dave leave us but it was best for him," said Bruins' General Manager Harry Sinden." Dave wanted to play regularly and he wasn't going to be able to do that with us, so we told him we would make every effort to transfer him, to another club."

Forbes, the fastest skater on the Bruins, was the second of three players taken in the draft. Detroit, choosing first, picked center Paul Woods from the Montreal Canadiens, while the New York Rangers chose goaltender Wayne Thomas from Toronto.

Early in the race, Tina Francario (r) and Dill Wilson (l) battled for the lead in the Brandeis Invitational Sunday, but at the finish, Jane Welzel was all alone in first place. (Staff photos by Dave Rodman)

Women rule Brandeis Invitational; Welzel cops first in record time

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team successfully defended its Brandeis Invitational Meet team title Sunday by defeating five other teams at the rain-soaked Brandeis campus in Waltham.

UMass had 22 points and was trailed by Yale, 75; Southern Connecticut, 88; UConn, 90; Brandeis, 100; and Holy Cross, 175. Bowdoin, URI and the University of Lowell all had incomplete teams and did not compete in the team battle.

The rain had mercifully stopped by the time the gun sent the 61 runners out on the courses, and it was the Minutewomen who poured into the top ten positions in the race, as six of the first ten runners to cross the line were in red UMass uniforms.

Standout senior Jane Welzel took first in the new record time of 17:36 over the three mile Brandeis women's course. She broke the old record of 17:59 set in the Invitational last year by Marina Buckley of Amherst.

"I think that's the best race I've ever seen Jane run," said coach Ken O'Brien after the meet. "She really looked good and strong."

Donna Randall used her home course to good advantage as she took second in 18:00, after leading the early stages of the race.

UMass freshman Tina Francario was worried about the finish line, but when she saw it, sprinted past UConn's Sue Connolly to take third in 18:08. Connolly was fourth in 18:09.

The UMass' wolfpack put a lock on things as they grabbed fifth through eighth places.

A bystander was heard to exclaim, "Wow, look at all the UMass people — where are they coming from? Look, there's another one!"

She said it with good reason, as Priscilla Wilson was fifth (18:27), Barb Callanan sixth (18:35), Debby Farmer seventh (18:38) and Sue Swartz eighth (18:41), to seal the verdict.

They had run in a convoy since the midpoint of the race.

Backing up these front runners was plenty more UMass red. Jo Chapman was 12th, with Linda Welzel right behind in 13th. Sue Mulligan was 20th, Eileen Everett 22nd, Kathy Kirkham 27th, Beth Collins 29th, Laurie Wolf 38th and Cathy Dooley 45th.

"Weren't they super," said an obviously pleased coach Charlotte Lettis after the race. "I'm really very pleased with their performances today. They were great."

Rain had poured down all morning in Waltham, but miraculously stopped just before the start, providing perfect running weather.

"This was about the best day you could get to run," said O'Brien. "The coolness left after the rain evaporated the heat off the runners, making some fast times possible.

At the gun, Randall and Connolly jumped out to a quick lead over two narrow paths that forced a lot of pushing, elbows, and even slowing to a walk as the tight pack of runners tried to negotiate their way through.

Francario, Wilson and Welzel were sitting in good shape in a pack of several runners just behind the lead duo. The rest of the UMass squad was strung out through the field, with passing difficult on the early part of the course. By the mile mark, Welzel was already in the lead, and pushing the Pacesetters (three members of the Brandeis men's team). Her win was never in doubt as she lengthened her lead from there, and had the one remaining pacer looking over his shoulder with some consternation at the end.

The other women gradually worked their way through the pack, to the point where all they had to do was "watch their footing" over the last 100 yards.

They will probably have a chance to watch the foliage tomorrow when they travel to Hanover, New Hampshire to meet Dartmouth, who is not expected to be a challenge.

TOMORROW
National Student Armband Day
IN SOLIDARITY WITH KENT STATE
Wear an armband—if you believe that an injustice was done on May 4, 1970, when the National Guardsmen murdered four Kent State students and wounded nine who were protesting an unjust war in Indochina.
Wear an armband—if you think that construction of a gym would desecrate the site of the shootings, that the site should be preserved as a memorial, and that the gym should be built elsewhere, like on the land bought for that purpose in 1968.

LONG LIVE THE SPIRIT OF KENT AND JACKSON STATE
MAY 4th COALITION

Wear an armband—to uncover the cover-up, to prevent the rulers of this country from burying the site and all it represents, to preserve the lessons of our proud history of struggle against the wrongs of the system and the system's shameful history of wrongs against the people which stood clear for all to see during the storm of rebellion in 60's.
Wear an armband—to show that the sentiment of millions are behind this struggle, and that Ohio's Governor Rhodes, KSU President Golding, the Justice Dept., the courts and the cops, in pushing construction of the gym, are standing on the side directly opposed to the interests of the people.
Wear an armband—to spread support for the issue even more widely across the country, as students everywhere are given visible proof that they are not alone in their support, and are encouraged to take an active stand.
On Sept. 24, 3,000 students from campuses everywhere marched at Kent State. Demonstrators took down the fence surrounding the site, occupied it for a short time, and planted a proclamation issued by the May 4th Coalition.
The thing that the rulers of this country feared most has happened. To put it in a phrase by Alan Canfora, a student wounded at Kent in 1970 and a leader of the May 4th Coalition, "They picked up a rock only to drop it on their own feet." Because in response to their actions, students have shone a spotlight on Kent State in a way that has drawn the attention of the entire nation. The issue has been introduced onto hundreds of campuses, and thousands of students have come into the struggle and taken a stand against them and their plans.
The momentum continues to grow. It is growing towards a national demonstration on the Kent State campus on October 24.
Wear an armband—to keep alive the spirit of Kent and Jackson State, which lives in the struggle we carry on today.

Harriers capture three

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

BRONX, N.Y. — Placing five men in the top 10 of the race enabled the UMass men's cross country team to roll to its seventh, eighth, and ninth wins with a tri-meet triumph Saturday over Manhattan, Connecticut, and Syracuse.

Running on the five-mile Van Cortland Park located in the Bronx section of New York City, the harriers extended their season mark to 9-1. They will close out the regular season dual meet competition this Saturday at UMass against New Hampshire and Vermont.

Final scores for this past weekend's action were recorded as UM-24, Manhattan-33, UM-23, UConn-38, and UM-15, Syracuse-49.

UMass did not have any finishers in the top three, but scored fourth, fifth, seventh, eighth, and 10th places to wrap up the meet.

Co-captain Mike Quinn did not run due to a strained knee and is questionable for this week. "I don't think it's a serious injury for Mike. He had it at the end of last spring, which caused him to stop running. We're trying to nip it in the bud, and hopefully with some corrective shoes, he'll be alright. But we still have to wait and see," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien.

Quinn was x-rayed Friday but the results have not been passed on to O'Brien.

The top five finishers for the harriers were Stetson Arnold 3rd (25:25), Tom Wolff 4th (25:38), Matt Wolff 7th (25:52), Frank Carroll 8th (25:54) and Jay Legere 10th (26:00).

Winning the race at 25:19 was Marty Lowankowski, a transfer from Florida and a former New Jersey state cross country champion and high school All-American. Pat O'Neill, a sophomore from UConn, finished second with a time of 25:25.

The course itself featured some grass running, and then branched out into treacherous horse paths with steep hills, and long stretches of woods. It is not a course where you can pass many people, but instead it becomes a race of position.

"Running hard and positioning ourselves were our two main objectives for this race and we accomplished them," said O'Brien.

UMass went out hard for the first mile with Arnold leading the pack of UMass runners into the two mile stretch of woods. Lowankowski and O'Neill broke away from Arnold at the three mile mark and held their respective positions for the rest of the race.

Meanwhile, at the 3.5 mark senior Tom Wolff broke away from Manhattan runner Robert Krohn to hold onto fourth position for the race. Wolff's younger brother, Matt, was 14 seconds back in seventh while co-captain Frank Carroll anchored the eighth position one second behind Matt Wolff.

Lou Panaccione and Kevin McCusker, who enjoyed strong performances in last Saturday's tri-meet victories against Northeastern, St. John's and Rhode Island, did not have good performances this week. Panaccione finished 12th and McCusker 14th, but that didn't worry O'Brien.

"With the type of schedule we have had this season (three meets in one week against Providence and Northeastern, two of the best teams in New England) we can't expect top-notch performances every week from all our runners," O'Brien said.

"It's great to have the depth we have because if one runner has a bad race, the others pick up for him. Last week Lou and Kevin were outstanding while this week the Wolff brothers and Jay Legere provided the spark. It's a different five people every week."

Spikers lose to Springfield

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass volleyball team saw its record slip to 0-5 as it was beaten by Springfield, 6-15, 11-15, 10-15 Saturday in an away match.

"Springfield just took control of the game," UMass coach Dianne Thompson said. "Neither team played well, they looked flat, and we played a defensive type of game."

After trailing from the start of the first set, UMass took an early 6-0 lead in the second, but just "lost it," according to Thompson. The Minutewomen also held a 4-0 advantage in set number three, but eventually lost their momentum.

"We have to work on controlling the tempo of the matches," Thompson said.

UMass will have a chance to make the coach's wish a reality when it hosts Salem State and Eastern Nazarene in a tri-meet tonight at 6 p.m. at the NOPE gym.

Both Division II teams, Thompson expects tough matches from each. "They've always had strong teams," she said.

Salem State was 14-5 last season, and defeated the Minutewomen in straight sets in the two teams only meeting. Salem is 5-1 this year, and has two veterans back from last season's team. But the average height on the team is only 5'7".

Eastern Nazarene, 13-4 a season ago, bases its attack around a 6'2" player, Donna Fandel. Currently 3-1, Eastern lost just two starters from last year's team.

"We like to think of Saturday's losses as temporary setbacks." Thompson said. And she hopes the losses will prove to be just that.

Netmen 2nd in YanCon tourney

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

After finishing second to UNH in the 1975 and 1976 Yankee Conference Tennis Championships, the UMass men's tennis team assumed the bridesmaid role again this year as it was nipped by the Wildcats, 14-13.

As UMass coach Jay Ogden predicted, the tournament, played Friday and Saturday on the lower Boyden courts, was a close affair, with UM (12) and Vermont (11) taking third and fourth in the standings.

New Hampshire did not clinch the win until after the third flight doubles was completed, with the Wildcats duo winning over BU's team. If UNH had lost that match, a three way tie between UNH, BU and UMass would have been the result.

New Hampshire was favored to win the title, "but they weren't heavy favorites," Ogden had said before the tourney.

A big factor in the win was Jeff Aarts, UNH's best player for the past two years. He was seeded number one in both singles and in doubles, and he took both titles, combining with Roscoe Weber to annex the latter crown.

Other than Aarts, though, it wasn't a good tournament for first seeds. Only Shippen Howe of BU, playing at third singles, was able to win from his top seeded spot.

Last year, according to UMass's Rick Sharton, the Minutemen won four finals, but still only finished second. This year, UMass made the finals in four matches and came away with three wins.

Tops in the "won" category was Sharton. The number two seed in second singles, he won that division and also won second doubles with partner, captain Steve Heyl. They were seeded number one, which made them only the fourth top seed out of 12 to come through.

"That was a key match," said Ogden, "because if Vermont had beaten them, there would have been a three-way tie for second, with BU.

YANKEE CONFERENCE CHAMPIONS — Although UMass finished second, it did have two individual champions and one first place doubles team in the Yankee Conference Tournament last weekend.

Mark Huetteman (1) won sixth singles, Rick Sharton (c) won second singles and later returned to win second doubles with captain Steve Heyl (r). The team was second to UNH for the third year in a row. (Staff photos by Dave Rodman)

"He (Sharton) played exceptionally well the whole tournament. He played an intelligent tournament, pacing himself and analyzing his opposition. He and Heyl played well in the last doubles match. They won 7-5, 7-6 against a good Vermont team to give us sole possession of second."

Sharton won his singles flight by downing Jim Petersen of UConn, 6-3, 7-6.

The other UMass win went to freshman Mark Huetteman, who took sixth singles by trouncing first seed Harold Hirshon of BU, 6-3, 6-2. Huetteman, seeded third, also knocked off second seed Bill Bailey of UNH in the semifinals.

"That was his best match of the tournament," said Ogden, "and I think his best match of the season."

Al Green and Jim Barnhart made the final of first doubles, but were defeated by Aarts and Weber, 6-1, 6-4.

"They started slowly," according to Ogden. "Weber was not missing a shot."

He said they had a good shot at taking the UNH pair in the second set with the score 4-4, when "Aarts hit spectacular shots," to win it.

"I thought it was a good finish for the fall season," said Ogden, "considering we were 2-2 and BU was 5-1 and Vermont 4-1.

Stickers tie one, win one in weekend tilts

By MISSY GALLAGHER

On Friday the UMass field hockey team tied Colgate, 0-0, but Saturday proved more fruitful with a 3-2 triumph over Cortland.

The Minutewomen dominated penetration time against Cortland but couldn't put the ball in the net. In post season play the best penetration time determines the victory. According to tournament standards the Minutewomen beat Cortland, giving the UMass stickers an impressive, 6-0 record. However, in its league UMass is 5-0-1.

Sue Krieder, returning from a sprained ankle, suffered a black eye early but came back in the second half. Co-captain Lynsie Wickman, a key player, activated her chronic knee problems. These injuries combined with the five hour bus trip lowered the Minutewomen's morale.

Against Colgate UMass Goalie Kathy Gipps "was basicly steady," indicated UMass coach Judith Davidson. Sweeper Gayle Hutchinson aided her team by keeping Colgate shot from scoring.

Judy Kennedy played "good defense" according to co-captain Cheryl Meliones.

The Minutewomen enjoyed a good night's rest in a Holiday Inn and beat Cortland, 3-2. UMass lost to Cortland last year was by the same margin. These goals were the first scored upon UMass this season.

Davidson considers the second game of the New York twinbill "more of a team effort". Davidson doesn't feel either contest was a strong game for the Minutewomen.

Cortland scored in the opening minute of regulation play. The UMass stickers had to contend with the one goal deficit and with its opponents style of play. The Cortland had the fastest forward line the Minutewomen have faced thus far, commented Meliones. Cortland used advantageous long passes, added Davidson.

Lynsie Wickman retaliated for her second goal of the season. Wickman received a penalty corner pass from her sister, Jody and fired it into the left hand corner of the net.

Cortland fought back with another score in the second half. However, "no one gave up" commended Davidson.

Meliones added another goal to her credit. Lynsie Wickman hand stopped a penalty corner pass enabling Meliones to flick a shot into the right corner of the net. The score came with 15 minutes remaining in the game.

Julie McHugh's game winning goal was "superb" termed teammate Meliones. The right inner's first goal was timely. Sue Kibling earned the assist.

Kelly Salls, Sue Kibling and Laura O'Neal received praises for their performances from Davidson. O'Neal played link for the first time filling in for the injured Sue Krieder.

The Minutewomen play Yale today at home at NOPE field. This contest will be the first time the two teams will play each other in regular season play. Last year Yale beat UMass, 4-2, in the regionals.

Minutemen rip BU, 41-16

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

UMass halfback Bill Coleman (40) slices and slashes his way through Boston University defenders en route to another outstanding performance in the Minutemen's 41-16 win. (Staff photo by Bob Higgins.)

For more than one half of the UMass-Boston University football game played at Alumni Stadium on Saturday, the Minutemen did all they could to insure that this would not be another runaway.

In fact, with less than seven minutes remaining in the third quarter they found themselves trailing the Terriers 16-7, due to an inordinate amount of turnovers and costly penalties.

But, just as most of the 4700 faithful in attendance began to squirm in their seats and mumble obscure thoughts about the possibility of an upset, the Minutemen turned it around.

The remaining 22 minutes of the football game were completely dominated by UMass as it poured 34 points onto the scoreboard and pranced to a come from behind 41-16 victory over the Terriers.

It was the Minutemen's fourth straight victory and raised their over-all record to 4-1.

The game shifted in UMass' favor after Boston University's Dave Cummings had given the Terriers a surprising 16-7 lead on a three yard gallop 8:32 into the third quarter.

Sensing that the game might be slipping away, the Minuteman offense came right back. Senior quarterback Mike Fallon proved that he can run as well as pass by capping a 56-yard drive in 12 plays with a 10-yard scamper off an option sweep to put UMass right back in the ballgame.

"We needed that one," emphasized UMass head coach Dick MacPherson. "When that touchdown is put against you, and you come right back the way we came back and scored, it has to knock some of the emotion out of the other team. There's no question, that was the key."

The UMass defense then went to work by stopping the Terriers deep in their own territory enabling the offense to regain possession at the BU 47 yard line.

It appeared the UMass offense had been stopped, when on third down and nine Fallon tossed a screen pass to halfback Bill Coleman short of a first down. But Terrier defensive end Tim McMahon was assessed a 15-yard personal foul penalty for a late hit and the UMass drive was kept alive.

"He made a freshman mistake, there's nothing I can say to him," said BU head coach Rick Taylor, who had earlier in the week criticized his team for its lack of "emotional" play.

The penalty gave the ball to the Minutemen at the BU 34 yard line and they wasted little time taking advantage of the break. Four plays later reserve halfback Dave Douvadjian slashed into the endzone from 18 yards out to hand the Minutemen a 21-16 lead, 43 seconds into the final quarter.

From this point the Minutemen just poured it on over the beleagured and physically beaten Terrier squad, which entered the game noticeably overmatched by the stronger front lines of UMass.

Fullback Hank Sareault, who rushed for 101 yards in 19 carriers and was awarded the game ball, rumbled into the end zone from six yards out to hand UMass a 28-16 lead. On the offense's next possession, Coleman capped a 14 play drive by bursting into pay-dirt from one yard out. The final UMass score came from reserve defensive back Steve Lemay, who intercepted Terrier QB Greg Geiger's toss at his own goal line and returned it 100 yards for the touchdown.

Lemay's runback of the interception ties the UMass record set by Don Johnson in 1953.

The first half had been a lesson in frustration for the Minutemen who moved the ball consistently (they compiled 17 first downs in the opening half), but continually coughed up the football.

UMass scored first, when Fallon highlighted a brilliant 84 yard touchdown march with a five-yard keeper into the end zone.

But at this point the UMass offense fell apart.

On its next four possessions in the half, UMass was hit by its old nemesis — the turnover. Fallon was intercepted twice, and sandwiched in between were two fumbles, one by Fallon and the other by Sareault on a poor handoff.

These miscues overshadowed a spectacular first half performance by Coleman (113 yds. in the half, 156 over-all) ,who is challenging UNH fullback Bill Burnham for rushing honors in the Yankee Conference.

The Terriers parlayed the Minutemen's turnovers into points behind the passing of Geiger, who had little trouble finding holes in the UMass secondary during the first half. Geiger hit on eight of 14 attempts for 154 yards in the opening half.

After a Fallon fumble, Geiger found tight end Jim Sturgis from 10 yards out for a Terrier score, however, the extra point attempt was blocked by Minuteman Joe McLaughlin, and UMass held the lead 7-6.

Following Sareault's fumble BU struck again. Geiger found flanker Greg Jones all alone down the left sideline for a gain of 44 yards. Only a saving tackle by cornerback Dave Croasdale at the UMass seven yard line prevented Jones from scoring. It turned out to be a big tackle after the Minutemen's defense held and forced BU to settle for a 29 yd. field goal from sophomore Ron Verrilli, and an eventual 9-7 halftime lead.

UMass booters lose, beaten by BU, 1-0

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Mark Filger took a Tony Clair pass and beat UMass goaltender Mark Hodgdon for the only score of the game as the Boston University soccer team defeated UMass, 1-0, here Saturday afternoon.

The goal, which came at the 24:25 mark of the first half, was enough to lift BU's record to 5-4, while UMass dropped to 3-3. It was the third straight loss for the slump-ridden Minutemen.

It was, as the score indicates, a defensive struggle all the way. Hodgdon and BU's Howie Freedman were outstanding in the nets. Both were aided by excellent defensive performances by their fullbacks. Mark Vassalotti of UMass and Rick Neil of BU were stood out.

Vassalotti, who has been somewhat anonymous despite consistently good performances, held the defense together. Twice he broke up clean breakaways and once he made an excellent save in goal when Hodgdon was hurt on a play. The entire defense played well, but for Vassalotti it was a particularly memorable performance.

Neil had the misfortune of having to cover Tommy Koutsoukos, but Neil did his job well. Koutsoukis could manage few shots, and those were handled easily by Freedman. The entire UMass squad never got into full offensive gear.

After Pilger's goal, it was a see-saw battle. The ball floated from end to end, with neither team taking full control. Both defenses held strong, while the offenses stumbled.

And once again it was lack of offense which killed the Minutemen.

"I don't think we put three passes together," lamented UMass coach Russ Kidd. "The halfbacks just aren't doing it."

On Saturday, they looked as if they were playing blindfolded.

Kidd added that Koutsoukos was outtoughed. Actually, the entire offense was outtoughed. The Terriers were constantly taking cheap shots, and getting away with them. But, all that aside, the Minutemen seem to have fallen completely apart. They have managed just three goals in the past three games, after having netted 13 in the first three.

UMass had a frightful scare with 56 seconds to play in the first half when Hodgdon took a mean kick and fell spreadeagled to the turf. It took several minutes to get him up and walking. At that point, the officials decided to call the half and add the remaining time to the second. Fortunately for UMass, Hodgdon came back to play a strong second half. His loss could have been a death knell for UMass.

The Minutemen will take on Rhode Island Friday at home in their next game. URI, fresh off a Saturday victory over Vermont, should put up a good challenge as the Minutemen strive to break their losing streak.

Another World Series

Tonite, barring any mechanical failure, the seventh game of the World Series between the Boston Red Sox and the Oakland Athletics will be played. Game time: approximately 8:30.

What's this you say? The Dodgers will be taking on the Yankees for the Championship.

Well that game is in Yankee Stadium.

The Sox-A's game is in the Campus Center.

Just about a year ago, both the Sox and A's were out of the whole picture. Finley's boys had let the AL West escape their grasp, allowing the waterfall-gang, the K.C. Royals to take first place.

Meanwhile, over in the Eastern division, Fenway got new padding and a bleacher scoreboard to go along with superstar-contract problems — and third place.

So, while the Reds were tearing apart the Yankees, a friend and I resurrected our two favorite teams from the dead. Dave took his Sox. Me, my A's.

A best-of-seven series. Six-pack a game, and a six for the series. High stakes.

Then, what was to be an unexpected year long series, got underway on the electronic baseball game.

Midway's Tornado Baseball game is as close to the real game as you can get. You can move your outfielders (for pull hitters) to make catches. Can pitch the ball; changing speeds-fastball, curve, slider, knuckleball etc. It's a pretty decent game.

Oh, undoubtedly there are skeptics out there who find it hard to believe two college students can get psyched about playing electronic baseball.

Hey, nothing should surprise you here at UMass — there are even students who study on a Friday night — and I think that's strange.

Anyways, the series began.

The two teams split games one and two.

Game three was won by the A's, but protested by Mr. Hall on grounds of it being played under the influence of Bluewall alcohol. The protest was denied (this author being the judge) on the grounds that both squads were playing under the same conditions.

The series was postponed (lack of enthusiasm) until last month, when once again, the real life Sox and Athletics of the major leagues world were laid to rest for the second straight year.

Then the series was resumed.

The Sox took two (5-4, 6-4) and led the series 3-2. Blue went on the mound vs. Tiant, and the A's evened things up via a 9-3 victory.

Which set up the big game tonight.

In the second part of this World Series doubleheader, the N.Y. Yankees have done it to the Royals again, while the Phillies found their way out of the Series' picture for the second straight year.

The Yankees snuck by both the Orioles and Sox to take the AL East flag, and now only one obstacle is in their way of the World Championship pennant — the LA Dodgers.

As we Yankee-haters know, there can be nothing worse than having to face a winter of bragging from the likes of Reggie Jackson, Thurman Munson, and ex-Sox Sparky Lyle. Nothing worse in the sports world except maybe another Super Bowl appearance by the Minnesota Vikings.

And nothing could be sweeter than a Dodger sweep, Cincinnati-style.

If the series were decided by the fans' choices (popularity) the Dodgers would have clinched the title yesterday.

Maybe it's un-American to root against the AL entry.

Then again, maybe it's un-American to root for the Yankees.

New York has the Statue of Liberty, the Empire State Bldg., Macy's, and McDonalds. What else do they need?

All LA has is smog.

C'mon Yanks. Let the Dodgers win it. In four, five, I don't care as long as they win it.

Plus, if the 'Big Apple' becomes known as the 'Home of the World Champion Yankees' everyone will forget the Mets exist.

And we can't have that, now can we?

The Medium of Television and Black Peoples' Lives! Lorne Cress at Amherst College

By W.J. Wheeler
Nummo News Staff

The television series The Jefferson, Sanford & Sons, and the like defame Black People.

There are no television shows at present that reveal the true nature of the Black Experience in America.

For those who watch shows that are about Black people they are watching a comedy in context but those shows perpetuate the castration of Black People.

Lorne Cress is a devout analysist of the medium of television and its portrails of Blacks. Tuesday Oct. 4 at Amherst College she lectured on the destructive implications that the shows on television today have on Black Peoples lives.

Mrs. Cress a one time student at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst started the Black Mass Communications Project in 1970. B.M.C.P. was started out of the need for Blacks to know what is happening out in the world. At present Mrs. Cress works in the Washington D.C. area in the Broadcasting Industry.

She stated that Black People must begin to analyze what it truly means to be black in America. Black People in America today are still oppressed by the white dominant class in America.

She stated that the real reason for the perpetuation of racism is because everything in this society benefits white people, and that white people in their self interest adopt an attitude of racism to keep all the material benefits coming to them.

She stated that the inch of material progress that blacks achieved in the 60's and early 70's have regressed and will continue to regress until Blacks will be pushed back into the shadows.

She finally came to the conclusion that black people must analyze the state of white people in this society and that white people will continue to oppress blacks until blacks understand themselves.

Black people must understand to what extent white people have controlled them.

The only solution for Black People today is to really refuse to continue to exist in this society the way they are.

Mass Media — Brain Invasion

Karien Zachery

"The tremendous power of persuasion of the electronic media is the major reson why many media specialist, behavioral scientists and psychologists have adopted the terminology of "Sellivision" as the truer assessment of the present use of that medium." Mass media is gradually becoming the molder of the masses. It plays a tremendous role in our everyday lives, from the rearing of our youth to the types of meals the American family eats.

The mass media has grown to be the most politically, socially and economically, powerful influence in the world. Through its thousands of advertisements, the media manipulates the minds of everyone, either directly or indirectly. The masses are unconcious to the controlling effect the media has on their behavior. The media has been charged by critics of making the minds of the public weaken their capacity to perceive new ideas, in innovating fresh and unique thoughts, values, ideas and opinions.

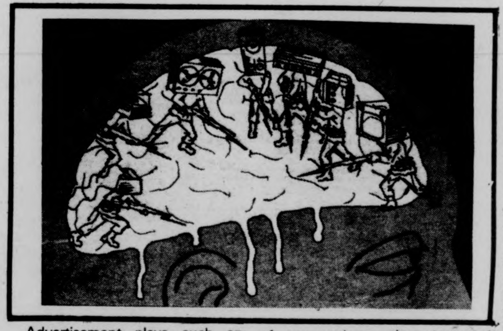
The widest variety of suggestive influences are constantly being displayed on television, through radios, magazines, newspapers, billboards, etc. Thousands of advertising agencies are in constant competition, trying to sell the masses everything from a toothpaste brand to a thought.

"German poet and philosopher Hans Magnus Enzenberger refers to the mass media as the 'mind Industry', stating that it can 'take anything, digest it, reproduce it and pour it out."

"New York writer Pauline Kael recently wrote: "Television is blurring the distinction for all of us; we don't know what we're reacting to anymore, and beyond that its becoming just as impossible to sort out the "con from the truth."

The primary constituents of television are 95 per cent entertainment and 5 per cent information or news. With various forms of entertainment on the screen 95 per cent of the time, the average family watching about 10 hours of television a day, is it no wonder why most people are unconcious to the fact that their brains are literally being invaded? The rest of the 14 hours in the day are spent listening to the radio, music, reading a magazine, or just quick glancing at hundreds of billboards and advertisements while walking or driving down the street, thus constant exposure to the media.

The major and most harmful suggestive advertisements in the media propogate violence and sex. Practically everything advertised contains either one or both of these factors, in either a blatant or hidden manner.



Advertisement plays such an important part in the media that the survival of a publication is literally hopeless without it. Author Bryan Key reveals in his book "Media Sexploitation," that in North America it is virtually impossible for a publication to survive without advertising. The only way any publication can survive is through advertising or selling a sponsor's product, which results in an integration, between making editorial decisions and marketing strategies,"

"Key further states that the editorial content of newspapers and news magazines has not escaped being used to present subliminal stimuli."

"It is remarkable how journalists with their claimed preoccupations over social responsibility kept themselves from conspicuously perceiving what has been going on around them for years. In discussing subliminal perception with individuals from a wide range of occupations, the strongest disbelief has come from journalists-irrespective of the evidence presented," Key wrote.

"Eminent media theorist Marshall McLuhan, from his acclaimed media discussion and counterblast declares: "Media are artificial extensions of sensory existance, each (medium), an externalized species of the inner genus sensation. The cultural environment created by externalization of modes of sensation now favors the predominance of one sense or another."

Basically the media appeals to the emotional, physical and psychological aspects of people.

The media literally seduces the masses, ninety per cent of the seduction attacking the subconscious mind. An even larger percentage of the masses is unaware that they are being subliminally seduced.

The subconscious picks up and records all messages and impulses received by the mind, most of which bypasses the conscious mind. For example, an advertisement for Coca-Cola was denounced an illegal advertisement, on the grounds that the propagaters of Coke were flashing inserts of the product on movie screens in theaters between pauses in the movie. The inserts lasted less than half a second and were sightly picked by none of the audience. The inserts were flashed quicker than sight, a part of the consciousmind, could record. Though the advertisement bypassed the eyes of the audience, the subconscious mind of everyone in the audience picked up and recorded the advertisement, without their knowledge. Consequently, at every intermission practically everyone in the theater went out to buy Coke. This is but a slight example of the effects media has on the masses.

"A favorite ploy of advertisers, as Key points out in his book, is the placement of sexually suggestive symbols and words in advertisements which bypass our conciousness but are picked up and digested by our subconscious mind."

Dick Gregory Associate Killed

BOSTON [UPI] — A Plymouth man who was an associate of human rights activist Dick Gregory was killed early yesterday by a hit-and-run driver and a black van is being sought, police said.

The victim was identified as Mike Watley, 38, of Long Pond Road, who police said had driven Gregory's Rolls-Royce into Boston from Plymouth.

Police said he was standing on Providence Street when the van struck him and a taxicab, which was not damaged. He was pronounced dead on arrival about an hour later at the New England Medical Center.

New Coordinator— Che Lumumba School

SISTER ISMAT ABDUL-HAQQ

Sister Ismat Abdul-Haqq has been selected by the parent collective of the Che-Lumumba School for Truth as the coordinator of the school for the 1977-78 school year.

A mother of two girls, Sister Ismat has worked with children of varying ages since being graduated from Mt. Holyoke College in 1970. She served as director of the Smith-Amherst Tutorial Program during 1970-71; taught junior high school language arts for a year in the Springfield, Mass. public school system, and later served as curriculum director for the Springfield-Amherst Summer Academy.

When asked which experiences she values most as contributing to her effectiveness as an educator, Sis. Ismat says, "I will always be thankful for the years that I taught at the Sister Clara Muhammad Elementary and Secondary School in Springfield. Those years were valuable because they provided an excellent opportunity to develope skills with which to instruct children who are constantly being bombarded with the ethnocentric values and interpretations of history that predominate in American society."

The objective of the Che-Lumumba School for Truth, Sister Ismat relates, is to combine a challenging program of instruction in requisite academic skills, with social and political education that will enable the Third World children who attend Che-Lumumba to gather a truthful picture of history and social dynamics. Indirectly, the children develope self-disipline and a collective spirit.

"It's a great oportunity for Third World parents who are concerned about their children's formal education," says Sis. Ismat. "They know that the school is dedicated to promoting a positive self image for each child which reflects an awareness and appreciation of his ethnic identity. At the same time, the parent can feel confident that the basic 3 R's are not being neglected."

Combat Liberalism

September 7, 1937

We stand for active ideological struggle because it is the weapon for ensuring unity within the Party and the revolutionary organizations in the interest of our fight. Every Communist and revolutionary should take up this weapon.

But Liberalism rejects ideological struggle and stands for unprincipled peace, thus giving rise to a decadent, philistine attitude and bringing about political degeneration in certain units and individuals in the Party and the revolutionary organizations.

Liberalism manifests itself in various ways.

To let things slide for the sake of peace and friendship when a person has clearly gone wrong, and refrain from principled argument because he is an old acquaintance, a fellow townsman, a schoolmate, a close friend, a loved one, an old colleague or old subordinate. Or to touch on the matter lightly instead of going into it thoroughly, so as to keep on good terms. The result is that both the organization and the individual are harmed. This is one type of liberalism.

To indulge in irresponsible criticism in private instead of actively putting forward one's suggestions to the organization. To say nothing to people to their faces but to gossip behind their backs, or to say nothing at a meeting but to gossip afterwards. To show no regard at all for the principles of collective life but to follow one's own inclination. This is a second type.

To let things drift if they do not affect one personally; to say as little as possible while knowing perfectly well what is wrong, to be worldly wise and play safe and seek only to avoid blame. This is a third type.

Not to obey orders but give pride of place to one's own opinions. To demand special consideration from the organization but to reject its discipline. This is a fourth type.

To indulge in personal attacks, pick quarrels, vent personal spite or seek revenge instead of entering into an argument and struggling against incorrect views for the sake of unity or progress or getting the work done properly. This is a fifth type.

To hear incorrect views without rebutting them and even to hear counter-revolutionary remarks without reporting them, but instead to take them calmly as if nothing had happened. This is the sixth type.

To be among the masses and fail to conduct propaganda and agitation or speak at meetings or conduct investigations and inquiries among them, and instead to be indifferent to them and show no concern for their well-being, forgetting that one is a Communist and behaving as if one were an ordinary non-Communist. This is the seventh type.

To see someone harming the interests of the masses and yet not feel indignant, or dissuade or stop him or reason with him, but to allow him to continue. This is an eighth type.

To work half-heartedly without a definite plan or direction; to work perfunctoril and muddle along — "So long as one remains a monk, one goes on tolling the bell." This is a ninth type.

To regard oneself as having rendered great service to the revolution, to pride oneself on being a veteran, to disdain minor assignments while being quite unequal to major tasks, to be slipshod in work and slack in study. This is a tenth type.

To be aware of one's own mistakes and yet make no attempt to correct them, taking a liberal attitude towards oneself. This is an eleventh type.

We could name more. But these eleven are the principal types.

They are all manifestations of liberalism.

Liberalism is extremely harmful in a revolutionary collective. It is a corrosive which eats away unity, undermines cohesion, causes apathy and creates dissension. It robs the revolutionary ranks of compact organization and strict discipline, prevents policies from being carried through and alienates the Party organizations from the masses which the Party leads. It is an extremely bad tendency.

Liberalism stems from petty-bourgeois selfishness, it places personal interest first and the interests of the revolution second, and this gives rise to ideological, political and organizational liberalism.

People who are liberals look upon the principles of Marxism as abstract dogrea. They approve of Marxism, but are not prepared to replace their liberalism by Marxism. These people have their Marxism, but they have their liberalism as well — they talk Marxism but practice liberalism; they apply Marxism to others but liberalism to themselves. They keep both kinds of goods in stock and find a use for each. This is how the minds of certain people work.

Liberalism is a manifestation of opportunism and conflicts fundamentally with Marxism. It is negative and objectively has the effect of helping the enemy; that is why the enemy welcomes its preservation in our midst. Such being its nature, there should be no place for it in the ranks of the revolution.

We must use Marxism which is positive in spirit, to overcome liberalism, which is negative. A Communist should have largeness of mind and he should be staunch and active, looking upon the interests of the revolution as his very life and subordinating his personal interests to those of the revolution; always and everywhere he should adhere to principle and wage a tireless struggle against all incorrect ideas and actions, so as to consolidate the collective life of the Party and strengthen the ties between the Party and the masses; he should be more concerned about others than about himself. Only thus can he be considered a Communist.

All loyal, honest, active and upright Communists must unite to oppose the liberal tendencies shown by certain people among us, and set them, on the right path. This is one of the tasks of our ideological front.

BY Johanna Brassard

This is the first article in a three-part series. The purpose of the series is to provide the Black and Third World Communities of the area with some general information about three University Organizations specifically designed to cater to the needs of these communities. These organizations are: The University Office of Financial Aid, The Bi-Lingual Collegiate Program (BCP), and the program of the Secondary Education for Black Students (CCEBS). Each organization provides assistance to the non-Black and Third World Communities as well.

A General Outline of the Office of Financial Aid

The University of Massachusetts' Financial Aid Services, located in room 245 of the Whitmore Administration building, is part of a system of interrelated offices. It deals specifically with the processing of approximately 12,000 applications for financial aid each year. Alphabetic files are kept for each applicant; files which are arranged according to the relationship of the individual to the University. For example, there is an "active file", which contains the alphabetized records of financial aid recipients currently attending the University, and there exists a "Delay until January File", where the files for recipients entering in the Spring Semester are kept.

As any recipient of Financial aid probably knows, numerous problems are bound to arise some where along the receiving line. There are several ways to alleviate and to obtain answers pertaining to specific problems.

Since most difficulties tend to present themselves as a result of the student's lack of knowledge as to the various types of aid available, and the procedures to be followed in application, somewhat less than an ounce of written prevention is available in the form of a pamphlet compiled by the University Offices of Student Services and Financial Aid. It is entitled "Institutional and Financial Aid Information for Students". Although it is in the process of revision, it is a good outline of valuable information in its present form.

For specific problems not directly related to application procedures, it is best to consult the various employees of the Financial Aid Office.

Students receiving financial aid

Work study students are employed by the Financial Aid Office and the Work-Study Office (a division of the Financial Aid Office) to help in offering information and in the keeping of records. They are trained and supervised by Mr. Dan Fitzpatrick, The Director of Student Services, and by two full time counselors, Sharon Finn and Gail Partyka.

In an interview last week, Sharon Finn stated that all employees in both offices attempt to keep one another abreast of pertinent information, but that students' questions are too vague to be easily answered. She added that she and Gail Partyka would welcome any suggestions and complaints as to the performance of the work-study student staff.

Three employees of the Financial Office deal specifically with the problems of Black and Third World Financial aid recipients. Gloria Ortiz, a spokesperson for the three, told this writer that in practice, all employees of the office are available to every student.

A full-time duty counselor is employed by the Financial Aid Office in order to speak with students at any time. It is possible to make an appointment for private consultation with this counselor, and he will offer his support to you if any neglect occurs on the part of his co-workers.

As a student receiving financial aid, I am familiar with the frustration of the long lines and "the run-around treatment" often encountered at the Whitmore Financial Aid Office. The size of this University seems to necessitate a separation of powers into various departments, and so we must inevitably "run-around" to obtain various types of information. Long lines are another powerful indication of the size of this institution. To avoid mass confusion with-in the administration building, it is important that both students and employees are fully educated concerning bureaucratic policies and procedures. In this way, we may take advantage of whatever resources are offered by the bureaucracy.

George Benson

George Benson had been considered a premier Black Classical Music (BCM) artist for more than a decade, but even that status could prepare him for what transpired in 1976. It was a simply unprecedented event. It was not merely that Benson's Breezin' transformed the perennial critics' choice into an across-the-board people's hero; it was the scale with which Benson pulled off the feat. Never before had a BCM album so completely conquered the pop and Rhythm and Blues charts. Breezin' was in fact one of the Biggest Black Classical Albums of All Time. Double Platinum. The importance of Benson's achievement cannot be over-estimated. For years Black Classical players have been trying to recoup ground lost to pop artists in the '60s with little success. Benson finally cracked it, though, and his lead is already being followed by other established Black Classical Music artists.

Benson's route to a Top Ten single ("This Masquerade") and the monstrous Breezin' was anything but a direct path. He's originally from Pittsburgh, but has been living in New York since 1963. He did his first record (for RCA) back in '54 or '53, then later he sang with a group which featured organ, baritone and trombone. "I've always had funny combinations in my groups because I've never realized a set pattern for a band," says Benson, furthermore, "I believe if you can play, you can play with anybody. It can be a whistle, if the cat can play."

Benson began playing at age eight. His ukulele performance in a ghetto candy store drew raves and subsequently led to gigs at local parties and carnivals. "Managed" by some friends ("They got their cut, of course," he recalls, "25 cents on the dollar"), he even landed a brief engagement at a neighborhood nightclub. Before he was in his teens he had cut his first single and by fifteen he was contributing high falsetto vocals to a Frankie Lymon-styled vocal group. Though he did it well, singing was not destined to be Benson's key to musical success. Before long, he switched to guitar playing and joined amateur bands in Pittsburgh.

Instead of following rock and Rhythm and Blues models, the young Benson looked to Black Classical Music for his inspiration, listening to guitarists Charlie Christian, Wes Montgomery, Hank Garland and Grant Green. "I could tell by the first records I heard by each one of them that they were very vital to music," Benson explains. "Green because of his lyricism, Montgomery because of his knowledge of the instrument, his approach to harmony and theory. Hank Garland for his fire and technique and Charlie Christian because he could swing so hard and not lose his feeling."

It was not long before Benson graduated into the big leagues. He was just twenty (20) when Jack McDuff invited him to join his small ensemble. McDuff's bag was funky Rhythm and Blues but his repertoire included Black Classical Music pieces. Benson admits "Rhythm and Blues was natural to me but the BCM tune involved a lot of chord changes and I had to be more alert to play them; I began to like the challenge of inventing something new, as opposed to playing just for feeling."

In 1965 Benson left McDuff to form his own band, with Lonnie Smith on organ, Ronnie Cuber on baritone and drummer Phil Turner. Off to a flying start, Benson's solo work led to a succesion of albums (for Columbia, A & M and CTI), that has defined his as a steadily progressing, richly rewarding career. His albums with Fredie Hubbard, Stanley Turrentine, Esther Phillips and Hank Crawford, not to mention solo sets like Body Talk, Beyond the Blue Horizon and the Grammy-nominated White Rabbit both established Benson's credentials and contributed to the growth of instrumental Black Classical Music.

Breezin' was released early in '76 and wasted no time translating Benson's base of mainstay loyalists into an amalgan that cut across every sector of popular music. Produced by Warners staffer Tommy LiPuma, the album yielded chart hits "Breezin" and "This Masquerade." Some people expressed disbelief that someone so talented on guitar could be as equally proficient with his voice, as he was on "Masquerade."

Awards collared by Benson and Breezin! in Record World — Number One, Top Guitarists; Number One, Top Album; Number One, Top Male (BCM) Artist; in Billboard — Number One Instrumentalist; Number One (BCM) Artist; Number One Album.

Not content to rest on his laurels, Benson followed with In Flight (January, 1977), again produced by LiPuma. It featured six long tunes and indicated the guitarist was pretty unaffected by his new-found superstardom. As Benson himself remarked, "Despite the success of our single, we're not going to become a three minute song act. If it happens again, fine, but I'm basically an album artist."

The songs in In Flight ranged from a radical transformation of War's "The World is a Ghetto" to the driving "The Wind and I," written by Ronnie Foster, keyboardist in the Benson band.

A genuine human being, a man who's held onto an elusive commodity, intergrity, throughout his career. This is the inescapable conclusion about George Benson revealed through the grooves that just plain ring true to life.

Malcolm X Center

The Malcolm X Center is specifically designed to meet and strengthen the needs of Third World students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. The center is trying to meet the needs of the entire community by providing courses for students who have difficulties in meeting University requirements. The Malcolm X Center offers a course entitled "Racism Group Theory", which meets on Tuesdays from 7 p.m.-9 p.m. and also a course entitled "Black Culture as an Organizing Tool", which meets on Mondays and Wednesdays from 7 p.m.-10 p.m. These courses are open to the Third World Community, and the community at large.

The Malcolm X Center plays an outstanding role in providing cultural-educational and social enrichment in the Third World Community. The center is administered by a very qualified group of people. The coordinators are Consuelo Williams, Greg Maynard and advisor Carl McCarge. Other members of the staff are Pam Armstrong, Ian Clinton, Derek Davis, Michael Hughes, Lawrence Frith, Ralph Moore, Julie Robertson, Sherry Williams and Reginald Price. We are very much concerned with upcoming events and problems that might arise. We welcome everyone to come down to the center every Monday from 5 p.m.-7 p.m. and join in discussions about the Bakke Case, its implications and ramifications.

The center has a library of books about differing cultural groups and has films which are in the process of development. The center is also a place where students can come and take time out to relax after studying or just drop by and take advantage of the recreational equipment. The Centers weekly hours are: daily 12 noon until 1 a.m. Monday thru Friday. Monday thru Friday between the hours of 12 noon and 4 p.m. are study hours, 7 p.m. til 10 p.m. class time, 4 p.m. til 1 a.m. recreation time. If you feel lost or confused, Malcolm X center is waiting for you.

Malcolm X,

Alanta Conference

Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga
Political Analyst Nummo News

On October 24 and 25, there was a Southern Regional National Black Students Association Conference in Atlanta, Ga. The purpose of this meeting was for the Southern part of the association to become more unified and build for the National Conference. There were representatives from the Northern and Eastern regions of the National Black Students association. Together they decided to call for a larger meeting of all members of the N.B.S.A. in Atlanta, Ga. since most of the Black students in the country attend college in the South. It is also important to note that most of the black students that graduate from college attend black schools not white ones.

It is important to mention here the history of the N.B.S.A. On December 11, 1975 a call went out from the Afro-American Society at Tufts University in Medford, Mass. The Conference was called the National Black Students Solidarity Conference, it was held from Feb. 17 thru 23, 1976 at Tufts. Over 200 students from various parts of the country attended. Also attending the Conference were several people who have been leaders in the liberation movement, Queen Mother Moore, Akbar Muhammad Ahmed, John Henrik Clark, Robert Williams, John Bracey and Plathell Benjamin.

The Conference resulted in the intitiation of the National Black Student's Association. Conference participants were urged to return to their respective areas and begin working on building up the National Black Students Association.

In April of 1976 a statewide NBSA conference has been held at UMass, Amherst. During the summer of that year there were a lot of organizing going on around the country to build a viable NBSA that we would control, not outside forces. There has been many conferences held to build a strong viable National Black Students Association. The NBSA will have its first National Conference in Atlanta, Ga. on November 5 and 6, 1977.

The Conference will be held at Atlanta University. There will be workshops on Black students cutbacks, Affirmative Action being attacked, Political Prisoners Rights, Community Organizing, Tuturial programs, Ecomonic Development in the Black Community. We would like for serious students who are concerned about the welfare of their people to consider going to Atlanta, Ga. There will be more specific information about the conference in Black Affairs and Nummo News.

Within a year of the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham in which four young girls died, FBI investigators were pretty sure who did it.

They had suspects as well in most of the other 20 bombings which rocked Birmingham's black community in the eight years leading up to the murders which horrified Birmingham, the country and the world.

Now, 14 years later, Alabama's aggressive young Atty. Gen. Bill Baxley, who declares publicly and privately that he hates racist violence, has succeeded in obtaining state indictments against two avowed racists who were active in rabble-rousing in the Fifties and Sixties.

Robert E. Chambliss, now 73, a confessed Ku Klux Klan member in the Sixties, is in the Jefferson County jail charged with first degree murder in the killing of the girls.

Baxley grimly predicts that "a lot more" indictments will follow.

J. B. Stoner of Marietta, Ga., founder and big daddy of the National States Rights Party, was indicted for the 1958 bombing of the Bethel Baptist Church where the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, then president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, now of Cincinnati, was pastor.

Stoner will fight going to Alabama for trial.

A logical question is: If the FBI knew, away back then, who did it, why weren't the murderers arrested?

Knowing something and proving it are two different matters. The FBI is an investigative force, not prosecutorial.

Federal prosecutors in the Department of Justice simply didn't have enough physical evidence to go to trial and they didn't have any witnesses who would get on the stand and point a finger at the guilty parties.

Benson Tickets Still Available

There are still plenty of seats available for the George Benson Concert this Thursday evening (October 13th) 8 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage. George Bensen has been in the music industry for over twenty years. In the past year, he has won both national and international acclaim for his prize winning album, "Breezing", and his smash hit single, "Mascarade." On this tour he will be featuring his latest hits from his new album, "In Flight."

The University of Massachusetts Union Program Council is proud to present the extraordinary talents of this Jazz recording artist. He will be appearing in the Curry Hicks Cage, which will be marking an all important turning point with the reopening of the Cage for this concert and possible others. Benson is sure to get a capacity crowd, so buy your tickets NOW at TIX, on the main level of the U. Mass Student Union Building, (across from the post office). They will also be available in Amherst, at Faces of Earth, Sun Music, Backroom Records, and the Sound Room in Northampton. Prices are $5.00 with a valid U. Mass I.D., and $6.50 for the general public.

To All Asian Students of The Five-College Area

The Asian American Review is alive and going places! The Asian American Review is a magazine distributed by the Asian American Students Association of UMass. We are here to provide a forum for Asian American self expressions in the form of fictional and nonfictional works such as poetry, essays, and short stories. Other forms of self expressions are through cartoons, black and white drawings, and black and white photographs.

However, in order for this magazine to become a realization once more, we need your contributions. Therefore, we would like to extend an invitation to all students of Asian origin to help put together or to submit their creative works to the Asian American Review. In this way, we can all share a part of ourselves with the Asian community of the Five-College area.

We request that all works be submitted by the end of October to: Debbie Lee, 418 New Africa House, UMass., Amherst, Mass. 01003.

For more information, call on Tues. between 11:00-3:00 and on Wed. between 1:00-2:30 at 545-0517. Or call at night at 253-9961 or 256-6825 and ask for Debbie Lee in Rm 102.

Announcement

All CCEBS students with an interest in computer science or a related field should note that on Wednesday, October 26, CCEBS is sponsoring a field trip to the Digital Equipment Corporation in Maynard, Mass. All interested CCEBS students must sign up for this trip with Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House by Friday, October 21. All those taking the trip will meet at 8:00 a.m. on October 26th in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House.

CCEBS juniors and seniors interested in the areas of employee relations and personnel should contact Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House before Friday, October 21. A field trip for a personnel career day is being planned, and openings for this trip will be extremely limited.

Job Openings

CCEBS students interested in law and business should note that on Monday, October 17, a Case Western Reserve Law School recruiter will be coming to campus; and on Tuesday, October 18, a Northeastern University Business School Recruiter will be here. Both of these recruiters will speak with interested CCEBS students in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House on the dates mentioned. The time for these meetings is 3:30 p.m. All those interested must sign up for these visits with Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House by Friday, October 14.

Disco Will Be Put To A Test

On Wednesday, the sounds of Disco may be heard in the Blue Wall for the last time. Because, it was determined by the management of the Blue Wall, that Disco was not popular among the student body. Secondly, in terms of profit making (selling beer and other liquor), it was a bad business venture. This is why the Disco program has not been instituted this semester.

Historically, the placement of disco in the Blue Wall, came out of the 1975 Fall semester demonstrations against the Blue Wall for discrimination in hiring practices. Disco was initiated in the Blue Wall schedule the following year.

The main reasons, cited by the management, of the Blue Wall for not reinstating a full Disco program is obvious. The interest for Disco music, slowed down. The program was unprofitable in terms of beer and other liquor sales. Thirdly, the music was not acceptable among the student body as a whole.

Even though, I am not alleging any discrimination in the management reasoning. Disco is a small part of Black Contemporary music. Since our music is part of our culture, it is plain to see that this form of Black music will be tested Wednesday night.

The Disco scene in the past, was a reality because students took interest in this program. Mackimme Joe was the DJ during this period. Now K-Rock, wants to revitalize this program for the 1977-78 school year. Wednesday night will start off the Homecoming Weekend, and will determine the life or death of Disco in the Blue Wall.

ASSATA SHAKUR:
Denied transfer bid

Federal District Judge Clarkson Fisher denied Black activist Assata Shakur's request for a transfer to a women's prison May 5, thereby forcing her to remain in the all-male maximum security prison where she is currently jailed.

Shakur (Joanne Chesimard) was recently sentenced to life imprisonment plus 30 years following her conviction March 25 by an all-white jury on frame-up charges of murder and illegal weapons possession. Her conviction stems from a May 1973 shootout when New Jersey state troopers stopped the borrowed car Shakur was riding in. A state trooper and one of Shakur's companions were killed and Shakur was injured in the shootout.

After her conviction, Shakur was transferred from the windowless basement cell of the otherwise all-male Middlesex County Jail, where she had remained in solitary confinement for over a year, to Clinton Women's Prison. But within days, she was moved without prior notification to the isolated, all-male Yardville Correctional Center. Prison authorities cited "security" reasons for the unprecedented move. Shakur is the only woman in the prison of 870 inmates. She is incarcerated in a tiny cell with no privacy, fully exposed 24 hours a day to any guard or inmate who passes by.

'BROTHERS':
Jacksons file suit

Georgia and Lester Jackson, parents of slain Black activists Jonathon and George Jackson, have filed suit against Warner Bros. film company for its release of the film "Brothers."

The film is based on the prison experiences and murder of revolutionary George Jackson and exploits his relationship with Angela Davis, now head of the Communist Party-led National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression.

The Jacksons recently filed the $20 million suit in Los Angeles Superior Court, charging that the film is libelous and a "misappropriation of property and invasion of privacy."

PENDLETON 14:
KKK active in San Diego

Support continues to build in California to free the Black Marines charged for their November retaliation attempt against Ku Klux Klan (KKK) members, but the KKK is intensifying its attacks on the third world community.

At a May 6 press conference, local community members expressed their dedication to the struggle to free the Camp Pendleton 14 members still facing charges and called for all to stand up against Klan attacks.

Ten Black Marines, charged with offenses ranging from conspiracy to commit assault to attempted murder, are facing up to 72 years in prison for their Nov. 13 retaliation to Klan savagery at the southern California base. Four others have been acquitted or convicted on minor charges.

"The relationship between the KKK presence and activities at Camp Pendleton and the recent increase of racist oriented activities against Blacks and browns in San Diego County is very frightening," George Williams of the San Diego County Human Relations Commission told reporters. Williams called on all people to work to "turn back the tide of white reactionaries .... "

San Diego City Councilman Leon Williams released a resolution before the council calling for a full investigation of Klan activity. Ken Mfemaji, chairman of Nia — a Black cultural organization — called upon the Congressional Black Caucus to conduct an investigation.

The increase of Klan actions was fully exposed three weeks ag when four well-armed people wer arrested on their way to shoot up house in Paradise Hills, predominantly third world com munity. A police search of one o the men's houses produced mor weapons and Klan literature.

The man, Orville Watkins, known to be a friend of Davi Campbell, a KKK member at Cam Pendleton. Campbell testified earlier court proceedings that h often visited Watkins. Rober Rhody, who was also arreste served as bodyguard for nation KKK leader David Duke when Duk visited the Marine base sever months ago.

Police have also linked the four t an April 4 incident in which nin shots were fired into the home of Chicano family in Spring Valle Calif. No one was injured in th attack.

Other incidents include th blitzing of the University California-San Diego (UCSI campus with Klan literature; th receipt by five Black employes the American Federation of Stat County and Municipal Employes UCSD of racist literature believed be sent by the Klan; the running an advertisement for the Klan in th local morning newspaper, and number of cross burnings.

Even When the Cold Winds Blow

Face the reality of the rising sun: for the colorless dream is over. Do realize that now is the time for us to come to the aid of Unity. Besides, we are but held together by a single dimension of common culture and struggle intertwined with experience, thought and commitment. If we take a timeless look at ourselves, we will see the trouble... the trouble the world is in. Afterall, we the "living wonders" of this now debunked society, will rise triumphantly as the "phoenix of the Western Hemisphere." Already our soul-force, the drum-beat of our Motherland, has been permeated beyond the "rivers of our own kingdom".

Beware of the beast, for it lives only to destroy that which has been ours since the foundation of the worlds were laid. We are here, "to hear," for a short reason. Will we, too, add to the cause of the confusion of our young ones? NO! NO!
NO!
NO!
NO!
NO!

NO! Confusion is the state of disorder, which is the deathbed of our struggle for solidarity; moreover, we would surely be guilty of pre-meditated genocide, a two-fold death. Do not let it be said, "too late," respond to the call of Unity. Admittedly your response will be a token of the power that can guide the establishment of universal order..

Thus, the call of unity implies the oneness, as in spirit, aims, interests and feelings of all third world advocates and organizations; as fruitful harmony at its best is a creative union of opposite reasoning. Yield to reasoning, for it is the power to understand, as the groundwork of wisdom is rooted in sound judgement. Then, when all else has failed we will together make an earnest request to God, the creator and protector.

Friends, brothers and sisters — answer the trumpet of Unity: for self-control is one of the most exhilirating of pleasure. Behold, how good and pleasant it is to dwell together in Unity. For without firm and complete Unity, we continue to sanction the blasphemous rule of the oppressor. Hark!

Freedom fighting continues to rage

SALISBURY, Rhodesia – While in another part of the world, negotiators continued their quest to effect a peaceful transition to black rule in this country, the guerrilla warfare continued.

Another 29 lives were claimed in just one four-day span last week, according to the minority-rule government. One victim was a white army officer.

The military command said Rhodesian troops had killed 13 black nationalist guerrillas, six guerrilla recruits and eight black civilians whom they claimed were "actively assisting a terrorist gang." No details were disclosed.

A communique said that last Thursday, "A gang of terrorists entered a homestead in the Melsetter District (of eastern Rhodesia) and murdered" a white infant.

A government statement said the baby was wrested from the arms of her black nursemaid and bayoneted to death on the veranda of the farm house.

Defense sources said the servant gave an account of the slaying.

The communique said the baby's parents were not at the farm at the time of the attack because they had been ambushed by insurgents 15 minutes earlier. Neither was hurt. Defense sources said the ambush and the murder appeared to be unrelated.

Typically, government communiques attempt to make the guerrillas resemble blood-thirsty savages. They don't mention whites' past treatment of blacks or the fact that warfare itself tends to be savage.

One motive is to demonstrate that the blacks do not deserve to rule themselves. This was clearly evident in a further discussion on the guerrilas who killed the infant.

"The gang responsible for this brutal murder is of the same caliber as the men so euphemistically referred to as "the boys" by certain religious and nationalist organizations," the statement said.

This was an allusion to Roman Catholic nun Janice Ann McLaughlin of Pittsburgh, who – in a diary used by the prosecution as court evidence – referred to guerrillas as the boys she would join if she were black.

She was deported Sept. 22 instead of being tried on charges of "spreading alarm and despondency" for helping prepare "fact papers" alleging security forces routinely torture rural blacks to get information on guerrillas.

The latest casualties raised the reported death toll in five years of fighting to 5,744.

A Catholic spokesman said the Rev. Joseph Paschal Slevin, 43, of Ireland, has been ordered deported by Oct. 4, ending 15 years of missionary service in Rhodesia.

Rev. Slevin is superintendent of the Mount St. Mary mission in the guerrilla-frequented Wedza District of eastern Rhodesia. No reason for the expulsion order was given.

Young thinks Rhodesia due for '78 vote

UNITED NATIONS – "Joshua Nkomo's mission here is very political. He was invited by the Front Line presidents. I think he expects to be running for office within a year."

With that explanation of the visit last week to the United Nations by Nkomo, head of the Zimbabwe African People's Union, UN Ambassador Andrew Young indicated the optimism felt in many quarters today about the outlook for change to majority rule in Rhodesia.

Nkomo showed up at the United Nations when the Security Council was adopting an Anglo-U.S. proposal to permit Secretary General Kurt Walkheim to name a representative to take up a UN peacekeeping role with Rhodesian officials.

The Security Council approved the significant step and Rhodesia Prime Minister Ian Smith has agreed to have both the UN representative and a designated British official home in to discuss cease-fire and changeover.

During a roundtable meeting with newsmen attending a two-day editorial seminar at the United Nations, Young had more to say on the political situation in Rhodesia and Nkomo.

Nkomo, a favorite of the presidents of the African nations surrounding Rhodesia, has been tied to Robert Mugbe's Zimbabwe African National Union in a militant patriotic front that backs the guerrilla warfare.

Young told newsmen the guerrilla forces are doing mostly political work now in the rural areas where most of Rhodesia's 6 million blacks reside.

As Young explained the situation, Bishop Abel Muzorewa is strong in the cities, and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole thinks he can split the city and rural vote and win.

I think it is good that there are three politicians who think they can win an electiion," Young said.

The kind of help Nkomo can get through his backing of the Front Line group showed up when it was announced Smith and two key officials went to Zambia for secret meetings with President Kenneth Kaunda, a strong Nkomo supporter.

Among other things, Young told newsmen he felt a withdrawal of Cuban troops from Algola could be negotiated when the times comes.

I think the Cubans are dying to get out of Angola," he said.

Expressing his love for his UN job. Young nevertheless spoke strongly on the need for the U.S. to keep its human rights crusade in perspective.

I don't think we should be so self-righteous about human rights." he said, pointedly noting that while it has shortcomings the Soviet Union does things like provide jobs for its people, assures them of health care and education.

Former UN Ambassador William W. Scranton, chairman of the United Nations Association, told newsmen he thought they "rarely give any attention" to the needs of the Soviet Union in reporting disarmament efforts.

Scranton moderated a panel on arms control and disarmament whose participants included Russia's deputy permanent representative to the UN, Ambassador Yury E. Fokine and Ambassador James F. Leonard, equivalent ranked U.S. representative.

Fokine said no agreement in the arms control area is possible without mutual trust and goodwill.

He said both sides have suspicions, adding that we believe ours are more justified."

The North-South economic dialogue, law of the sea negotiations, human rights and the UN itself were topics around which panels were arranged for newsmen.

Pokrovsky said the purpose of the workshop, the first to be held in Africa, is to experiment at regional levels with different methods and techniques for the transformation of folk and oral traditions into performing arts teams.

The workshop is to be supervised by five or six African performing art specialists, assisted by Ghanaian dancers, musicians, reciters and performers.

Prices Soar as Economy Sputters Ahead

...BUT MR. PRESIDENT, DON'T YOU THINK THIS ADMINISTRATION COULD USE A LITTLE LESS SYMBOLISM AND A LITTLE MORE SUBSTANCE!
WHITE HOUSE

While President Jimmy Carter and seven other leaders of the capitalist world attempted to grapple with the mutual economic problems of their countries last week, the U.S. economy showed additional signs of both "recovery" and danger.

For the third month in a row, wholesale prices soard in April at an annual "double-digit" rate. At the same time, "official" unemployment declined to 7 per cent, its lowest level in 29 months.

Spurred by sharp increases in the cost of food and fuel, wholesale prices went up last month 1.1 per cent over March. Calculated over 12 months, the rise is at a 13.2 per cent annual rate. The boost follows a similar rise in March and an earlier increase in February prices of .9 per cent. For 1977 as a whole, so far, both the Wholesale Price Index and the Consumer Price Index have risen at an annual rate in excess of 10 per cent.

The one relatively "bright" spot in this picture was a slight slowdown in industrial prices, which rose only .6 per cent, somewhat less than the .8 per cent rise in March.

But even this "hopeful" sign seemed headed for trouble with the announcement by four major steel companies of a substantial boost in prices. Republic Steel, the fourth largest steel company in the country, announced price increases ranging from 6.8-8.8 per cent effective in the next few days. Youngstown Sheet and Tube, the nation's eighth largest steelmaker, announced similar increases simultaneously. U.S. and National Steel (No. 1 and No.3) quickly followed suit.

The price rise follows a report showing a substantial drop in profits for the steel industry as a whole during the first quarter of 1977. If the price boosts stand – and the Council on Wage and Price Stability has denounced them, terming them "excessive" – the effects on the economy will be far-ranging. Steel is an essential component of most major industries.

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Meanwhile, unemployment hit its lowest level since the end of 1974. The drop from 7.3 per cent in March to 7 per cent in April meant an absolute decline in the number of jobless of 327,000. That leaves 6.737 million people "officially" out of work. The decline in unemployment figures was accompanied by a sizeable rise of 500,000 people holding jobs, bringing total employment to a record level of more than 90 million.

Still, the new figures do not mean that the capitalist economy is finally solving what has been its most stubborn manifestation by weakness. By historic standards, the rate of unemployment is unprecedentedly high two years after the recession "officially" turned around. Further, government economists are now speaking of "2-tiered unemployment," pointing out that the drop in joblessness principally affected people who have previously been employed. It made very little dent among a growing army of people who have never or rarely held jobs – principally, Blacks, women and youth.

What this means is an absolute expansion in the permanent industrial reserve – a fact which will continue to serve as a brake on the wage demands of the employed and will undoubtedly be a source of intensified social contradiction.

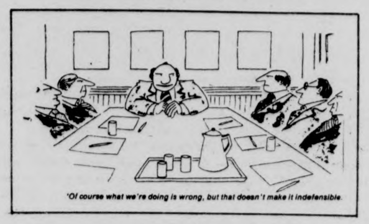
Killing Panel allowed to seek immunity grant



'Of course what we're doing is wrong, but that doesn't make it indefensible.

WASHINGTON (UPI) – The House has voted overwhelmingly to allow the committee investigating the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. to ask federal courts to grant immunity to witnesses.

Chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said the select committee on assassinations probably already had the power to make immunity applications to court, but the power should be spelled out clearly so there would be no question.

Stokes said the committee already had identified 100 to 150 witnesses in the Kennedy case alone for whom immunity might be requested.

If these immunity requests were challenged under the committee's current mandate, months might be required to resolve the issue. And if the court's ruling went against the committee it would "seriously hinder" the course of the investigation, according to Stokes.

Rep. Robert Bauman, R-Md., opposed the resolution, saying the committee should be forced to ask the house for permission to grant immunity to each individual witness.

Bakke Debate Held Tonight

During 1977, the Bakke Decision has become the most controversial political and sociological issue in the United States.

The Bakke decision is a recent California Supreme Court ruling that threatens to eliminate special Admissions, Affirmative Action and other related programs on the campuses, communities and work places across the country.

In 1973-74 Alan Bakke, a White engineer in his mid-30's, applied to the UC Davis Medical School. Both times he applied he was rejected. Later, through the urging of the UC Davis Administration itself, he filed suit against the Special Admission Program. Bakke charged that he was a victim of "reverse discrimination", that he was rejected because he was White, and that other "less qualified" Third World students were admitted through the Special Admissions program.

Those Who oppose the Bakke Decision argue that it is an attack on equal opportunity in education and employment for minorities and women. An anti-Bakke Decision Coalition has organized a National day of Solidarity against the Bakke Decision on October 15.

On Tuesday, October 11 at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, at the University of Massachusetts, at Amherst, there will be a debate on the Bakke decision. The debate will be held between lawyers, faculty, and students. The debate is being co-ordinated by the Office of Third World Affairs as an educational forum for the entire Valley community.

Rule change planned to aid minority loans

WASHINGTON – The Small Business Administration plans "a policy change that could boost minorities' and women's chances of owning broadcast outlets.

SBA said last week it soon will consider government loans in its regulations. Purchases of newspapers or stations through government loans had been opposed for years because of potential conflicts with the First Amendment.

Though the loans would be limited to $500,000, an SBA spokesman said the purchase price of 80 per cent of the nation's radio stations would fall within that range.

The decision follows lobbying conducted since May by former Federal Communications Commission member Benjamin Hooks. He had argued that financial aid would help to expand media ownership among minorities, who now own very few of the 7,000 stations.

CRC to push city agencies to up black hiring

BALTIMORE – Pressure will be put on some of the city agencies which have been slack in hiring blacks and other minority groups.

John Ferron, director of the Community Relation Commission (CRC) said Monday his group intends to work very closely with those agencies, which were identified in a recently released report as deficient in hiring blacks, to see that they develop effective affirmative action plans.

"We sent these agencies a separate letter along with the report requesting a meeting to begin work on the plan," Ferron said.

Ferron's statement was made in the wake of the CRC report which showed several agencies continue to resist hiring blacks.

It also showed blacks and women city employes make less money than white males.

The agencies include the Fire Department, the Law Department, the comptroller's office, and the Department of Transit and Traffic, where black employment is less than 25 per cent.

Ferron said his agency will try "friendly persuasion" to get the other agencies to come up with plans which comply with the mayor's affirmative action plan.

"If that doesn't work," he said, "then we'll get the (CRC) commissioners to meet with the agency heads to convince them to develop a plan."

Ferron added if persuasion does not work then CRC will issue commission complaints against the agencies.

He also said those agencies which receive federal funds may have their funding pulled if compliance is not met.

The survey shows the Comptrollers office work force is 22 per cent black, the Fire Department, 14 per cent; the Law office, 17 per cent and Transit and Traffic, 17 per cent.

The report also shows that although employment of blacks in city agencies in January was about 54 per cent, agencies operating under state law were just about 17 per cent.

It further shows in a special sampling done in April, that more than 55 per cent of all white male employes earn more than $13,000 and 16 per cent make more than $16,000, while only 17 per cent of black males earn $13,000.

However, 50 per cent of those black males were found to be in the $8,000 to $9,900 range.

BREAKING OUT OF THE LONG SILENCE

(For Suni Paz and Ramíro Fernández)

Breaking out of the long silence,
walking on thorns out of the death
of her parched valley of no work,
no sky, nothing to look forward to,
she dragged her swollen, bound feet
into the plush city of hit-and-run.

Having broken the long, steep slide,
walked away from the sucking waste
of rumoured jobs, sun-tricked pride,
river stones in her mouth, no hope,
she cursed the day she left behind
the atavistic silence and the dead.

Then, turning to her first resolve,
making the city of zinc sprout trees
and ripe fruits to flood her drought,
she sprang like claws on the backs
of the brick hard metropolitan men
and ripped their lean meat, sweetly.

Recently, she and her five children
(unfathered by a surfeit of fathers)
have driven urban stakes of their own
down into the ever-booming iron aorta;
yet they're now blindly near the edge
of a new, ironic, descending solitude.

"Images of Divine — Root of Racism

"What would happen if the white people were to sit in churches for over 300 years with the image of a blackman on a cross, representing God? What kind of effect would this eventually have on their minds?"

What happens when a black child and a white child grow up in an environment where they are constantly being shown the image of God in a white man's body? The white child subconciously grows up feeling superior to the black child, and why not. He feels he has a direct association with the most powerful force in the universe, God. You have just been exposed to the development of white supremacey.

Simple as it may seem, this mere image of God with white skin, has and is still crippling the minds of both black and white.

The black child grows up with this image of divine contantly being flashed before him. He subconciously feels obligated to submit to God and anything associated with God, in this case, white people. This is how the "Uncle Toms" and "Steppin Fetchits" developed.

Whereas the white child could see the connection between his white skin and the white skin of Jesus on the cross, so could the Black Child. This developed a worshipping of white people by black people. At the same time that inferiority complex was being branded in the minds of black people, a strong superiority complex was growing in white peoples minds. The media showed us how slavery survived with its recaptured version of "Roots". The slaves were controlled by two things, the image of God on the cross in a white man's body and the supposed word of God, the Bible. "Racism has never presented itself more clearly." These same tricks that were used to mentally enslave us are still being used today.

We can all clearly see and hollar "Racism" when a qualified blackman is refused a job and a less qualified white man is given the job, less than a minute later. We can all see racism black homes are vandalized when in white neighborhoods. But why do we fail to see racism when we go to church every Sunday and bow and pray to that white image on the cross?

Most black people have grown up closely associated with some type of religion, most of the time the religion being Christianity.

Just as it would be racist for black people to devise an image of God in their image and set it up as a representation of God, so it is with a white image of God.

We live in an extremely racially and sexuallt discriminatory world. This will continue until we force racist people both black and white, who control the masses with this conditioning, to remove racist images of divine from the society.

If people cannot now see the obvious racist they are being exposed to, they are mentally dead and evidently wish to stay that way.

It is natural for a man to want to destroy anything that falsifies and distorts his creation. It is also natural for a man to want to be free. How much more clearly can the signs be painted? If we truly want to be free, as we have cried for the past 400 years, then remove this racist worshipping that is deforming all minds from the community. The future of the "world family" depends on their ablility to mentally come together. KZ

Debate on Bakke case draws 400

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Some 400 people crowded Mahar Auditorium last night to hear a lively debate over the controversial Allan Bakke case due to be heard by the U.S. Supreme Court this month.

Moderator Brian DeLima, student senate speaker, opened the proceedings by providing background information on the case which involves Allan Bakke, a white California space engineer who applied to the University of California-Davis Medical School five years ago and was rejected.

Bakke subsequently sued the school, charging that some minority students applying in a special "disadvantaged students" program were less qualified and therefore he was discriminated against because he was white. Bakke's case was upheld by the California Supreme Court and will go to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The debate began with members of the two three-member teams alternating with their seven minute opening statements.

Eric Greene, professor of law at Boston University, opened for the pro-Bakke side by saying that for the past 100 years the Supreme Court has regarded decisions based on race as "suspect." He continued by saying that the court has said race-based decisions should be made only to remedy specific problems of discrimination.

"Past history indicates that UCal-Davis has never racially discriminated," said Greene.

Greene added that the unviersity's special program was designed and administrated by a non-elected, ad hoc committee that was not looked over by anyone. Greene asserted that if the committee was appointed by the California legislature it would have been more credible.

Greene also pointed out that race-based decisions of this sort were "dangerous to our society" and they "exacerabated" racism in this country.

Professor Denise Carty Benia of Northeastern University rebuked Greene by saying there were many cases where the Supreme Court supported race-based decisions in instances other than specific cases of discrimination.

Benia added that all of society has discriminated against minorities throughout American history and all institutions are therefore responsible, even UCal-Davis.

Benia asserted that the Davis program is designed for economically and educationally disadvantaged students and that is where minority students fall.

Benia was amused at Greene's claim that affirmative action would divide society racially, saying "This society has always been divided according to race."

"I am not flaming the fires of racism," said Benia, "but we will use race-based classifications in terms of equal distribution."

Allan Kort, Ph.D in Russian history and director of the Outreach Program of the Greater Boston Hillel Society arguing for Bakke, said those who fought in the 1960's for civil rights were trying to create a society where people were judged on merit not race." Kort continued that the quota systems of UCal-Davis were not in line with these principles.

But it was in Kort's attempt to provide a historical perspective of racism that the next debator from the anti-Bakke side, Professor Plaisel Benjamin, formerly of the UMass Afro-American Studies Dept., said he showed a "profound ignorance."

"My colleague shows a complete lack of understanding of American History," assailed Benjamin.

Benjamin's statement was charged with emotion and as the crowd responded with applause and chatter, Benjamin said that while 16 places were reserved for minority students, 84 were reserved for whites and five places were even reserved for personal friends of administrators "with all admission requirements waived."

Greene later retorted that those 84 spaces were not reserved for whites, but rather anyone.

DNA topic at town open forum

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

DNA was again the basis for debate last night at an open forum held at Amherst Junior High School.

Paul Newlin, sponsor of the warrant article to go before the Oct. 17 Amherst Town Meeting, pointed out the recombinat DNA controversy has been going on for years.

"In Cambridge, the town manager selected a committee of those not involved with direct research to evaluate a lab and investigate a possible containment problem," he said.

Scott Thatcher of Science for the People in Boston, explained and described the need for containment. "The most common organism to receive a recombinant DNA gene is a bacterium called E. Coli. It is found in the intestines of humans and other warm blooded animals. It can live in garbage and in sewerage," he said.

"Thus we have a need for biological and physical containment. Genetically weakened strains of E. Coli are used since they cannot live outside the lab," he added.

In addition to these safety requirements, the National Institute of Health (NIH) has set up guidelines for those funded by federal grants. Marvin Kalkstein, of University Without Walls, said, "I think it is a fact that the University is ready to abide by the NIH guidelines whether or not they are funded by federal grants.

"Although health and safety must be taken into account, the purpose of the debate is to start people realizing the seriousness of the situation," he said.

Newlin added, "We would like to give the people of the community the power to decide how they think this research should go on. Our motion would entail the creation of a committee that would listen to testimony from both sides of the issue and deal with the social and ethical implications of research."

Lynn Miller, acting dean of the natural science department at Hampshire College, said "Sooner or later, all of those experiments will be done. The issue as I see it is really social control. The question is whether or not the answer is worth pursuing in the context of society. Is the town going to control its own destiny or is it going to be run by experts."

Kalkstein said, "The people ought to be able to decide the issue. It is not so complex that people cannot understand what is going on. Let us be sure that it is worth doing, then let us do it. We must not stampede into it, but we can make a decision after we take the time to understand the issue," he added.

Selectmen to wait on DNA move

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen will wait until next Monday night to make a decision on a proposed ban on recombinant DNA research at area colleges and universities.

Board Chairman Diana H. Romer last night said that although the selectmen are opposed to an "open-ended" ban to halt research indefinitely, it would be premature to make a final decision before further studies can be conducted.

"We are opposed to the letter of the article, but support the spirit behind it," Selectman Nathaniel M. Reed said.

"This is not a desirable motion to keep to the letter," Romer said.

A proposed ban on all recombinant DNA research is scheduled to appear on the agenda at the Oct. 17 special Town Meeting. Currently, there is no local experimentation in the field being conducted.

Amherst College has plans to conduct low hazard research, but says it can wait up to one year before implementing research plans. UMass has said its plans for low hazard research will not be enacted for at least 18 months.

Both UMass and Amherst College, however, are opposed to a town-imposed ban as proposed by the petitioners. At an informational session held last week UMass Dean of Graduate Studies Eugene Piedmont told the selectmen "The idea of a moratorium is harmful and we are opposed to it." Piedmont suggested the town proceed with examing specific proposals rather than waiting to set up citizen "bio-hazard" committees.

In an opinion submitted to the board last night, Town Attorney John F. Murphy Jr. said the proposed ban as it stands would be "unenforceable.". The report did not elaborate further.

Romer said last night a strong movement to strike a compromise on the terms of the ban seems to be developing between the proponents of the indefinite ban and representatives from area schools. She said she hoped a compromise petition would be presented to the board before the town meeting.

Romer did make clear that the petition in its-present form would not be accepted by the board. She said the board would not agree to a moratorium of any kind without a definite deadline attached. If no alternations are made in the proposal by Monday, Romer said the board will be obliged not to give their support.

A group of area citizens and scientists called the Coalition for Responsible Genetic Research petitioned the town meeting to ban the research until safety and ethical questions have been satisfactorily addressed. The petitioners last week called for the establishment of a committee of nine lay people to evaluate testimony on recombinant DNA research before research is allowed.

DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) is the carrier of the genetic code that determines the characteristics of all living things. Recombinant DNA is the product of two organisms split and rejoined to form a third substance not normally found in nature. Opponents of recombinant DNA claim these new combinations may present grave public health problems.

UMASS learns handicapped's problems

By TERRY COLUMBUS
Collegian Staff

With an increase in the number of handicapped students attending UMass this year, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs, established in 1973, feels the need for all those on campus to gain a better understanding of the physically handicapped.

For this reason, yesterday was titled "Handicap Awareness Day." According to Merle Ryan, coordinator of Deaf Services, "The purpose of Awareness Day is to present people with an awareness of the architectural and attitudinal barriers that affect the lives of the handicapped."

Various ongoing events that epitomized this distinction were the wheelchair obstacle course, the blind tour and the audio and visual tests. The blind tour entailed find one's way from the Student Union to the eighth floor of the Campus Center, via elevator, wearing two eye patches, while accompanied, though unassisted, by one other person. The wheelchair obstacle course covered ground from the Student Union, down an elevator, through the underpass to the concourse and up the outside ramp.

The main objective of these tasks places emphasis on the practical aspects of mobility which governs the lives of those unphysically fit.

Student Government Association co-Presidents Pinky Batiste and Jon Hite were among those present at yesterday's activities. Both participated in the wheelchair obstacle course and in the blind tour.

"It was very difficult," Hite said of his experience in a wheelchair. "It's difficult to adjust. even places you consider close aren't accessible to a wheelchair. My office is not accessible to the handicapped."

The special event of the day was a sign language performance in the Student Union ballroom given by the Sign Company Three, in which two students, Marylee Washburn and Maureen Leombruno, one former student, Robin Fallabella and guest Morag Paget performed some songs in sign language. Paget also added to the presentation with her poem, "You Have To Be Deaf To Understand."

Speaking at a luncheon held at the Campus Center was William Field, dean of students, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, Mike West of the chancellor's office and student Sandra Cohn. Special thanks were extended to van drivers Doug Kerr, Meggie Murphy, Fred Range and department assistant, Bill Demuta for their assistance and cooperation.

UMass is continuing to provide improved access to educational opportunities for academically qualified, physically disabled students. As a product of this developmental thrust, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs helps to provide special support services and identify supportive resources while advocating a barrier-free environment.

When asked early yesterday afternoon if he was pleased with the awareness program's progress, Paul Appleby, coordinator of Handicapped Student Affairs said, "So far, yes, I am very pleased. There is not quite the turnout present that we had hoped for, but there has been a constant trickle of people coming in."

Jean Oppedisano was one of the students who did come in and experience for herself what being handicapped in a wheelchair was like. Oppedisano said of her experience, "It's tough, it really is. It involves a lot of arm work. And it's amazing how restricted you do become."

When asked if she now felt herself to be more aware of the handicapped student's situation of campus, Oppedisano said, "Most definitely. I can now see many of the difficulties faced by these students."

Hampshire sets up committee on racism

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Investigation into racial problems at Hampshire College will be released in a report that "hopefully will act as a precedent and be self-sustaining over time," the chairperson of the new Hampshire College Committee on Racism said last night.

Frank Holmquist, appointed by Hampshire College President Adelle Smith Simmons to chair the committee following the cross burning incident there on Sept. 24, said the committee aims to "catalog a list of grievances of the Third World people which we will gather and publish to the Hampshire College community."

The committee appointed by Simmons includes Third World students Woody Wilson, Malika Jones and Pam Edidin; staff members Fran Anderson and Tim Diehl; and faculty Holmquist, Josephine Abady and Lloyd Hogan.

Publication of the committee's findings will not take place until the end of this semester, possibly later, according to Holmquist, who stressed the extensive work in setting up policies and guidelines needed to alleviate the racial problems.

The committee will talk to Third World students, faculty and staff as well as administrative members of Hampshire College in order to produce their report. Holmquist said there are other self-help processes underway on campus, including a "series of workshops and speakers to deal with the issues of racism."

Holmquist said the committee's report will be an attempt to explain the "chronic problems" stemming from the fact that the "Third World does not have much confidence in the white administration, faculty and staff." Although major changes cannot be guaranteed, "the alternative to this is to do nothing," he said.

Holmquist said that since 1970, the issue of racism "has gone back into the closet on all college campuses." Because the public can only deal with a few issues at a certain time, racism was "demoted" when issues such as sexism and ecology were "elevated," according to Holmquist.

"We don't have consistent supports to deal with the issue of racism because we lack the movements of the sixties," he said. Holmquist said he felt a sense of complacency has come along and "what we need is a much more concerted effort to deal with the issue."

The aim of the committee is to explain the nature of racial problems at Hampshire and why relations are so strained. The cross burning incident which brought about the need for the committee was received by Hampshire students as "a very real and immediate threat of violence to Third World members" according to Holmquist, and was accompanied by a sense of frustration.

By cataloging the grievances of the Third World community and identifying the source of conflicts, Holmquist said awareness and sensitivity would be increased. The committee's report will be the result of extensive conversations with Hampshire College members to achieve this objective.

"We do hope that Hampshire College will take the problem seriously and deal with it as such," Holmquist said.

SWA endorses pot petitions

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) last night agreed to endorse two separate petitions in favor of marijuana decriminalization.

Both petitions are now circulating around campus. The first petition seeks to reduce possession of marijuana to a misdemeanor punishable by a $50 fine and could take effect in Massachusetts by 1978.

The second petition seeks to amend the state constitution by granting individuals "the right to plant, grow, harvest and possess marijuana," and could take effect by 1980 according to Russell Swan, co-chairman of the Massachusetts Marijuana Initiative Committee. Russell said the Alaskan state government has legalized marijuana possession, and he would like to see Massachusetts do the same.

In other action, the SWA last night approved motions to:

— spend $422 to reopen a wood-working facility in John Adams which would repair University furniture for students.

— loan $240 to reopen the Washington Pizza Kitchen because it is in debt.

— buy a $97 alarm system to protect $5,000 worth of Southwest Audio-Visual Center equipment.

— endorse National Armband Day today in memory of the May 4, 1970 Kent State killings. One thousand armbands will be given away today in the Campus Center.

In other news, the Washington Pizza Kitchen experienced a $458 deficit at the end of last year, according to Joe Dullea, co-manager.

Mass Legislature kills Noble's gay rights bill

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts House, following more than two hours of heated debate, yesterday rejected a bill which would have prohibited discrimination against homosexuals in a large number of state jobs.

The measure, written by avowed lesbian Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, went down to a 101-120 defeat despite support from Speaker Thomas P. McGee, D-Lynn, and three other Democratic leaders.

Noble said her bill only sought to bring state law into compliance with federal regulations and would not indicate House acceptance of homosexual activity. She said the legislation applied only to civil service employees and not teachers or other "sensitive" positions.

"If you do a job, what you do in private is nobody's business," she said. "We are not asking you to say 'Yes, homosexuality is a valid life style."

The debate grew most bitter when Rep. C. Vincent Shea, D-Worcester, who opposed the measure, accused Noble, of being a "hypocrite.". The remark caused a sudden silence in the chamber and a brief recess.

Shea objected to a statement by Noble that sexual conduct should be a private matter. He said Noble had appeared on a nationally televised talk show to discuss homosexuality and her role in the Legislature.

Noble asked if her television appearance had reflected badly on the Legislature.

Shea retored Noble had failed to read between the lines, then added, "The point I was trying to make is that you're a hypocrite."

The Supreme Court last week let stand a lower court ruling that states have the right to determine hiring policy regarding homosexuals.

"Legislation of this nature should not come before us because the Supreme Court has ruled that it is immoral and didn't go any further," said Rep. Edward P. Coury, D-New Bedford.

"There are a whole range of private activities in the state that are illegal: adultery, fornication — riding a motorcycle without a helmet," said Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston.

Ex-Hotel students will remain unified

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

Former student residents of the Campus Center Hotel last night at a meeting decided that, despite attempts by the administration, they would not relinquish their group unity.

William F. Field dean of students, was there briefly to answer questions of the group. When asked about his willingness to deal with them, he said he was personally willing to deal with grievances on an individual basis.

"I can not justify what has happened, the administrators could have seen this coming for the past few years," Field said. Field seemingly evaded questions from the group regarding their negotiations again stating he would deal with all problems on an individual, one-to-one basis. He did make an allowance that he would negotiate specific privileges for two students present who complained about having been moved a total of five times.

On the question of the petitions presently being circulated by members of the group, Field said, much to the dismay of the group, "Many of the demands are simply not reasonable." He also said these students would have first priority over incoming freshman for the over 1000 rooms he expects will open up at the start of spring semester. He then left the meeting.

Getting into business, co-chairpersons of the meeting Billy Walsh and Brian Burke led the group in a discussion of how they were to handle the situation.

LSO representative Jim Starr said that in compliance to Field's request he'd like all former residents of the Campus Center with grievances they wish to bring up to the administration write brief summaries of their problems and bring them to SU 922 by 4:30 p.m. tomorrow.

It was also agreed the petitions which Field objected to strongly would be used if the small group discussions with Field were not handled satisfactorily.

A spokes-group was appointed to help present individual cases to Field. Students will band together in small groups with common problems when their grievances are made known.

Any decisions affecting the group on a whole will be made only by the spokes-group with the entire groups' approval. They feel it would be a mistake to try and present the students without their knowing exactly how it's affecting them.

One of the few students remaining in the CC Hotel, Chuck Tringale, their elected student senator said, "I strongly feel that the administration is trying to break student unity so they can tear us apart individually. I also feel that all the time we spent promoting our cause should not be overlooked."

Walsh said, "I am very discouraged that many of the former hotel residents haven't turned out to these meetings. I feel that their opinions and support would be very helpful to the group."

In a final statement, Burke said, "No matter what the eventual outcome is, I hope it will be satisfactory to both the students and the administration."

English dept. to hold career workshop

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Many commong misconceptions, problems, and fears about choosing English as a major will be discussed tomorrow night at the English department's first Career Exploration workshop for English Majors at 7:30 p.m. in Bartlett 206.

The workshop is not only for the 325 declared English majors at UMass, but for prospective majors and those with combined majors such as journalism-English.

According to John Clayton, undergraduate advisor for the English department, the purpose of the workshop will be to catch English majors early in their academic studies, and give them an idea of what they can do with a major in English.

"Lots of majors don't have an idea of where they are going," says Clayton, "They like English, but don't think it will get them anywhere. We know statistically that this isn't true."

There and two other misconceptions about majoring in English are typical of those which Clayton hopes to clear up at the workshop.

One is that English majors can only teach English. "Teaching is valuable, but there are lots of other possibilities," says Clayton, "An increasing variety of jobs now are being filled by English majors."

English is also an excellent major as a preliminary to professional work in law, business, medicine, commerce, and federal service, he says.

The other misconception is that students in college should train for specific jobs. "There is a difference between job training and career training," says Clayton, "specific jobs disappear in five years."

An example of that were the people who trained to be medical technicians, but found there weren't any jobs when they finished school.

Since 80 per cent of the work force leaves their speciality in five years, it isn't bad to major in something general like English or philosophy, according to Clayton. "A solid liberal arts background is a good basis for developing a career," he says.

"The important thing is to learn flexibility and adaptability," Clayton pointed out, "English gives both of those, as well as communication skills, a general cultural background, and the ability to organize ideas and interpret and synthesize materials."

To show English majors there are other opportunities besides teaching available to them, Ellen Wolfe from the Office of Internships will be at the workshop.

According to Wolfe, there are internships at publishing houses, newspapers, magazines and research facilities, as well as in public relations for prospective or declared English maiors.

Also present at the workshop will be Don Bank from the Career Development Center, Gloria Zeiger from the English Education program, and Elizabeth Wilen-bert, a counselor for the Community Development Center.

Literature about majoring in English at UMass will be available, as well as a new pamphlet entitled "English — The Pre-professional major."

Senate to consider seat at faculty talks

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate tonight will consider motions to establish a collective bargaining committee to coordinate student involvement in negotiations between faculty and administration, and to establish a transit budget and an advisory committee to help determine transit service at the University.

The collective bargaining committee would find a candidate for the position of Undergraduate Student Observer at the faculty-administration bargaining table, subject to the approval of the senate. The committee would also be responsible for articulating the students' position on the issues involved, to be presented to the negotiators by the student observer.

The collective bargaining committee would also create a negotiating subcommittee if needed "to represent students in negotiable agreements between students and other parties on a University-wide level." The committee would be composed of five student senators and the student observer.

The purpose of the transit budget and advisory committee, according to the proposal, is "to assist the University and the student senate's budget committees in determining the qualitative, quantitative, and fiscal levels of transit service and field trip service to be provided by and to the University community."

The proposal for the committee does not discuss what authority it would have or exactly what decisions it would be responsible for.

Dinosaurs once roamed Amherst

By MARIANNE TENNEY
Collegian Staff

How did the jolly dinosaur
Improve each shining era?
By getting large and specialized Extinction drawing nearer.
"Blue Book"

We students of UMass are not the only ones who have traveled these hallowed grounds. Dinosaurs once roamed about here and Rouville F. Gingras, owner of the Granby Dinosaur Museum, has uncovered much evidence attesting to the existance of these "Terrible Beasts". Last month, Gingras made history with the discovery of the largest dinosaur track ever found intact.

The imprint, which Gingras believes to have been left 180 to 200 million years ago, is 59 inches long and 33 inches wide. It is a three-toed track that appears to come from a 70 foot long animal that walked on two legs, he said. Next spring, he hopes to uncover the other track in order to measure the stride of the dinosaur and authenticate its size.

In 1971 Gingras had found a print that was 41 inches long, but it was destroyed by frost heaves. Fearful that the same thing might happen to his most recent print he is taking many precautionary steps. He plans to protect it by enclosing it in a glass shield and covering it with many bags of leaves for warmth. Eventually he will seal it in glass and vinyl.

Rouville Gingras was not always a paleethnologist. It all began in 1969 while he was digging for an addition on his home. His eight-year-old daughter, who had been studying dinosaurs in school, discovered what was found to be a real reptilian track, while playing outside. Thus Gingras began devoting must of his time to the uncovering of fossils. It was not until two years later, in 1971, that he built his museum which is located in front of his home on route 202 in Granby.

All of Gingras' prints were found in two acres of shale strata, in a quary at his museum and home. He has found 25 different species and believes it was the site of a feeding or breeding ground for the ancient beasts.

Gingras began digging for his most recent print last May. It was not until mid-September that he finished uncovering it completely, The process could have been sped up with the aid of an assistant but Gingras is alone in his work. When I asked him why he had no help, he seemed frustrated. The source of his frustration lay in the fact that he has tried to get students of paleethnology to help him but can't pay them and as a result he is alone.

He seems disillusioned with the fact that students would not want to help for the sheer intrinsic value involved. "It would be a beautiful field for education. We have only scratched the surface and there is so much more to be found, but I'm alone to do it."

It seems the only time I really thought about dinosaurs in the past was when I was watching the Flintstones. But after having talked with Gingras and seen the museum, a new awareness for our ancient ancestors has arisen in me. It is truly a remarkable thing, and as Gingras said, "It's no doubt we've got them here". See for yourself.

High Notes...

The question this week is: "Who is Pleasure?" Hopefully, after you read this, you'll have an idea of who this group is.

The important name to remember is Mr. Wayne Henderson, the creative force behind At Home productions. Henderson was once the main force behind the Crusaders. He broke away from the Crusaders and ABC and went west to Fantasy and created and-or polished such groups as Side Effect, Smoke (for Chocolate City Rec) and his best project, Pleasure.

The sound of Pleasure is hard to define as they acquire comfortably many forms. They range from the hardest-core jazz to the softest R&B ballads available. They provide something for everyone and avoid spreading themselves too thin in any one department. They can relax you, move you, and they can make it easier to fall in love.

They have two LPs out on the Fantasy label; ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES and JOYOUS. Their first LP had such pieces as Ghettos of the Mind, The Love of My Life, and the quiet monster, Let's Dance. My favorite is the entrancing, beautiful ballad, The Love of My Life. This side means a lot to me and I'll bet it's had the same effect on other people too. Their latest LP is Joyous and the highlight here is the churning, boogie sound of the singled title cut; "Joyous." This side reminds me of "Let's Dance" from their first effort.

With Pleasure, one minute you're pattin' your feet and the next, your mind's in the cosmos and then later still, watch out because you could be slippin' into loveland. Pleasure takes that many forms and provides a good vehicle for each.

Have a good Homecoming Weekend and I'll see ya' next week.

Anti-Bakke demonstration scheduled for this Friday

University of Massachusetts at Amherst students will demonstrate against the Bakke decision this Friday, Oct. 14, at 11:00 a.m. in front of the Student Union building.

The Bakke decision is a recent California Supreme Court ruling which threatens to eliminate special admissions, Affirmative Action, and other related programs on the campus, communities, and work places across the country.

Alan Bakke charged he was the victim of "reverse discrimination" when supposedly "less qualified" Third World students were accepted to the UC Davis medical school. Bakke had been denied admission twice.

Demonstration organizers claim that "reverse discrimination" is meaningless in the context of a society which has historically institutionalized racism. They predict the Bakke decision will reverse the civil rights gains of the '60s.

Who killed Dick Gregory's best friend?

By NKRUMAH LUMUMBA OLINGA

Monday evening at 10:55 p.m., I gave Mr. Dick Gregory a telephone call to get the facts on our friend's death. Gregory informed me that Mike Watley had gone to Boston, Mass. When Watley stepped out of Gregory's car (he was driving Gregory's car at the time) he was immediately killed. The reports from witnesses stated that the car was going approximately 60 to 80 miles an hour.

Watley was a very close friend of Gregory's. Gregory and myself feel that this was an organized killing of our friend. The facts in Watley's death are contradictory. The police department of Boston stated that there were no witness to the killing, but they put out on the A.P.A. that a Black man in a black van was seen by witnesses leaving the scene of the accident.

A white student from the Collegian called the Boston police department to get the Trama report by their office. She stated that she was told by by them that a white male was driving the black van. It is interesting that U.P.I. and A.P.A. did a white out of this story. They did not inform the public about this mysterious hit and run. This story did not go out to the mass media until Tuesday morning. We think that something is wrong with the entire hit and run version. The Boston police later said that there were several witnesses to this hit and run.

We want to know why the police lied to Gregory and reporters. The people must demand the truth about this senseless murder. I will inform readers next Wednesday, about more facts in this case.

We feel that Watley was killed as an indication of some sort to Gregory. The truth will come out about this death as well as the death of the Kennedys, Martin Luther King Jr., Malcolm X ...

Female expression

Editor's note: Due to the numerous requests received by Black Affairs about reprinting "Female expression" by James Lewis, the decision was made to run the article. [The article appeared on the editorial page of yesterday's Collegian. We hope our readers will enjoy it.

I really enjoyed reading Lisa Melilli's article of last Monday, and hope she continues to write her feelings about women's liberation.

I want to say I think its very important for women to express their feelings. I don't believe women should hide themselves in feminine ego.

When women don't express themselves, this leaves men the job of guessing what the woman is thinking. More often than not the man will misperceive the woman's feelings and make mistakes. One reason men do not understand or know women is because women's egos will not allow them to express their thoughts, and this provides for the misconceptions that occur in relationships. The male ego (pride, selfishness, superiority) will make him think that he provoked everything in the relationship, and women should not allow men to think like this. This is another reason men don't understand women.

I cannot trust a women who will not let me know what she thinks about me. I try naturally to respect the person a woman may be, but if I don't get some clear indication about what's happening, then I might feel forced to assume the prerogatives of the relation and this is sexist, and probably will end up in insulting the woman. How can a man know what's happening with a woman unless she tells him? The hints, suggestions and smiles will not provide a realistic approach to the problem.

I also feel that women have to find the power within themselves to find a place of effective being in this society. The solution to the oppression of women lies more with woman gaining their own power and deciding their own relation than with men giving them power. Power is partially the result of an increased counsciousness, and it is clearer now more than ever before that the power necessary to throw off this oppression lies in the consciousness movement of women. Racism will not dissolve unless sexism dissolves, and women are going to have to be the ones to desolve Sexism. I am sick of the lie of this society suggested for Third World People and Women. I am extremely disgusted with the movement of women's consciousness. I would like to see women define themselves distinctly and clearly so that I can be free.

U.S. businesses make pledge against South Africa's apartheid system

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Asst. Editor

Reverend Leon Sullivan, a Philadelphia-based Zion Baptist preacher and the lone black man on the board of directors of General Motors has drafted a statement of principles designed to undue apartheid in South Africa for the estimated 450 U.S. companies who have investments in South Africa.

Sullivan said, "to be worthwhile, this effort has to make a real difference, otherwise it is part of window dressing and we can't be part of window dressing anymore."

Secretary of State, Cyrus Vance broke his U.N. duties to make an unscheduled address to the executives. Vance spoke on the fight against racism as the "lighting of a fire which is spreading throughout the world". The tragic death of Steve Biko badly underlined the imperative need for South Africa to open her life fully to all her citizens."

Sullivan has been trying to get companies that invest in South Africa to agree to his principles. He now has 54 companies on his list.

The principles are:

Each of the firms endorsing the statement of principles has affiliates in the Republic of South Africa and supports the following operating principles: 1. Nonsegregation in all eating, comfort and work facilities.

2. Equal and fair employment practices for all employees.

3. Equal pay for all employees doing equal or comparable work for the same period of time.

4. Initiation of and development of training programs that will prepare, in substantial numbers, blacks and other non-whites for supervisory, administrative, clerical and technical jobs.

5. Increasing the number of blacks and other nonwhites in management and supervisory positions.

6. Improving the quality of employees' lives outside the work environment in such areas as housing, transportation, schooling, recreation and health facilities.

We agree to further implement these principles. Where implementation requires a modification of existing South African working conditions, we will seek such modification through appropriate channels.

We believe that the implementation of the foregoing principles is consistent with respect for human dignity and will contribute greatly to the general economic welfare of all the people of the Republic of South Africa.

It seems the effort is sincere. We should support the companies that sign the pledge. This is a change in the ethical practices of businesses. If people know about it, they can hold the companies to their promises and support the efforts of Sullivan.

Pleasure will highlight Homecoming Night

By ZOE BEST
Black Affairs Staff

Pleasure is one thing, but PLEASURE from "Funky P.O." or Portland, Oregon is another. PLEASURE is a nine member band whose latest album, Joyous, is getting a lot of play. Just as this album as well as Accept No Substitutes testifies to this group's talent, so must I. Many a night PLEASURE played at Up the Down Staircase, a two level club with disco on the top and live music, usually "jazz", at street level. When PLEASURE was out of town, business would head in various directions. When PLEASURE was in town and at the club, business was in. At various times they would invite musicians like Mel Brown to sit in with them. Mel Brown owns a drum shop and has played with the Temptations, Les McCann and for Motown.

Three years ago, Wayne Henderson of the CRUSADERS took notice of the Portland band while doing a show there. He introduced them to Fantasy records and since then has been their producer. He arranged for their backup to Ronnie Laws' Fever. Henderson has had a hand with producing their latest two records. He is working with PLEASURE in getting out their fourth recording as well as another featuring himself.

All members of the band were born in Portland and have been together for six years. They have hung out together playing in different groups or under different names for another three years. Marlon "The Magician" McLain, guitarist who is not intimidated in the least by where they're from or with inquiries questioning their "training" states, "Our music is good enough to compete with anybody's and it's more versatile than most. All the cats here have had chances to do stuff with other people, ... but we decided to keep PLEASURE together.

Together they are. Sherman Davis, with church experience, does their lead vocals. Dan Brewster on trombone and Dennis Springer make up the brass section. The horn and string arrangements on Joyous were done by Brewster. Springer will do Trane renditions for an audience that wants to hear them or can get his reeds to express a Miles Davis mood as they do on the cut, "Selim" from Joyous. The Hepburn brothers, Donald and Michael, write many of the songs, join in on the vocals and tradeoff on the keyboards. Over time one can pick up on the variations in color and temperment that each keyboardist gives to the music. Nat Phillips on bass, Brúce Carter on drums and Bruce Smith on congas, quica, cowbell, bell tree and tambourine, etc., round out the rhythm section.

Pleasure the new, hot group from Portland, Oregon, will be performing at the S.U.B., on October 15. This is just one of the many events scheduled for Homecoming week.

What is their music? Where did it come from way out there in Oregon? Black music arrived in Portland one day when Black people arrived along with the first workers and settlers to the region. Today the Black community of Portland has swelled. Contributing to this has been an influx of families from Chicago that first came during the 40's and 50's, but still continues.

Michael Hepburn tells it this way, "When we were growing up, we were at a prime age to be influenced by cats like Miles and Hendrix ... This was our connection to down south or back east ... A lot of people will say that it's jazz. Others will say that it's funky or that we should stick to one bag. But if you listen to "Let's Dance" which is pretty funky, Dennis' sax solo is definitely jazz. Some of our songs might have a beat that reminds you of TOWER, or EARTH, WIND AND FIRE, but tonally, harmonically, melodically we're just talkin' to ya. Be - boo - bop - a - dah, know what I mean?"

While at the Up the Down Staircase, during a set, they would include classics from Black classical music — They would project serious and progressive sounds that other Portland bands did not get into. PLEASURE's repertoire is not subject to stereotyping.

Because of the length of time these young musicians have been playing together and because of the varied audiences they've played for coming up — the Black clubs, the disco scene and for the "jazz" followers, it is logical that PLEASURE has evolved musically as it has. Manager, Chad Debam explains, "We play jazz, funk, rock — we're a fusion band, a natural growth band ... We're happening! Rock is trying to become sophisticated; we're already there."

PLEASURE has been up and down the west coast and has made Los Angeles into a loyal PLEASURE town. With their second album, Accept No Substitutes, and the single, "Ghettoes of the Mind", they began to play all over the country. They have opened shows for EARTH, WIND AND FIRE, TOWER OF POWER, WAR, Natalie Cole, Bill Withers and B.B. King. Last month they sold out two nights at Leviticus in New York and the play they got resulted in an increase in record sales. On July 4th, "Accept No Substitutes" was among the top ten in the Boston Globe's listing and Joyous is now among the top ten at WILD in Boston. Debam exclaims, "We'll have longevity; we're down to earth!"

People can get the feel of PLEASURE at their forthcoming performance for the 1977 Black Homecoming at the University of Massachusetts on Saturday, October 15. The Third World Steering Committee is sponsoring this dance and invites everyone to "Dust Yourself Off" and "Dance To The Music" with PLEASURE at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Northampton candidates debate at UMass

By RUTH McGORTY
Collegian Staff

Two of three Northampton Councilor-at-large candidates spoke last night before a class in Pierpont answering questions concerning issues about urban renewal, traffic programs, affirmative action, and police credibility.

Frances H. McNulty, a Democrat, is presently a Ward 7 Councilor. She has decided to leave this seat to run citywide for one of the two councilor-at-large seats. William C. Ames a Republican, is councilor-at-large on the city council. He ran without opposition in his party's primary last September.

Ames said he didn't want to push any party affiliation, but to work on the issues that are important. He said he opposes the urban renewal plan.

This plan by J.N. Dwyer Associates of Boston, involves using land behind the city hall to build a new restaurant, apartments and parking garage. Ames said he opposed bringing in a new high class restaurant to the downtown area because there are already excellent restaurants there and he wants to see these protected economically.

He also said Main St. was in need of repairs, and he would like to see state funds used to dress up the downtown area, also adding traffic lights.

Another program Ames favors is a "winterizing" of public buildings to save city fuel. There would be a large initial cost, but it would save in the long run. "We should look to efficient use of buildings," he said.

Speaking for affirmative action, Ames said he would like to see more women in non-traditional jobs. Commenting on the fact that there is only one woman in the police department, "I will lobby when a woman's name appears on the list."

She explained her interest in councilor-at-large started with her involvement with a traffic control plan-Traffic Operation Program to Increase Capacity for Safety (TOPICS).

Opposed to this plan, she said she worked with people all over the city to gain support. She said she would like to try to represent all the people and enjoys serving more than one ward.

Concerning urban renewal, she strongly opposes it, saying, "the people are unhappy with what the council is doing, they keep thinking someone will stop it."

She explained the house behind the city hall was sold to Dwyer for $12,000 after bids from others for three times that much.

Another concern of McNulty's is the couny's proposal to widen route 66. She opposes this, as it would involve taking people's front yards, trees, and porches.

When candidates were asked to summarize their feelings about TOPICS, Ames, who was in favor of it at one time said, "No politician in his right mind would support it now." He said the city is attempting to get the work done, such as new traffic lighting and improved sidewalks, through combinations of other programs. These programs would get state aid.

McNulty said, "Now it will be done the way we wanted." She said it might be more piecemeal, but most would be paid by the state. She said she has seen what it has done in other towns and doesn't think it suits Northampton.

The two candidates were asked their opinions about the police credibility in Northampton concerning the recent alleged beating of high school students.

McNulty said a committee was appointed to make recommendations at the Dec. 5 meeting. She suggested that in the future there should be psychological testing in hiring police to test the ability of people to handle the situations that police get into.

WSYL: radio for anyone

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

The station's philosophy: to give anyone a taste of radio without any qualifications except knowing how to use the exact equipment needed.

The station: WSYL FM stereo, now celebrating its fourth year of major operation.

Located in a one-room studio in the basement of Cashin House in Sylvan, WSYL operates 21 hours a day, seven days a week over a frequency of 97.7 and is campuswide.

"We don't have official FCC sanction and aren't licensed, but we are FCC recognized. We have about 50 regular slots and about 20 alternate DJ's who are trained here at the station," said Rich Maltzman, four-year station veteran and engineer.

"The station," he said, "started in 1973 in a suite on the eighth floor of Cashin and was very on and off then but when it moved to its present location in mid '75 it was formalized."

WSYL is a public service station and accepts no commercial advertising. They are almost totally music but Matzman is hoping for some changes.

"The station is funded by the Sylvan area government and we are hoping they will allocate funds for new turntables and speakers, but we would really like to get into production and record reviewing, that is if we get the funding," Maltzman said. Right now WSYL is experimenting with comedy programing.

WSYL has only been able to reach the entire campus for a few years and this was made possible in part by Eliot Mayer an electrical and computer engineering major who rewired the station and built their latest control board.

Commenting on SYL-TV, Maltzman said it had been fairly inactive over the years. "They have had a few isolated programs on but they've only been on the air approximately two per cent of the time," Maltzman said. SYL TV is closed circuit to the Sylvan area only.

Commenting on the types of programing the station airs, Maltzman said the selection was as wide as the people of Sylvan. Each DJ brings his own records and the library has roughly 500 albums, but they receive at least 10 new albums every week.

"This is my fourth year doing a radio show and it doesn't require a lot from you but it gives you back a lot," he said.

Union organizers speak to Central Area Council

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Representatives from the Student Organizing Project (SOP) spoke last night about the importance of unionization at UMass when they visited a two-hour meeting of the Central Area Council in Chadbourne dormitory.

David Barenberg, speaker for SOP, said the main function of the project is "to facilitate a communicative body" to help students productively deal with their "frustrations".

The senate gives students "no impetus to do anything about issues concerning them. There is little communication between senate members and the rest of the student body," he said. Barenberg also said the senate is not allowed to deal with issues in any way, except those the administration allows.

The SOP wants to "bring students into involvement with people from a grassroots level — people with similar ideas and interests," said Barenberg.

"A lot of students feel extremely frustrated because presently there is no way for them to solve their grievances," he continued.

The CAC also heard from spokesman for the Orchard Hill Men's Center (OHMC), who asked the council to double $1,575 the center hopes to receive from the Orchard Hill Area Government next week. In a 6-5 vote, CAC voted to allocate $500 for the men's center.

David Brenner, an OHMC representative said he is unsure of whether or not the $500 will be accepted. Brenner said in about two weeks the OHMC will have hired its three coordinators, and by then a decision will have been made.

CAC also discussed an Alpine slide trip originally planned for Sept. 30. The trip was cancelled, according to President Mark Zinnan, when the group received a report saying the chairlift at the area had been broken. It had not. The trip was then rescheduled for October, but was again cancelled because CAC activities coordinator Jay Flynn reported 130 people had signed up for the trip when only ten actually had.

Because busses for the trip had already been paid for, the group lost $158. Flynn offered to forfeit his $10 weekly salary for ten weeks to make up for the error, but the CAC instead voted to reprimand him.

The Student Government Association is looking for students who have experience or an interest in collective bargaining

N.Y. library bombed police suspect FALN

NEW YORK [UPI] — A bomb exploded yesterday outside the main branch of the New York Public Library on Fifth Avenue, just hours after a dynamite bomb was found and dismantled in front of the General Motors Building, police reported.

Earlier in the day, a letter believed written by the Puerto Rican terrorist group known as FALN was found taped to the inside of a west side Manhattan phone booth, but police so far have been unable to link the explosion or the dynamite device to the group.

According to Eugene Scott, a battalion chief for the Fire Department, the bomb exploded on the steps on the Fifth Avenue side of the library, but there did not appear to be anyone injured.

"There were many people standing around when it went off," Scott said. "It went off on the carved concrete work on the steps near the library wall."

The extent of damage caused by the bomb was not immediately known.

The explosion chipped part of a fountain under a statue of a nude woman riding a horse, and one bomb squad man found a one-inch section of iron pipe 50 feet from the explosion site. He said the pipe had the smell of an explosive.

The interior of the library was not affected, and none of the windows in the sprawling structure was damaged.

Police searched the area for a possible second bomb, but no device was found.

No group came forward immediately to claim responsibility for the bombing.

The letter believed written by the FALN was found by a civilian about 10:30 a.m. taped to the inside of a telephone booth at 61st Street and Columbus Avenue.

And shortly after 1 p.m., an unexploded dynamite bomb attached to a timing device was found outside the General Motors Building.

The device, found in a planter outside the building at 59th Street and Madison Avenue, was disarmed and removed, but a police spokesman said it was not known if the bomb had been planted by the FALN.

The single-page typewritten letter was examined by workers in the police laboratory, and a spokesman said "all indications are that it is a legitimate FALN communique."

The letter made no specific bomb threats, the spokesman said, but contained much of the usual political rhetoric used by the terrorist group.

In previous attacks by the FALN, the organization waited until its bombs had exploded and then called a news organization to direct reporters and police to a communique hidden in a phone booth.

Police speculated that the unexpected finding of the letter had turned this procedure around.

The FALN has claimed responsibility for more than 40 bombings in New York City, Washington, Chicago and Newark, N.J., over the past three years in a campaign to win independence for Puerto Rico.

Mexican prisoners riot, kill 15 fellow inmates

GUADALAJARA, Mexico [AP] — Rebellious convicts controlled most of Jalisco state prison yesterday after executing at least 15 fellow inmates they accused of tyranny as agents of the prison system.

A police official who asked not to be identified said several plans for attack by police and firemen to end the revolt in the fortress-like prison were discussed during the night but then discarded. He said officials feared an assault would result in many more deaths.

The prison was ringed by scores of police wearing bullet-proof vests and carrying automatic weapons and grenade launchers.

Less than two hours after the revolt broke out Monday, prison officials said police had regained control of the 2,300-inmate penitentiary. But control applied only to the administrative section in the front of the prison and inmates who fled from the cellblocks said the rebels still held the main part of the prison.

Five persons, including two guards, were reported injured in Monday's violence. All guards were withdrawn from the cellblocks.

Forty prisoners who escaped to the administrative wing asked for protection, saying they were on the rebels' death list.

The U.S. Consulate in Guadalajara reported it had been notified by Mexican officials that "no Americans that they are aware of had been killed." A spokesman said there was no word on whether any Americans were injured.

He said the number of Americans in the prison had been reduced by the transfer to Mexico City of some inmates who qualify for return to the United States under the U.S.-Mexican prisoner exchange treaty. The Americans are jailed on narcotics charges.

"We believe there are about 10 Americans in the prison. The Mexicans don't always inform us immediately when they are transferred to Mexico City, so we can't be certain," the consular officer said.

A statement reportedly signed by 400 rebel inmates demanded better food, work opportunities, living conditions and medical service.

It called the killing of inmates with the privileged status of so-called coordinators "not a crime but justice."

Eyewitnesses said the coordinators' names were on a death list drawn up by the rebels, and they were killed one by one.

Mass. senate approves budget, anti-abortion

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Senate yesterday approved a $72 million supplemental budget, including $16.1 million in state employee pay hikes and a strict anti-abortion amendment which the Dukakis administration hopes to eliminate.

The governor has said if forced to do so, he would veto the entire budget to prevent passage of the anti-abortion amendment.

On a voice vote, the Senate gave near final approval to the budget, which totaled only $19.7 million when it arrived from the House last month. The budget is expected to go to a House-Senate conference committee before it reaches the governor's desk.

The Senate added a local option clause to the state's $1.5 million school breakfast program, resisted numerous attempts to weaken an anti-abortion amendment which would allow state funds for abortions only to save the life of a woman, and attached a local aid amendment.

Yesterday's two final attempts to reduce the anti-abortion amendment filed by Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston, were rejected 18-17 and 19-16.

Daniel Taylor, chief counsel to Gov. Michael Dukakis, said the governor may be able to line item veto the anti-abortion amendment. "It all hinges on the exact language in the bill budget," he said.

Rep. Flynn said, "The governor cannot line item to the amendment as it now is written." He predicted the conflict of views would be settled in court.

If the governor is allowed to line item veto the amendment, it would take out of jeopardy the state employees' pay raises which were negotiated to begin last August.

Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, Jr., D-Oxford, accused anti-abortion groups of holding hostage the state employees' pay hike. With Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, casting the crucial tying vote, Kelly's amendment to separate the pay raise from the rest of the budget was defeated 18-18.

"By mixing the abortion issue with the pay raise issue, it will force some people to vote against the contract," Kelly said. A third of either branch of the legislature would be needed to sustain a veto.

An amendment by Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, to eliminate the entire anti-abortion section also was defeated.

The local aid amendment by Sen. William L. Saltonstall, R-Manchester, approved on a 19-16 roll, provides that 40 per cent of the fiscal 1977 surplus — as determined by the state comptroller — would go back to cities and towns.

"I think if we are going to have tax relief, the property tax should be the tax we relieve," said Saltonstall, who said the comptroller must announce the surplus before Jan. 2.

Mass. House kills bill, homosexual employment

BOSTON [AP] — Senate-approved legislation barring discrimination against homosexuals in public employment was killed in the Massachusetts House Tuesday.

The vote to reject the measure was 120-101 and supporters launched a drive to reverse that tally at the next session.

Rep. Charles W. Long, R-Dover, led the opposition and said this bill would pertain to the hiring of policemen, prison guards, mental health attendants and others who would have physical custody of others.

He said homosexuality is a form of mental illness and contended that proponents are trying to turn an illness into a civil right.

Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, an acknowledged homosexual, said she was not asking colleagues to say that homosexuality is okay. She said the issue solely was employment.

Ability and willingness to perform the job ought to be the test, she said.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, said the bill recognizes a fact of life, and nothing more. "In no way does this condone sexually offensive behavior on the job," he said, "either heterosexual or homosexual."

Supreme Court decides to restudy vet. preference law

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court yesterday set aside a lower court ruling that had threatened 46 state programs aimed at giving military veterans priority for public job openings.

Voting 6-3, the justices ordered a three-judge federal court in Massachusetts to restudy that state's veterans' preference law in light of a recent Supreme Court decision making it more difficult to prove unconstitutional discrimination.

The lower court had ruled that the Massachusetts veterans' preference law, similar to those in all states except Arkansas, Mississippi, New Mexico and South Carolina, fostered unconstitutional sex discrimination against women.

Among other matters considered yesterday, the court:

—Agreed to decide whether the death penalty is a valid punishment for persons convicted of murder who did not actually kill anyone.

An Akron, Ohio, woman convicted in the 1975 killing of a pawnbroker, received a death sentence under a "felony murders" law. Such laws charge a defendant with murder if he or she is linked to a crime in which a life is taken.

Three girls brutally murdered, police search for clues

ELVATON, Md. [AP] — The woods along Cross Creek Drive were once a vacant playground for the children who live in this quiet Baltimore suburb. But not since three little girls were stabbed to death there.

Police combed through the mud and leaves Tuesday in an apparently fruitless search for a solid trace of the killer who stalked three neighborhood blondes near their wood-crate hideout in the forest and stabbed them, over and over again.

Theresa Hogan, 8, her sister Deborah Anne, 10, and their friend Ann Marie Brzeszkiewicz, 8, were killed Sunday night as they played almost within sight of their homes. Their bodies were found Monday.

The state medical examiner said two of the girls were stabbed a half dozen times and the third more than a dozen times. He said the weapon was probably a hunting knife with a blade at least five inches long.

Police Capt. William Lindsay said the girls were stabbed in the chest, back, face, arms and hands. From the superficial wounds on the hands and arms "it would seem that they had put up some kind of a struggle," he said.

The brutal murders shattered the serenity of Southgate, a community of $55,000 to $65,000 homes.

"I think the kids are scared," said Bonnie Meinsler, a neighbor of the murdered children. "I'll just be relieved when they find out who did it."

Jonathan Hudson, a fourth grader at the school attended by the three girls, confided: "I'm afraid if I walk in my house and somebody is waiting behind the door, he'll grab me."

Meanwhile, the police search turned up nothing. Metal detectors were used, but they uncovered no clues, police said. A brown, mud-covered knife sheath was found, but its relevance to the murder weapon was left in doubt.

Lindsay said the knife sheath was the only evidence although police also were investigating a report of a stranger in the area, a man seen driving a blue Volkswagen.

The three girls were last seen about 7:30 p.m. Sunday by a neighbor who was walking her dog. They were crossing a footbridge that leads into the woods behind their homes.

Richard Hogan, the father of two of the victims, said the girls were supposed to be home no later than 9 p.m. and that he began to get worried a few minutes before that deadline.

When the girls did not return, the two fathers and some neighbors began searching through the woods Sunday night. But the bodies were not found until Monday morning when two policemen discovered the girls lying face down in six to eight inches of water in a narrow creek.

Two Quebec men extradited - alleged Springfield murderers

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ontario [AP] — Two Quebec men were committed for extradition yesterday to the United States to face charges in connection with the armed robbery and wounding of a policeman in Springfield, Mass.

The extradition ruling was made after a four-day hearing for Norman Gagne, 38, of Jonquiere, Quebec, and Andre Paquette, 37, of Montreal.

Gagne is wanted in Massachusetts on charged including assault with intent to murder and armed robbery.

Charges against Paquette include being an accessory before and after the fact.

The two were arrested in Desbarats, Ontario in August.

Evidence produced by Frank Caputo, representing Massachusetts, showed that witnesses identified Gagne as one of two men who shot and wounded a policeman following a robbery June 10.

Three masked men robbed the bank of $129,000, Caputo said.

Extradition proceedings have been started in Montreal for the second man. The third man has never been identified.

Three men holdup Boston Brinks

BOSTON [AP] — After evidently carefully casing the scene, three men in hard hats pointing sawed-off shotguns robbed Brink's guards yesterday of $76,000 in the rear corridor of a bank in the financial district here, police said.

The robbers gagged and handcuffed the two Brink's men and locked them in the corridor before escaping with one bag of currency, said Russell Silvers, northeast region vice president of the armored car company. They also took the revolvers each Brink's guard carried in a side holster.

Locked in an armored car outside the rear entrance to the State Street branch of the State Street Bank, the third Brink's guard did not even know the holdup was in progress, said Silvers.

The robbers, two of whom wore beards, left untouched in the corridor a trolley carrying seven bags of coins worth $3,500, said Silvers. An undisclosed amount of money was in more bags in the truck, but the men made no attempt to get at it, said the police.

The FBI joined Boston police in investigating the holdup. "We enter any type of case involving in excess of $50,000 on the assumption that there may be an interstate aspect," said Richard Bates, agent in charge of the FBI Boston office. Silvers said the holdup men "had to have cased the operation previously."

While Leonard McDonald, the armored truck driver, remained locked for security inside the truck, messenger Phil Ternullo, carried the bag of money and guard Al Crooks pushed the trolley of coins from the vehicle about 40 feet into a corridor.

They swung open a door to face three men pointing two sawed-off shotguns and a revolver at them, said Silvers.

Two prisoners escape Norfolk

BOSTON [AP] — Two Norfolk prison inmates escaped about the same time yesterday one turning on his guard in the bathroom of a hospital and the other walking away from his duties outside the walls, the Department of Correction reported.

State police set up road checks and flew helicopters in the search for the men, identified as Ralph DeLeo, 35, of Arlington, and Robert Wood, 51.

Both were serving long prison terms for armed robbery and other crimes. There was no apparent connection between the two, said Correction Department representative, Larry Parnell.

Wood, serving concurrent sentences of 20 to 35 years for armed robbery and illegally possessing a machine gun, slipped away from duties with the maintenance crew outside the prison walls. He had been imprisoned since June 13, 1972, and had been assigned to the outside crew last August, said Parnell.

DeLeo flashed what looked like a handgun in the toilet of the Lemuel Shattuck Hospital, Boston, and forced his guard, Gordon Scofield, to unlock his chain, said Parnell.

He marched Scofield through the lobby of the hospital's ground floor outpatient clinic to a stolen car with stolen plates which police believe was waiting for him, said Parnell.

Authorities are investigating the possibility DeLeo found a weapon waiting for him when he asked to go to the toilet. He had been taken to the hospital under guard from Norfolk after he complained of diarrhea.

DeLeo took Scofield with him to the Jamaica Way nearby, dropping him by the side of the road after taking his gun and eluding police of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, said Parnell.

Springfield man pleads innocent to murder charge

CHICOPEE [UPI] — William Cole of Springfield yesterday was ordered to undergo psychiatric observation at Bridgewater State Hospital after pleading innocent to charges stemming from a shooting incident earlier this week.

Cole, 31, appeared in Chicopee District Court, and pleaded not guilty to murder and assault and battery charges in connection with an incident Monday at the American Bosch Co.

Police said Cole apparently pulled a rifle and began firing on two foremen at the diesel motor manufacturing plant just after they returned from lunch.

The two men were identified by police as general foreman Thomas Coppola, 52, of Springfield and department foreman Joaquin Goncalves, 50, of Ludlow.

Coppola died of a gunshot wound to the chest while undergoing emergency room treatment at the Springfield unit of the Bay State Medical Center, police said.

Winthrop man held for murder

WINTHROP [UPI] — Matthew Troila, 19, of Winthrop, yesterday was charged with murder, attempted murder and arson in connection with a morning house fire that killed one man and injured two others.

Police Sgt. Angelo A. LaMonica said Troila was being held on $50,000 bail at the Winthrop jail pending arraignment Wednesday in East Boston District Court. The fire did extensive damage to the home on Hawthorne Avenue, where Lawrence Bowden, 24, died in the blaze, according to police.

The two injured were identified as James M. Fitzpatrick, 20, and Ann Rock, 19, both of Winthrop. Both were reported in satisfactory condition at Winthrop Community Hospital after being treated for burns and smoke inhalation.

Revere man killed suspects wanted

BOSTON [UPI] — Police said yesterday they are searching for two suspects wanted in the stabbing death of a Revere man in the city's Dorchester section.

The two male suspects, both about 20 years of age, are wanted for questioning in connection with the fatal stabbing Monday of William Dowling, 23, officials said.

Dowling's companion, George Miller, 21, of Revere, told police they had gotten lost while driving home from a flea market in Neponset and had stopped to ask directions.

Miller said he was attacked and robbed of $30 by two men who came up behind him when he got out of the car. He said he ran back to the car after the men fled and found that Dowling had been stabbed.

Sanders Inc. deal with Saudi Arabia

NASHUA, N.H. [UPI] — New Hampshire's largest private employer, Sanders Associates, announced yesterday Saudi Arabia is negotiating with a Sanders subsidiary for a $400 million automated highway patrol system.

Sanders' chairman H.W. Pope said there is substantial agreement on technical elements of the system, but a number contractual elements must still be negotiated before a contract can be assured.

Mass. PIRG's "private" party

jim paulin

Traditionally, after an invited guest finishes speaking before an audience at UMass, there is a reception in the Campus Center for the guest and any interested members of the audience. This is the practice of both the Distinguished Visitors Program and the Chancellor's Lecture Series, and other sponsors of speakers.

However, MassPIRG does not allow its receptions to be open to just anybody. When Ralph Nader spoke at the Fine Arts Center auditorium Thursday night, I naturally assumed that there would be a reception open to the public as usual. I was wrong. MassPIRG wanted to give him a private party.

"Is there going to be a reception for Ralph Nader?" I asked. "Do you have an invitation?" I was asked back. What the fuck! I thought. This is Ralph Public Access Nader, man of the people, champion of the powerless. Who the fuck are these assholes to restrict the people from mingling with their advocate? Some nerve they've got printing up tickets for a select group of 50.

Anyways, it became evident that PIRG wasn't going to buy my argument that it was the right and privilege of the UMass students in the audience to socialize, talk politics and eat roast beef sandwiches with Ralph Nader, the man most of them paid to speak here with the money they contributed to MassPIRG when they paid their bill to the bursar.

So as soon as the man finished his speech and announced he would take questions from the floor, I asked him if he knew where the reception would be held. Room 903 Campus Center, he answered, more or less inviting everyone in the auditorium to go on up if they wanted.

I went up to the ninth floor and sat in on the press conference (in a room near 903). Then when the conference was over and we were walking into the reception room, a woman from PIRG confronted me and told me she didn't appreciate my action in the auditorium. "Too bad," I said, and continued on into 903.

A few minutes and several little roast beef sandwiches later, the same woman returned. I argued that this was the first time to my knowledge that there was ever a guest list for a speaker paid for by the UMass-Amherst students. She contended (in a tone like she was expecting an apology) that there wasn't enough room (there was), and that the Campus Center didn't want too many people coming up. (Plausible: the Campus Center administration has never been famous for complying with the will of the students, and in fact the building should be run by students.) The will of the Campus Center should never have power over the will of the students. In fact the Campus Center's pettiness shouldn't even be taken seriously and should be ignored in situations like this.

Furthermore, according to my antagonist, the purpose of the reception was to allow the elitist clique of consumerist vanguardist snobs to discuss strategy with Ralph. Big fucking self-important power tripping experts deal. Like, uh, you know like we're the leadership, man, and you're just the mob that signs petitions, like we're members and you're just anonymous supporters, like we're the generals and you're just G.I.'s, just maggots. Who invited you anyways?

And more, I was told that over a hundred people were turned away before they could even get on the elevators. Wow. Strange behavior for a PUBLIC INTEREST research group.

And more and more and more until I thought I was getting nauseous, I was told that the tickets that didn't go to the PIRG club went to various RSO groups that provided money to cover the cost of the speech; in other words, to the "heavies". Well where did that money come from? From your Student Activities Fee is where. Would you buy a used initiative petition from MassPIRG?

Ralph Nader is a great man and patriot. MassPIRG, like Mass-Fair Share, is one of the most politically enlightened lobbies in the state, and I can't recall ever disagreeing with them politically. Their effort to create a Telephone Consumer's Action Group is undoubtably in the best interest of the people whom Ma Bell has got by the calls, to paraphrase their bumper sticker.

But if they every try to pull again what they tried to pull that unfortunate Thursday,

Recombinant DNA research: opinions wanted

The often accepted, but perhaps incorrect, separation of politics and scientific research has recently come into question with the issue of recombinant DNA research. The controversy surrounding the possibility of such research taking place at UMass-Amherst will be the subject of an up-coming Collegian editorial forum. Letters to the editor concerning this issue will be welcome. Also, anyone interested in writing about the topic in greater depth should contact Bill Sundstrom or Michael P. Doran at the Collegian (545-3500) as soon as possible.

Write-ins termed "irresponsible"

To the Editor:

As a Third World student who for the past year has been actively involved with the SGA, the student unionization movement and consequently with the Student Senate, I feel compelled to address a critical situation within that body.

Following the recent senatorial elections it was discovered that several write-in candidates on the Third World Caucus ballot were white, and that a number of these misguided students were from the same dormitory. All of these write-in candidates except one eventually resigned before being seated on the Caucus. We can assume that the candidates [with one unfortunate exception] had the intelligence and integrity to recognize themselves as inadequate representatives of the Third World student constituency.

Here at UMass serious issues immediately arise from this incident. [Although there are deeper ramifications in view of the nationwide controversy over the Bakke case, particularly the question of affirmative action vs. reverse discrimination, they will not be examined in this letter.]

One issue concerns the fact that as a black woman, and I speak in solidarity with black, Latin and Asian students of this campus, I identify strongly as a member of the international Third World community. The life and death struggles of Third World peoples in Africa, Asia and Latin America will determine my future and I am not alone in my disgust at this reactionary charade occurring in the Senate. Third World is not a "state of mind" as was so ignorantly stated Wednesday night but it is in fact one of the most crucial realities in the world.

The second point relates to the obvious ignorance of those individuals who call themselves student representatives but who purposefully create a climate of tension with their lack of judgement. These so-called senators have demonstrated blatant irresponsibility in an attempt to cause disunity within the Senate for their own self-interest. These chumps are playing the wrong game.

For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. Stupid political maneuvers can at times lead to progressive movement; the Third World Caucus is presently more clearly and concisely defining who is a Third World student and why we absolutely must represent ourselves. Of course, in a nation built on vicious contradictions we walk a thin line in terms of self-definition. Since our enslavement on this continent, since our colonization in our native lands, we have rarely been able to call our own name out loud. I am confident that in the near future this situation will radically change in response to a world-wide movement for liberation. We know who we are and we know who we ain't and no one is fooling anyone.

Weekly raps seek new directions

To the Editor:

We're a group of gay men who've been meeting to discuss some of the issues that touch our lifestyles. Last semester we called ourselves a "gay male support group", but now we're wondering about what that name implies: gayness is only part of our identities; maleness seems arbitrarily restrictive; and support [a term we're still a bit vague about] doesn't really fully describe our function.

Thinking that we'd like to see new directions that are both more broadly-based and better defined, we'd like to invite others to join us for our weekly raps on sexuality, emotions, personal and social relationships, and a wide range of ideas and feelings which anti-sexist, sensitive people may benefit in sharing.

The group has been a rewarding experience for all of us, and we think it can be so for others, especially now, as we look for ways to continue, deepen and expand our growth and learning.

Please drop in at our next meeting at 7 p.m. on Thursday October 13 in room 428 of the Student Union Building. You will be welcome.

DNA research: a student priority?

To the Editor:

This letter is in reference to the October seventh article on DNA experimentation. While the issue of whether the potential health hazards of this research are sufficient justification for its discontinuation remains debatable, I question the prudence of conducting this type of experimentation in any densely populated area. It may seem "appropriate" that research of this type would be done in an academic setting such as this university, but it would seem more logical that it be accomplished at a more remote location, in order to reduce as much as possible the potential threat to public health.

I was particularly struck by the fact that the article reported the risk factors involved in this research only in relation to the residents of the town of Amherst. No mention was made of the potential threat to the people who reside and work on campus and who, consequently, are in more immediate potential danger than the townspeople.

This omission or oversight occurred to me as yet another indication of the apparent attitude towards, and treatment of UMass students as second class citizens. Have the students tended to become [or have they always been] a secondary consideration in the purpose and function of the university? Have financial woes, the public image [which may be enhanced by the conduct of medical research], or concern over whether the university is fulfilling society's needs and requirements become the most important considerations in the minds of the administration and trustees, while the needs of the students have tended to become incidental? I think it is time for a reordering of our priorities, the effect of which should reinstate students as an integral part of the university, and make their education and welfare the primary consideration.

Unionization: power or student rights?

To the Editor:

During the past month we have often heard of the benefits of student unionization. However, I believe that much should still be explained. Therefore, I present a set of questions which I feel should be considered before the idea of unionization is decided.

I've been given the impression that the advocates of unionization are interested more in power than in student rights. There have been a few constructive concerns, but they have been expressed only to further the case of unionization. The claim is that if we have a union, then unfavorable situations will be avoided in the future. Any one who believes this has not had a good look at the world outside of UMass [do the United Mine Workers have their problems alleviated?].

We have also been lead to believe that the union will have enough power in its numbers to influence the administration's policies. This raises the question: What would happen if a confrontation arose? Would the students be asked to strike? If not, then what is the power of the union and how is it utilized? If the answer is yes, then we have even more interesting questions. Will the students respond to the request? How many and for how long? What would be the cost to the student? If the answers aren't pro-union, the power of the union would be broken. I believe the threat of unionization can be much more effective than a union itself.

According to present Massachusetts law, if an organization forms a union to negotiate collectively, everyone in the organization must join that union. I doubt this law would apply to the university, but then I don't know if it does. However, if not, then why isn't there a union, instead of just talk of unionizations? When and if a union is formed, how much will the dues to support legal council and union leadership [in dealing with the administration] be? How will the allocation of money be decided, by a vote on every allocation or by the elected leaders? There are other questions to deal with, such as: Will the union be competent to deal with the political and economical consequences of the university? However, these questions, although of equal importance, are too abstract to deal with now.

Student unionization has brought to attention several issues of importance; however, I feel they can be dealt with better in a pluralistic fashion. Along with present organizations, new and broader groups can form to bring legitimate concerns to public attention. But at the same time, the issue of unionization should be put to a referendum to determine the representation the union would have. In addition, because this is an important issue which has involved time and money, the referendum should require a 50 per cent plus one vote of the school [not just the vote, thereby guaranteeing a true "majority"] to pass, and be binding.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Who is Craeman Gethers?

By CHARLOTTE TRENCHARD

Venturing forth onto the campus the other day with pen in hand, my trusty clipboard, my most congenial smile, and a petition for Craeman Gethers (who?), I was eager and prepared to fill the 900 blank lines with names. I returned to my dorm a short while later with one per cent of that number — nine signatures.

As I approached people to sign the petition, it became clear to me that most people didn't even know who the hell Craeman Gethers is. Allow me to introduce you.

On August 7, 1974, McDonalds on Route 9 was robbed. Shortly thereafter, Craeman Gethers, then a student at UMass, was informed that he had participated in the robbery. His friend, Earl Brown, was also told that he had taken part in the robbery. The police took them away and they were put on trial.

The Gethers-Brown trial resulted in a hung jury. The two men were then taken and tried individually. Both were convicted. Brown received a sentence of three to five years while Gethers got eight to 12. Two sentences for the same crime.

The grounds that Craeman was convicted on were 1) The testimony of two McDonalds employees, women who claim to be able to positively identify Craeman — a man they saw briefly, who was wearing a red belt across his forehead and a pair of sunglasses, who is black, and who they saw at 11:30 p.m. Also, one woman identified two photographs of two different men with the same name as one and the same man — the first photo was of the student Gethers, the other was of a Springfield minister also named Gethers. This shows just how "positive" the woman is in her testimony.

The evidence that has not even been presented to the court after two trials and four "defense" attorneys are 1) Two polygraphic tests taken by Craeman — both with positive results. 2) The fact that he had a sprained ankle on the night of the robbery, physically disabling him from jumping over the counter as the real robber did. 3) Witnesses that can testify to Craeman's whereabouts on the night of the crime.

Craeman Gethers was convicted purely on circumstantial evidence. He and Earl Brown were the unfortunate victims of not only being in the wrong place at the wrong time, but also of being members of a minority group and not being able to afford sufficient funds to support their own cases.

Brown is back at UMass now, but is on parole until 1980. Gethers remains at Norfolk where he has already suffered 26 months of Hell.

Gethers and Brown are only two examples of victims of our great system of "justice" here in America. There are many, many other men who have been deprived their right to freedom for crimes they are innocent of, while the really guilty bastards like Mitchell, Haldeman, and Ehrlichman are given reduced prison terms because they submitted tape recordings to Judge John J. Sirica stating how sorry they are for what they did. I ask you, is this justice?

What happened to Craeman Gethers could have, and still can happen to any one of us, and if it did, it would be nice to know that at least our fellow students cared enough to help us out. If you see a petition for Craeman, please sign it. Your signature can be a powerful tool against the cases of grave injustice that exist in America today. If not for Craeman, do it for your country.

Excess time?

By ELISABETH LORETT

Don't ever take three Classics courses in one semester unless you're in your right mind. The Bronze to Iron Age transition was a brutal period in history. As far as we can tell from literary and archaelogical sources, life was centered around the battlefield on which no part of the body was held sacred, and all were in imminent danger of being lopped off. So, as you might imagine, it is no place to go wandering around looking for your mind (of all things). Why, what with looking out for the rest of yourself, you may even lose your damn mind!

I don't know if I have or will learn anything substantial in these courses; considering the kinds of jobs available today, I may wish I didn't have a mind. But I bring them up because of a little sign I saw last weekend which said, "It's not that we have too little money, it's that we have too much month left at the end of the money." Having spent so much of my last month the battlefield, my pathos for my fellow warriors of 1000 BC was aroused. I deeply resented these modern spendthrifts with leftover month for not passing their extra month on the deceased whom I am certain would appreciate it.

I was away from school when I thought this. On Monday, when I picked up my mind from where I had dropped it the previous Friday on the battlefield, I said to myself, "Wow! The value of time has certainly changed in the last 3000 years."

Being intellectually inclined, I wondered why the change had occurred. I don't have any excess life myself. I find that by scrimping, saving, and spreading it thinly, I can make do, but I'm still very dependent on tomorrow.

The Greeks were very concerned with chaos and fate. Essentially what they wanted was to manage time themselves without offending dear old Zeus. They made laws with divine sanction and all sorts of things you can't imagine unless you take a Classics course; but as far as I know, they never succeeded in having any excess time.

I am certain the phenomenon of excess time is a modern one. It is something that must be examined by all thinking adults because excess time is clearly as valuable and as volatile as the atom bomb. Excess time should be funneled into the critical problems such as cancer research, solar energy development, the Mid-East crisis, and the list goes on. But who is hoarding the excess time? And with what intention? It is being kept mysteriously out of public view. If I had not glimpsed this sign, who can tell how it would have been brought to the public's attention. In the past, only gods had immortality. What lies ahead?

Yemen Pres. assassinated

LONDON [UPI] — President Ibrahim Mohammed el Hamadi of the Yemen Arab Republic and his brother, a senior officer, have been assassinated, Sanaa radio said Wednesday in a broadcast monitored in London.

The broadcast from the capital said the two were killed by criminals. No other details were given.

North Yemen, which has a population of 5.5 million, was established as an independent Islamic Arab republic in 1962 when a group of army officers overthrew theocratic ruler Saif al Islam and established a regime with close ties to Egypt.

Although the new regime was recognized by the United States and other nations, civil war broke out between the government and rival royalist political groups, and continued intermittently until 1969.

By 1970, an informal compromise was reached incorporating royalist elements into the government. A new constitution was drawn up and general elections held the next year stabilizing the power of Prime Minister Hassan al Amri and his successor, Muhsin al Ayni.

Four years later, army rebels staged a bloodless military coup to overthrow the constitutional government and a seven-man Military Command Council headed by Hamdi came into power on June 13, 1974.

Although Hamdi had promised constitutional government would be restored in 1975, he subsequently declared the military would retain command until "the objectives of the revolution" his officers staged had been achieved.

He spent the last two years trying to consolidate his power and putting down rebellions among rival tribal and political groups.

Located at the southwestern corner of the Arabian peninsula north of the passage between the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden, North Yemen borders Saudi Arabia and Soviet-backed South Yemen.

Israel accepts peace parlay

JERUSALEM [AP] — The Israeli cabinet accepted "without any dissenters or reservations" a new U.S. proposal for reconvening a Middle East peace conference at Geneva, Cabinet Secretary Arieh Naor said Tuesday night.

Prime Minister Menahem Begin said the cabinet meeting: "The decision was unanimous." Naor said the text of the U.S. proposal, known as a "working paper," would not be published in order to avoid undermining progress during current negotiations. The working paper now goes to the Arab countries for their consideration.

"The government approves the working paper on suggestions for the resumption of the Geneva peace conference," Naor said. It already had been agreed upon by President Carter, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan.

Dayan, who carried the U.S. proposal to Israel yesterday after his two-week visit to the United States, told reporters before the 4½-hour cabinet meeting that he had recommended its acceptance.

Minutes after the cabinet meeting ended, a top Israeli Foreign Ministry official informed the United States of the Israel government's action.

"If we want to go to Geneva with the Arabs, having their views in mind and taking care of our interests, then I think this is a good paper," Dayan said of the document he was to present to the cabinet.

Noar said no formal vote was taken at the meeting but the cabinet's decision was "unanimous, without any reservations."

The still-secret formula, which would include Palestinians in a unified Arab delegation at Geneva, was reached last Wednesday after a six-hour negotiating session between Carter and Dayan.

The working paper is understood to contain proposals for a three-stage conference where Israel would face the pan-Arab delegation at the opening of the Geneva conference. Political observers here regard this as an important Israeli concession since the Jewish state has always insisted on bilateral negotiations with each of the Arab countries.

After the opening session, the conference would split up into bilateral committees where Israel would negotiate the issues with each Arab state individually.

Finally, Israel would meet with Jordan, Egypt and the Palestinians to decide the future of the occupied Gaza Strip and the West Bank of the Jordan River which Israel captured in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Neither Israeli nor U.S. officials have explained how the Palestinians are to participate at Geneva or whether they would be able to join the talks independent of the Jordanian or Egyptian delegations.

"Enterprize" takes off

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. [UPI] — The Space Shuttle "Enterprise" was to make its fourth manned free flight test today, this time without its tail cone in a fast steep-angle glide from the back of a jumbo jet to the desert floor in two and a half minutes.

"It will look like a World War II dive bomber," a NASA spokesman said.

Without the tailcone that has been used in three previous free flights, air racing past the tail engine assembly of the 75-ton spaceship was expected to cause troublesome turbulence for the Boeing 747 that carries it aloft.

The Enterprise was to be blown away from the mothership by explosive bolts as in past tests, but this time it was to drop in a 22-degree angle glidepath to the dry lake bed runway at about 7,200 feet per minute.

Previous free flight tests have aimed the Shuttle at its landing zone at 11 degrees. By comparison, commercial airliners approach landing at about three degrees.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration engineers said three simulated engines would be in the tail assembly of the Enterprise. That is the configuration Shuttle craft will have on returning from Earth-orbital missions.

In previous free flights the large tailcone provided reduced drag. Without it, the engineers said, extremely turbulent air will strike the tail of the 747 causing vibration.

The mated aircraft were expected to reach only an altitude of about 22,000 feet above the Mojave Desert because of the vibration. Separation was scheduled to occur at about 17,800 feet.

A nice body is within your grasp.

UMass clerical workers run womens workshop

A workshop for women who work at the University is being held for six Tuesdays, noon to 1 p.m., to discuss the problems of a UMass clerical worker.

Discussed with be both specific and general job situations dealing with the faceless (and not so faceless) higher-ups, and ways of increasing self-confidence on the job.

University clerical workers will run the workshops. To sign up, or for more information, call Sarah Boy, Staff Women's Services, Everywoman's Center, 545-0883. Bring your lunch.

The School of Education announces program fair

The Student Affairs Office of the School of Education has announced the fall schedule of informational activities for students interested in teacher certification programs and-or admission to one of the programs within the School of Education.

The semi-annual Program Fair will be held tomorrow, in room 228 in the School of Education from 1-4 p.m. The Program Fair is an opportunity for students to meet and talk with the directors and staffs of the 18 alternative programs within the School of Education, to pick up applications for admission to the programs, and to set up interviews of admission.

Interviews for admission to programs for the spring semester will begin the week of Oct. 24.

The schedule has been established so that students will know which program they are in and which courses to take for the next semester by the time of pre-registration. For further information on the Program Fair or the Undergraduate Programs of the School of Education, contact Undergraduate and Teacher Education Advising, Student Affairs Office, School of Education, Room 125B, 5-2701.

DOONESBURY by Garry Trudeau

MR. TREVOR, WHAT EXACTLY WERE THE TERMS OF THE ORIGINAL ESTATE? WASN'T JACKIE PROVIDED WITH $250,000 A YEAR, INCLUDING $50,000 FOR HER TWO CHILDREN BY JFK?
YES, BUT AFTER TAXES, THAT REALLY WAS NOT NEARLY AS MUCH AS IT SOUNDS, PARTICULARLY IN REGARDS TO HER CHILDREN!
AND REMEMBER, THOSE FIGURES WERE SET IN 1968! IN TERMS OF 1977 BUYING POWER, $250,000 IS JUST NOT MEANINGFUL!
IT'S NOT?
LOOK, DO YOU HAVE ANY IDEA HOW MUCH IT COSTS THESE DAYS TO PREPARE A KID TO BE A KENNEDY?

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release WEDNESDAY, Oct. 5, 1977

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12 — Born today, you are by nature relatively timid. Therefore, it is to your credit you accomplish so many things that require at least an initial aggressive step.

It is difficult for you to begin a project. Making that first telephone call, ordering the essential materials, asking for and accepting loans: these are areas of activity you find very uneasy. Yet you steel yourself to act in such areas, and you act successfully. With wisdom, intelligence, humor and a degree of self-motivation, you can work the most unpromising endeavor into a gainful enterprise.

Inclined to overwork, you give your loved ones less than they desire of your presence and attention. You would do well, especially if you are away from home a great deal, to give your full attention to each family member in turn and separately as often as you can. Make this a conscious effort on your part. Ultimately, it will become a habit and both everyone will be happier. The key word, however, is "full." To give loved ones only half your attention or to pretend attention is to work against both yourself and them.

You are exceptionally brave, though there are few who realize it. As difficult as it is to make contacts necessary to success, you make them. And you go forward, making one aggressive move after another, when it would be easier for you to maintain the status quo. Those who know you in a professional or business capacity only would be surprised to know how unnatural for you these activities really are.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Transportation problems bring about an emergency situation. Meet it calmly and you will meet it successfully.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care that a breakdown in communications does not cause a worsening of a particularly joyous relationship in the home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Reconsider an opinion you've been handying about concerning another's trustworthiness. You may be causing more harm than you think.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Experiences offer the clue to present difficulties with at-home projects. Look to your store of memories.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Creative instincts are to be catered to at this time. Don't delay should you feel a need to communicate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Contribute to another's success by not actively contributing at all. Allow a friend to act on his own.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care not to jump the gun where career advancement is concerned. Wait until you are well prepared to handle the next step up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Profit comes your way – not, however, profit of a material sort. Accept accolades from those who look to you for a model of behavior.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Little things mean more than you think. Look to another for the help you need in meeting challenges around the home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A complaint in the right direction brings an answer to your present difficulties on the employment scene. Speak your mind – tactfully.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take command of your own activities. You may have been following poor advice lately; count on your own sense of propriety.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Unless your plans are realistic in terms of your own talents and preparedness, they will go for nought.

Nobel prize awarded for physics

STOCKHOLM, Sweden [AP] — A 78-year-old American known as the "father of modern magnetism" and his former student at Harvard shared the Nobel prize for physics yesterday with a Briton. A Russian-born Belgian was awarded the prize for chemistry.

The Swedish Academy gave 1977 Nobel awards to John H. Van Vleck, 78, of Harvard University, Philip W. Anderson, 55, of Princeton University and Bell Laboratories, Sir Nevill F. Mott, 72, of England's Cavendish Laboratory, and Ilya Prigogine, 60, of the Free University of Brussels.

The physicists, who will divide a $145,000 prize, were cited for research on the electronic structure of magnetic and "disordered" systems — work already applied to development of the laser, new industrial uses of glass and copper spirals for birth control devices.

Prigogine won the $145,000 chemistry prize for expanding thermodynamic theory — which deals with transforming heat into energy — to explain how order can exist within seemingly disordered environmental systems. An academy member said the Belgian's research could have a bearing on the development of solar energy.

The academy continued a trend of awarding the physics prize to two or more researchers and the chemistry prize to an individual. Last year's chemistry winner was William S. Lipscomb of Harvard University.

Announcement of the physics prize was delayed by a three-hour debate over which of three groups of candidates on a secret list would get it.

Van Vleck and Anderson were the 43rd and 44th Americans to win the physics prize, shared last year by Burton Richter and Samuel Ting when Americans swept all five Nobels given.

Van Vleck, who is Hollis Professor Emeritus of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at Harvard, said in Cambridge that the award was a "complete surprise. So often prizes go to younger men. Anybody couldn't help feeling that it is a culmination when you're 78 years old."

Van Vleck began the work that led to the prize in 1927, only a year after the theory of quantum mechanics was stated. This theory, he said, enabled him to determine "why certain materials are magnetic and why they have the properties they do."

The academy said Van Vleck was the first to point out the importance of electron correlation — the interaction between the motions of the electrons.

As Van Vleck's student at Harvard in the 1940s, it said, Anderson developed this concept to explain how magnetic "moments" can occur in metals like copper and silver, which in pure form are not magnetic.

Anderson, a consulting director at Bell Labs and a Princeton professor, said at his home in New Vernon, N.J., that it was a privilege to share the Nobel with two "already great historical figures."

Offense to hospital cost program

BOSTON [AP] — The Dukakis administration is going on the offensive to save the state's certificate of need program from a variety of bills designed to put the hospital cost control program.

Under the program hospitals require special approval to expand their facilities or make major investments in equipment. The program has saved consumers about $100 million since it began in 1972 by prohibiting needless and costly expansion programs, said Human Services Secretary Jerald Stevens.

Stevens made the comment at Tuesday's meeting of the governor's cabinet, where top state officials mapped strategies to defeat a number of pending bills aimed at weakening the certificate of need program.

Ten bills are pending in the House to provide special exemptions for hospitals whose expansion plans were turned down by the Public Health Council. Among those is a $30 million 266-bed replacement facility for New England Baptist Hospital.

"They are voting against the citizens of the commonwealth in terms of cost," Stevens said of the legislative effort. "They are voting against labor, business and the elderly.... These individual bills have become a symbol of a legislator's popularity."

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said, "It's a serious problem, these efforts to riddle the certificate of need program with a lot of large holes."

Another bill, sponsored by the Massachusetts Hospital Association, would exempt research projects at major teaching hospitals from the cerfiticate of need requirements. Dukakis called that bill "a serious breech of faith," by the MHA.

That bill is expected to be acted on Wednesday by the legislature's Health Care Committee.

Dukakis called on his cabinet to exert "great pressure" over the next two weeks to defeat the bills and to support an effort to reform the program.

Those reforms, Stevens said, would require the Public Health Council to make certificate of need decisions within eight months. It would also bring under the program purchases by doctors of all equipment over $150,000.

Stevens said Walter Muther of Associated Industries of Massachusetts and Frank Manning of the Council of Older Americans had already been enlisted to lobby on the issue.

Discrimination fight continues

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Allan Bakke, the 37-year-old engineer who claims "reverse discrimination" against whites is keeping him out of medical school reaches the crucial point Wednesday in his legal fight to enter the University of California.

The nine justices of the U.S. Supreme Court have set aside an hour and 45 minutes to hear his case argued.

After being deluged with 50 or more briefs, the justices doubtless have firmly in mind what they want to ask lawyers for Bakke and the University, which is fighting to keep its special admissions program for the disadvantaged.

U.S. Solicitor General Wade McCree also must expect some sharp queries about the Carter administration's stand on consideration of race in determinating who gets into professional schools.

Attorneys equipped with a smooth typewritten statement often end with it in shreds as they attempt to satisfy legal points that bother one or more members of the court.

Numerous civil rights, labor and other groups with an interest in affirmative action programs for blacks have asked for a chance to speak, but all have been turned down.

As the final hour approached, interested onlookers continued to speak out while Bakke himself said little.

"I prefer to stay out of it in a personal sense," the Vietnam veteran told reporters. "I'm not participating in the publicity aspect of it. I prefer to let the case stand on its own merits and let the discussion proceed."

On the other hand Merritt Weisinger, attorney for a white registrant who won her way into the university medical school at Davis on the strength of Bakke's state court victory, called on Justice Thurgood Marshall to disqualify himself from the case.

That decision will be strictly up to Marshall, a black who was chief counsel for the NAACP during racial litigation of the 1960s.

The Congressional Black Caucus released the brief it filed in the case, which says in part:

"Any vacillation or hesitation by this court in reaffirming the fundamental principles at stake in this case may well sound the death knell of the progress made since this court's 1954 school desegregation decision in Brown versus Board of Education."

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights said it will "crusade" for affirmative action programs. Chairman Arthur Fleming told a news conference "we think it is unfortunate for affirmative action to be slowed down by the semantic discussion over quotas, timetables and numbers."

Bakke probably is in for a considerable wait before the court puts its written opinion, along with any separate dissents or concurrences, in final form and announces the result.

Sports fantasy revisited

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

I like to be different.

Therefore, when I contemplated what type of sports fantasy I wanted fulfilled by Len Berman and channel 4 in Boston, I thought along lines that bordered on insanity.

I wrote to Berman that I had an unquenchable desire to shrink 1,000 times my normal size, like the travelers in Fantastic Voyage, so that I could be injected into the blood stream of the four baseball managers involved in the 1977 play-offs. Then, I could travel to their brains and find out what the hell they were thinking about, because they certainly defied baseball logic.

My letter went something like this:

Dear Len,

I just finished reading a book that says it's possible for people to shrink 1,000 times their normal size and says that it's possible to inject them along with a shrunken space craft into the blood stream to ride around and search inside the human body.

I found that kindda interestin', so I was wonderin' if you'd help me shrink, so that I could ride that space craft along Tom Lasorda's, Dan Ozark's, Dorrell Herzog's and Billy Martin's bloodstreams and maybe, just maybe, explore their brains.

Do you (Len) think you could arrange a meeting with the managers?

I'd really aapreciate it. If the managers are afraid of the injection that will propel me through their blood stream, convince them that it doesn't hurt that much.

I suppose you're wonderin' why I want to ride into their brains, so I've included a list of reasons:

—In the first National League play-off game, Dodger manager Tom Lasorda allowed reliever Elias Sosa to remain in the game in the top of the ninth with two men on and one out to face heavy hitting Mike Schmidt (38 homers in 1977) Schmidt singled home the winning run and Lasorda still kept Sosa atop the mound to face (of all people), Greg Luzinski (39 homers in 1977). Sosa balked home another run and the Dodgers lost, 7-5.

—Dan Ozark, the Phillies manager, was no Joe McCarthy either in game 1, as he brought in southpaw Tug McGraw to preserve a victory against a team with only one legitimate left hand swinger (Rick Monday) and one switch hitter Reggie Smith). Way to go Dan!

—Dorrell "my parents couldn't spell Darrell" Herzog, the KC Royals manager, twice yanked starter Paul Splittorff when it appeared the southpaw had enough spunk to finish. Herzog pulled Splittorff in game 1 with a 5-run lead in the ninth because he gave up a Yankee lead-off single. It didn't matter in game 1 as the Royals routed, but in game 5 it cost the Royals the American League Pennant.

In game 5 Splittorff had baffled the Yanks for 7 innings and had a 3-1 lead, but when Willie Randolph opened the eighth with a single, Herzog came charging out of the dugout and lifted Splittorff. We all know what the men in pin stripes did to Bird, Mingori, Leonard, Gura, and Littell. The Yanks captured their 31st American League pennant and left the Royals still seeking their elusive first. Whitey Herzog ranks with Albert Einstein in logic.

...and Billy Martin. The much maligned manager of the Yanks has taken his raps from the press and his own team, but he did lead the egomaniacs to their second straight division title.

But Len, how can Martin justify benching pitchers like Catfish Hunter and Ken Holtzman and how can he keep a powerful bat like Jackson's out of pivotal game 5?

Len, I'm afraid that the list of managerial goofs continues, but I'm just dying to get into their brains, so I'm just presenting all the mistakes so you won't have any doubts concerning my sincerity.

—In game 2 of the National League Playoffs Dan Ozark kept people wondering when he left Jim Lonberg atop the mound after LA's Dusty Baker had just powdered a grand slam. Perhaps he had to please the bookies.

—In game 2 of the American Leage Playoffs our pal Whitey Herzog did it again. He goofed. Granted the Royals Andy Hassler is no Sandy Koufax, but he was doing an effective job against the Bronx Bombers as the score was knotted in 2 in the sixth. Hassler had gotten two Yanks out in the sixth with Munson on first when Herzog lifted Hassler. Ironically, the slender lefty had just induced the powerful Reggie Jackson to pop-up. Why did he pull Hassler? Marvelous Mark Littell came in and gave up 3 runs, as The New Yorkers breezed, 6-2.

Len, I'm afraid to say that Whitey must know the same bookies as Dan Ozark.

—In game 3 of the NL series, Lasorda goofed. He brought in Doug Rau to pitch a 1-2-3 seventh, but mysteriously lifted him and brought in Sosa to pitch the eighth. LA's Sosa proceeded to give up two runs and the Phils possessed a 5-3 lead going into the ninth. But LA thanked God for those umpires and their bizarre ninth inning comeback.

—In game 3 of the AL series, Dennis Leonard saved Herzog from the pains of thinking, but Whitey almost made a fatal mistake by benching Amos Otis. It was an Otis pinch hit double that plated two runs and pushed the Royals to a 6-2 win.

—In game 4 of the AL series-our hero-Herzog started lefty Larry Gura against the Yankees. Gura hadn't beaten the Yanks all year and he didn't beat them in game 4. Ironically, the Royals had a pitcher named Jim Colburn with an 18-14 record sitting in the bullpen.

Well, that's it. I've just finished listing my reasons "why" I want to(not a) shrink and "why" I want to ride aboard that shrunken space craft into the four managers blood streams and eventually explore their brains. I'm dying to take that Fantastic Voyage. If you can't get Lasorda, Ozark, Martin, and Herzog together at one time, I'll be satisfied with Herzog. He's got enough kinks to keep me in his brain for 13 years.

I know it's a weird request — but I like to be different.

Insincerely Yours,
Sigmun Freud

★Yanks take game one

hadn't been for Randolph, Sutton might have prevailed.

It was Randolph who tied the game with a leadoff homer in the sixth and it was Randolph who led off the eighth with a walk and then scored all the way from first on Munson's double to give the Yankees a 3-2 lead.

Elias Sosa came on in relief and prevented any further damage by pitching out of a one-out bases-loaded situation.

Yankees' manager Billy Martin gambeld on starting Gullett because of his sore shoulder and at first it looked as if the move had backfired.

Unable to get the ball over the plate in the first inning, Gullett opened the game by walking Lopes. Russell promptly lined a triple to left center to give Los Angeles a 1-0 lead.

Gullett then walked Reggie Smith and Ron Cey drove the second run home with a long fly to left-center field. With Dick Tidrow warming up in the bullpen, Gullett then got a break that kept him in the game.

On a 3-1 pitch to Steve Garvey, Smith broke for second and then stopped midway down the line as Garvey swung and missed. Smith was tagged out by Gullett in a rundown and that took the Dodgers out of a potential big inning as Garvey walked on the next pitch.

Gullett was able to escape without further damage in the inning and settled down after that.

The hard-throwing left-hander allowed only three more hits through the sixth but got another break in the sixth when Garvey was thrown out at the plate on a controversial call by umpire Nestor Chylak.

Garvey beat out a bunt down the third base line with one out, and one out later, rookie Glenn Burke executed a perfect hit-and-run single through the second base hole vacated by Randolph. Garvey, running all the way, challenged center fielder Mickey Rivers' weak arm and appeared to have the throw beaten as Munson made a diving tag. But Chylak, after waiting to make certain Munson held the ball, signaled out, prompting an argument from manager Tom Lasorda and Garvey. A television replay, though shown from a difficult angle, appeared to support the Dodgers' contention that Garvey was safe.

Sutton, who has never lost in post-season play, was almost as effective as Gullett as he scattered seven hits over the first seven innings.

The Yankees scored a run off him in the first after two were out when Munson, Jackson and Chambliss stroked successive two-out singles. But after that only Randolph's homer in th sixth hurt him until the eighth.

Sutton, who has never lost in post-season play, was almost as effective as Gullett as he scattered seven hits over the first seven innings.

JV gridders eke by Green

The UMass J.V. Football team used a second half rally to overcome a 7-0 deficit thereby defeating a tough Dartmouth eleven, 12-7. Poor field position plagued the Minutemen throughout the first half as a turnover at the UMass 15 set up the lone Dartmouth score in the first quarter. Solid defense was the key to keeping the gridmen in the contest as J.V. coach Clarence Brooks termed the linebackers and defensive secondary as swinging the balance of the game.

The second half saw a complete turnaround in the character of the game. The offensive unit had the advantage of scoring opportunities from good field position and the absence of costly mistakes and turnovers. Defensive back Jack Mula set the comeback in motion with a big interception and returned it deep into Big Green territory. A few offensive plays later tailback Dale Holmes bulled his way in from the 2 yard line. The extra point was blocked though, so the Minutemen reached the fourth quarter still trailing by one point.

But it was here in the fourth, that the gridmen put it all together. The defense was untouchable, and the offense behind the leadership of freshman quarterback John Kraham put together a 45 yard drive with John Seccorso going over from the three. The big play in that drive was an excellent pass from Kraham to Bob Clock. This extra point was also no good but the J.V.'s held a 13-7 lead, which they never relinquished.

Defensively Mula was the standout, and as for the offense Steve Milkiewicz carried the burden as the fullback grounded out well over one hundred yards.

As added incentive for the UMass team, it was the first game the Dartmouth subvarsity has lost in approximately four years. Last year was the closest the streak had come to being ended as these two teams played to a 20-20 tie. So with a first game like this under their belt Coach Brooks and his squad can only be pleased with the results.

The UMass field hockey team is back from its road trip and plays Yale today on the field behind NOPE at 3:30 p.m.

Physically, the Minutewomen should be healthy and rested from their weekend trip to Cortland, N.Y. Sue Kreider suffered a black eye and missed half of the game but should be ready. Lynsie Wickman's knee, which stiffened up from the five-hour trip, should be no problem.

Yale comes to UMass with a strong team even though it lost its leading scorer from last year. Last year, when these two teams played, Yale surprised UMass and won 4-2 in the regional playoffs.

UMass, which won one and tied over the weekend, has a 5-0-1 record. The 3-2 win over Cortland marked the first time the Minutewomen have been scored upon all season. UMass goalie Kathy Gipps, said the goals were a "relief."

"You know the teams are going to score but I was getting tense wondering when they would, she said. "It was sort of a relief."

Leading scorer Cheryl Meliones added another goal to build her total to five. Julie McHugh scored the game-winner over Cortland.

The team was not up for the games on the weekend because of the long bus trip. However, UMass is home today and should be mentally ready.

"We're all up because we want revenge," confirmed Gipps. "We're ready."

Computer says series even

LOS ANGELES [UPI] - Bud Goode, a computer expert and sports nut, reported Monday his Univac Machine finds the Los Angeles Dodgers have an edge in pitching and the New York Yankees are stronger at the plate for the World Series.

Goode fed pertinent data into the computer and it showed the Dodgers with a slight edge in pitching control or times a batter is walked. The Yanks walked 8.3 per cent of the opposing batters and the Dodgers 7.8 per cent.

"The walk is an important stat," said Goode, "since one-third of all base runners score."

Univac gives the Dodgers an edge in strikeout percentage — 15.5 to 12.5 — but this is not as important as walks, Goode said.

Demonstrating their batting edge, the Yanks have an on-base average of .345 against .338 for the Dodgers. This includes walks and hit-batsmen.

Both have about the same power percentage — extra-base hits — 16.3 per cent for the Yankees and 16.9 for the Dodgers.

The Yanks, however, have a superior clutch ability — that is, 30.5 per cent of all Yankees baserunners score against 28.4 for the Dodgers.

The computer, after laboring mightily, reached the conclusion that the World Series is a toss-up and the key statistic is the bases-on-balls.

Yankee Clipper's tickets lost

NEW YORK [UPI] - Where have you gone Joe DiMaggio?

Not to the World Series — because his old ballclub, the New York Yankees, gave him a royal runaround when he came to the Yankee Stadium to pick up his tickets.

DiMaggio, the Yankees' Hall of Fame center fielder, flew in from Detroit to pick up his tickets for the Yankees-Dodgers World Series which opened Tuesday night. He arrived at Yankee Stadium early Monday morning to claim the tickets for which he had sent in a check well in advance.

Somehow, his tickets could not be located. Obliged to wait around for nearly two hours, "The world's greatest living ballplayer" became so incensed, he told the Yankees to keep the tickets.

He then called the Mets and they were able to provide him tickets immediately.

"The two clubs that have always showed me a lot of class are the Dodgers and the Mets," said DiMaggio.

Harrierwomen trek to Green-land

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team will be seeking to raise its record to 5-0 this afternoon when it travels to Hanover, New Hampshire to meet Dartmouth at 4 p.m.

Dartmouth was shellacked, 16-45 earlier in the season by Middlebury College, a team similar to UMass, so the Minutewomen do not expect much competition from their Ivy League counterparts.

In fact, coach Charlotte Lettis said she is going to treat the meet as "just a hard workout."

Dartmouth's three mile course finishes going up a ski jump, and the rest of the course is almost as hilly.

"I plan on using this meet to try to draw our top seven runners closer together," said Lettis. "I'm going to have them run together, and I'm going to do the same with the second group too."

Having a tightly knit pack of runners is important for the upcoming championship meets.

Keeping the front group close is difficult when a team posses two quality front-runners such as Jane Welzel and Tina Francario.

Welzel has finished first in three out of four races this season. She set a new course record in the Brandeis Invitational Sunday, then came back on Monday to run 13th in the Bonne Bell Mini Marathon, a 6-2 mile race.

She seems to have shaken off last season's back problems and looks ready for the New England's which will be held in the orchard October 22.

Francario, a freshman out of Brockton, has run second to Welzel in all four meets and has looked consistently strong.

A tightly knit group has been close behind them in each race so far. Priscilla Wilson is usually in third, but Sue Swartz, Debby Farmer, Barb Callanan and Linda Welzel have swapped the other positions around, with Jo Chapman standing on the verge of breaking into the front running group soon.

Last year, UMass was without three of its top runners and still shut out the Big Green, 15-45, taking eight of the top ten places in the process. That meet was at home.

Callanan, Farmer and Welzel all sat that meet out with various injuries. This afternoon they will all be healthy, and Dartmouth could be shut out farther than eighth place.

Spikers split tri-match; beat Salem St. for 1st win

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team finally made its way into the victory column by virtue of a 15-10, 15-13 sweep of Salem State in the first set of a tri-match vs. Salem and Eastern Nazarene played at NOPE gym last night.

UMass only managed to finish second in the match, however, as it bowed to Eastern Nazarene by scores of 9-15, 15-9, and 10-15 in the set for first place.

Salem State gave UMass a pair of tough games but the spikers used their height advantage to overpower the visitors. After opening up a quick 4-1 lead in the first game, UMass never trailed, although Salem did tie the game briefly at 4-4. After that point, UMass refused to let its opponent get the ball over the net as it made seom excellent blocks to roll to victory.

Both teams had difficulty getting their serves inbounds in the first part of the second game but with the score tied at five, Salem State used some well-placed shots to move out to a five point advantage. Salem extended its lead to 13-8 before the spikers came to life scoring seven unanswered points to end their five game losing streak.

The Eastern-Nazarene-Salem St. match was a definite Jekyll-Hyde affair. With their 6'2" captain, Donna Fandel, spiking at will, the team played like a well-oiled machine, totally destroying the over-matched Salem St. squad by a final tally of 15-1.

In the second game, it was as if two different teams had replaced the two visiting squads as a bored Eastern Nazarene squad was dominated by Salem, the final tally being 15-6. The deciding game was a replay of the first. The once-again invulnerable Eastern Nazarene group toyed with its opponents beating them to the tune of 15-2.

This set the stage for the UMass-Eastern Nazarene finale. Eastern Nazarene's players appeared to have their feet nailed to the floor as they stood and watched several shots drop in as UMass built up an 8-1 lead. Then it was the host's turn for some all-around sloppy play as a disorganized UMass squad let their opponents tie the game at eight. Once the momentum shifted, all was lost as Eastern Nazarene posted a 15-9 victory.

Deb Kuzdeba got the spikers off to a 4-1 lead with a couple of well placed smashes but the visitors again roared back to take a 7-5 lead in the deciding battle. With UMass fading fast, Maria Minicucci, a first year player who has just earned a starting berth, rescued the team with an impossible, sliding save, turning a sure enemy point aside. From that point on, UMass was unstoppable and went on to score a 15-9 victory.

UMass jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the deciding game but then the offense went into storage for the rest of the contest. UMass failed repeatedly to get its services over the net and in play and although Eastern Nazarene played poorly too, it managed to open up a 12-6 advantage. UMass staged a brief flurry to close within three but again, it was UMass' poor serving that killed the rally.

Coach Dianne Thompson thought the team should have won the whole match but she was fairly satisfied with the team's victory over Salem State. She said, "The win at least broke the psychological block that the team seemed to have about winning."

Yarworth scores 7 goals as Polo-ers win

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Senior Russ Yarworth scored seven goals for the UMass Water Polo club last night as the Minutemen opened up their league season with a 15-11 win over Amherst College in Boyden Pool.

The Minutemen had jumped out to an early 3-1 lead, but fell victim to a comeback spearheaded by Snow and Weeks of Amherst and only led by 7-6 at halftime. Amherst's lead didn't last long, though, as UMass came right back with two quick goals in the opening minutes of the third period and never lost the lead enroute to the win.

Although somewhat inexperienced, the UMass defense looked fairly solid and was anchored by Ric Notini in goal who turned in several outstanding saves. But, the defense did make several mistakes that resulted in goals as the Lord Jeffs were quick to capitalize on them.

Other scorers for the Minutemen included Chris Lomas with two goals and Bob DeConnick, Rick Mansfield, Bill Tharion, John McIver, Stu Carlisle, and John Gallagher who contributed one goal apiece.

Last weekend, the polo team played in a non-league invitational tournament at M.I.T. defeating R.P.I. while losing to Boston College and UConn. That tournament was won by M.I.T. while the Minutemen came up with a fourth place finish.

According to club president Bill Tharion, the polo-men should have a season that is comparable to last year's 6-6 squad although several key starters were lost to graduation.

"We're not as strong as we were last year, but I'm pretty optimistic," said Tharion.

From here, the Minutemen are preparing to host Mt. Hebron Academy tonight at 6:30 and will play the visiting Owls of Westfield State at 6:30 and will play the visiting Owls of Westfield State at 6:30 on tomorrow night. Both contests will take place in Boyden Pool.

Last Spring, the Minutemen had a strong campaign and were crowned New England champs at the close of the season. This year may not be a repeat performance due to several first year players who were exposed to their first intercollegiate competition in that M.I.T. tournament.

POLO SHORTS: Russ Yarworth adds speed to the UMass attack as he is also a member of the men's varsity swim team and holds several records...the fast breaks and scoring plays in the game are very similar to those employed in basketball...Yarworth wants to know why Don O'Mallley didn't show up for his swim team physical.....the polo-men play an exciting game and would like to see more spectators at their games.

Blair singles home winning run

Yanks edge Dodgers in twelfth

NEW YORK (UPI) — Yanks' Willie Randolph leads off the sixth with a solo home run off LA's Don Sutton that knotted the score at 2. Randolph scored the go-ahead run in the eighth....

.... and Paul Blair is interviewed after game winning single in the twelfth inning that gave the Yanks a 4-3 win in the World Series opener. (UPI)

NEW YORK [UPI] — Willie Randolph, a low wattage in his club's power-packed lineup, homered in the sixth inning, then doubled and scored the winning run on Paul Blair's 12th-inning single last night to give the New York Yankees a 4-3 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers in the first game of the World Series.

The Yankees mounted their winning rally against reliever Rick Rhoden, the fifth Dodgers' pitcher, when Randolph led off the 12th with a double into the right field corner. Rhoden then issued an intentional walk to Thurman Munson and Blair, a late-inning replacement for Reggie Jackson in right field, drilled a 2-2 pitch for a single to left after failing to sacrifice twice.

Sparky Lyle, the Yankees' answer to the Red Cross, saved the victory with 3 2-3 scoreless innings to gain credit for his third straight post-season triumph. Lyle also won the last two American League playoff games against Kansas City and now has a string of 10 1-3 scoreless innings in post-season competition.

The Yankees, an underdog, now need three more victories in the best-of-seven series to win their first championship since 1962. The second game of the series will be played at Yankee Stadium tonight with the teams then switching to Los Angeles for the next three games beginning Friday night. Burt Hooton will pitch for the Dodgers tonight against Jim "Catfish" Hunter, who will be making his first appearance for the Yankees since Sept. 10.

The Dodgers, who had fallen behind 3-2 on Munson's run-scoring double in the eighth inning, bounced back to tie the score in the ninth when southpaw Don Gullett finally ran out of gas after a strong effort.

Held to only four hits by Gullett over the first eight innings, Dusty Baker led off the ninth with a single, followed by the play that almost cost the Yankees the game.

With pinch hitter Manny Mota batting, Baker was picked off first base by Munson but eluded first baseman Chris Chambliss' tag and dived back safely to the base. Gullett retired Mota on a soft fly to right but walked Steve Yeager on four pitches and was replaced by relief ace Lyle, who was greeted by pinch-hitter Lee Lacy's single which scored Baker.

For six innings, Gullett and Don Sutton locked up in a classic pitching duel and if it

Netwomen vs. South Conn.

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis will be in action at home today, when it takes on Southern Connecticut at 3:00 on the NOPE courts.

Although UMass coach Bill Yu feels his team should win today's and its two remaining regular season matches, it won't be an easy victory. Southern Conn. beat Smith, 6-3, whereas the Minutewomen only edged by Smith, 5-4.

Yu and his team are now 3-4, following losses to Tufts and Dartmouth at away matches over the long weekend.

In Medford on Friday, UMass fell to Tufts, 1-6. The team's only victory was netted by its powerful first doubles team of Dawn Minaai and Jennifer Ranz, which won 7-5, 7-6. Falling to tough opponents were singles players Cathy Maher, 2-6, 5-7, Lee Robb — 1-6, 5-7, Jackie Isgur — 4-6, 2-6, Carolyn Mooney — 0-6, 2-6, and the second doubles team of Martha Awiszus and Sherrie Lurie, which lost 0-6, 3-6.

Against Dartmouth on Monday, the Minutewomen lost 2-5. The doubles teams of Martha Awiszus and Sherrie Lurie and Jane and Chris Carson captured the two UMass wins, with scores of 6-4, 7-5, and 7-6, 6-7, 7-6 respectively. All four UMass singles players lost, as did the first doubles team of Dawn Minaai and Jennifer Ranz.

Although Yu said his squad played well against Tufts and Dartmouth, he felt both teams had better players and more depth. Much of that is because they recruit players, he noted.

ABC flexes its bankroll

Last night, as everyone from here to the Panama Canal must now know, marked the start of the annual fall classic, the World Series.

Ho-hum, you say. Big deal. It happens every fall. But, baseball and media freaks, this year marked the beginning of what could be a dangerous tradition.

ABC is broadcasting the World Series.

Yes, that network which has brought us such uplifting shows as Charlie's Angels, Mr. T and Tina, and the Love Boat, is now taking control of baseball's yearly extravaganza.

And why did ABC get control of the World Series? Simple. Money.

Professional baseball is no different from the rest of professional sports. The dollar sign dictates just what will happen within the sport's structure.

According to Boston Globe SporTView columnist Jack Craig, NBC had held the rights for televising major league baseball for 21 years. But when its then-current contract for $72 million had ran out at the end of the 1975 season, the major leagues renegotiated a deal which included both ABC and NBC in its framework.

Craig said the new deal, also to run four years, brought baseball $92.8 million. The agreement stipulated that NBC broadcast was to all Saturday afternoon games, while ABC had the rights to Monday night games.

But the sticky part of the new arrangement was involved in the televising of post-season play. It was agreed that NBC and ABC would alternate their television; i.e., switch off years.

In 1976, for example, NBC broadcast the Series, while ABC had control of the play-offs. This year, though, the roles are reversed.

Actually, when the new televising package was announced, NBC professed disbelief that it was being forced to share its televising rights with another network.

"NBC had held the rights for 21 years," Craig said. "So much for loyalty."

Yes, so much for loyalty. Big bucks told the story here, as it so often does in professional sports.

All that aside, the $20 million increase dictated the network switch. The change certainly wasn't based on talent.

ABC, which has grown from the number three network in America to number one in the space of just a few years, has already contributed to the ruination of prime time television with its steady diet of trite, banal, and sometimes downright sexist shows. Now it's setting out to ruin baseball.

What ABC is doing is trying to hype an unhypable sport. Baseball needs no daytime or prime-time pushing. Baseball does not need to be speeded up to suit the whims of a network. Most people enjoy baseball just for what it is — a calm, serene, slow-paced game, an oasis in a world of time-oriented sports.

Baseball needs no high-powered salesmen. It attracts people because they appreciate it for being a 'thinking man's sport,' one in which the cerebral often outweighs the physical.

Baseball thrives on a low-key approach. No need for a Howard Cosell to constantly irritate people with his obvious lack of class. No need for Bob Uecker to continually tell viewers of his not-so-splendid career. And, certainly, no need for irrelevant statistical information which just causes the head to cloud and for one to shout "Enough!"

All the sport of baseball needs to be a success on TV is low-key announcers, less hype, and more of the game. Baseball is not orchestrated for the attention of the spectators. It is not enhanced by cackling announcers. It sells itself.

And so ABC, that marvelous network which has given Roone Arledge the job of (heaven forbid!) rejuvenating its news department, is broadcasting the World Series.

Which, I guess, just goes to show that even though the number one network in America is broadcasting the number one sporting spectacle in the land, it won't necessarily be the number one production around.

Far from it.

Supreme Court starts hearings on Bakke

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Allan Bakke's lawyer told the Supreme Court yesterday the University of California violated the Constitution in denying him admission to its medical school, discriminating against him because he is white.

But Archibald Cox, the university's lawyer, and Solicitor General Wade McCree, presenting the federal government's side in the closely watched "reverse discrimination case," argued that professional schools must not be blind to race if the nation is to remedy past discrimination.

Attorney Reynold Colvin, representing the 37-year-old twice-rejected white candidate for the University of California's Medical School at Davis, said the university was wrong in setting aside 16 of 100 admissions slots for members of minorities.

Cox and McCree, disagreed sharply — McCree declaring that "to be blind to race today is to be blind to reality."

"We are here asking the court to give us the full dimensions of the 14th amendment," which provides equal protection of law for all persons, he said.

At one point, Cox was asked if the university was imposing a "quota" on whites by setting aside the openings for minorities, and replied that while that might be true, it did not amount to "pointing a finger... It was not stigmatizing in the way the old quota against Jews was stigmatizing."

"The facts here have none of the aspects that lead us to think of quotas as a bad word," Cox said. "It doesn't say you are inferior. It isn't forced."

Justice Thurgood Marshall, the court's only black, asked Colvin if he would be making the same argument if only one slot had been reserved.

"Numbers are unimportant," Colvin said.

"You are arguing about keeping somebody out and the other side is talking about getting somebody in. It depends on how you look at it," Marshall remarked.

Colvin told the court the factual circumstances of the case are vitally important.

"Normally, if we have a goal we select a standard and above that standard we admit

Senate plans bargaining strategy

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The student senate last night passed a motion to create a six member collective bargaining committee to coordinate student efforts at faculty and administration bargaining sessions.

The senate defeated an amendment by Student Government Association Co-President Jon Hite calling for Hite and Co-President Pinky Batiste to chose one member of the committee and for one of the co-presidents to sit on the committee.

In other business the senate endorsed a petition supporting decriminatlization of marijuana. The senate also voted Jeffrey Lutsky to serve as acting Attorney General for one week; pending approval by the governmental affairs committee of the process through which he was chosen.

The collective bargaining proposal created a committee to search for the student observer to sit at the negotiation table during faculty and administration negotiations. The committee will also coordinate the efforts of UMass grad. students and UMass Boston students in the negotiations.

In the original proposal, the committee would have included five members selected by the coodinating committee with Senate approval. The undergrad observer would be the sixth member.

Hite introduced an amendment to have seven members on the committee. Two members would be chosen by the SGA co-presidents one of the co-presidents would sit on the committee and two more would be chosen by the Senate. One would be selected by the coordinating committee and the seventh member would be the student observer.

Hite gave many reasons to support his proposal. He said the negotiations were "too big a thing to be handled ultimately by the SGA presidents or the senate alone."

Hite also cited constitutional reasons for his amendment. Article III, section I, of the constitution says "The President shall be responsible for relations between the SGA and the administration, faculty, and Board of Trustees." Hite said "If I'm going to be accountable (for the SGA) then dammit we better have some input".

The senate debated if the committee is a senate committee or an SGA committee and who best represent the students. Senator Adam Auster cited the constitutional statement declaring the senate as the "supreme representative body".

Homecoming begins tonight; many activities scheduled

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

You needn't be a football fan, a member of the greek system, or an alumni to enjoy this fall's homecoming festivities beginning tonight.

Amidst all the hoopla this weekend, there will be a wide variety of entertainment on campus for everyone to indulge in.

Most of the shows and events are scheduled at separate times to allow the determined enthusiast a chance to see them all.

The National Touring Company will present "Cabaret" in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Thursday, October 13 at 8 p.m. Unfortunately, this one-time-only performance is SOLD OUT.

The musical production features some home-grown talent in Peter Boynton, a 1977 UMass graduate who plays Clifford Bradshaw and sings the solo "Why Should I Wake Up."

There are no tickets remaining for the performance, part of the Broadway Series at the Fine Arts Center.

George Benson will appear tonight at 8 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage. Tickets will be available at the door. The cost is $5.00 with a student ID, $6.50 without.

Contrary to current rumor, Curry Hicks Cage is not "a pit." The basketball floor is down and there is no dirt anywhere. According to a member of the Union Program Council, the program's sponsor, the place is "all fixed up and looks great."

As of yesterday only 2000 tickets had been sold, leaving the Union Program Council with 2200 tickets and an $11,000 deficit. "As students this can only wind up coming out of our own pockets." If students don't start coming out of the walls to buy tickets today, according to the SUPC, there will never be another Union-sponsored concert.

Friday Night, October 14

To generate the homecoming football spirit, the Homecoming Float Parade sponsored by the Greek Council will begin at 7:15 p.m. at Haigus Mall. (The area encompassed by SBA, Whitmore and the Fine Arts Center).

The parade features floats and cars decorated by fraternities and sororities, The ROTC color guard, the UMass marching band, majorettes, cheerleaders, clowns, jugglers and other events.

The parade will wind around downtown Amherst to the reviewing stand in the center of town by the Post Office. Judges will award prizes to the best Greek and non-Greek float. The parade will then wind back to the mall where it will end at the doors of the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

At this point, The 3rd Annual Multiband Pops Concert will begin. The concert is presented free of charge at 8:15 p.m. and features the UMass marching band (fresh from the parade), the symphony band wind ensemble, the Dixie-Land band, two Jazz workshop bands, and a special appearance by the University Dancers.

The concert emcee will be Diane Luciani, well-known UMass baton twirler.

The show features music of all types and should appeal to everyone, as proved by the packed audiences of previous Homecoming performances.

Econ tutors given funds

By DUANE A. STEVENS
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Economics Council (UEC) was recently granted funds for the purpose of providing tutors for students having difficulty with economics courses.

The action granting the funds came as the end result of a coordinated effort by the UEC, including a petition presented to Department Chairman Dr. Donald Katzner by a student from Economics 204, and consultation with Dean Alfange of the College of Arts and Sciences.

According to UEC member Dave Boutilier, the student who presented the petition to Katzner was having problems in receiving help from his professor.

While the program is still in the planning stages, the UEC hopes to provide three or four upperclassmen economics majors to assist students in Economics 103, 104, 203 and 204 who are having difficulty with these courses.

Professor James J. Kindahl, commenting on the program said, "the tutoring of undergraduates by undergraduates is effective because of the relatively narrow age differential between most students. As a result, students are more attuned to other students' problems than are professors," he said.

The UEC was founded in spring 1976 with the basic overriding principle that undergraduates should be allowed greater decision-making power in the quality and content of their education.

According to Boutilier, it was especially crucial that lines of communication be opened up between students and faculty, and that a sense of community be developed among students.

Boutilier said providing services to students (such as course counselling, providing career information and the maintenance of a graduate school catalog collection) would be a major function of the UEC. He also said a newsletter will be published soon and sent to students. He added a significant achievement of the UEC had been the placement of six student requested courses into the economics curriculum for the fall semester 1976.

The UEC office and a student study lounge is located in Thompson 100. Persons interested in either the tutoring program or the UEC are welcome to drop by.

Carter faces tougher policy issues

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

The new Panama Canal treaty may be President Carter's top priority in foreign policy, but there are even more important foreign issues, facing the country today according to a U.S. State Department official. David Scott Palmer, Chairman of the Latin American Studies of The Foreign Service Institute of the U.S. State Department who cited U.S.-Mexican relations as one example of "foreign policy issues which are infinitely more complex" than the Panama Canal treaty.

"U.S. policy will not stand or fall on the Panama Canal decisions", Palmer told an audience at Smith College last night.

Although he did not discuss the specifics of the treaty, Palmer said it represented a shift in official U.S. perception of Latin American countries. "It is time," Palmer said, "for the United States to look at Latin America as it should look at the Third World: not in terms of East-West relations or in terms of security, but in terms of North-South issues."

Palmer said the North-South issues included economic, national and social issues.

He noted the East-West, North-South conceptions were not his own but were from official U.S. documents.

Palmer said, "the implication of the Panama Canal treaty is that the treaty is important not in issues of security, but in the perception of the degree of maturity of Third World countries, as if they were important actors on the world stage." He noted the U.S. had previously dealt with Latin American countries differently from the way it dealt with other nations.

Earlier in his speech, Palmer outlined the contexts, relating to the Carter administration, in which he felt the treaty ought to be viewed.

He said, "it must be recognized that there are multiple factors involved, not just the U.S. and country X or Y" which can affect any treaty being negotiated. Secondly, there are different policies for different parts of the world, at any point in time. Third, policy tends to be cumulative — rarely can a person point to abrupt alterations. Any policy starts out in very small ways and gradually, if it has merit, advances into a dominate policy."

Palmer cited the Carter administration's human rights policy and the Panama Canal treaty as examples of policies which took a long time to develop. Even the human rights policy, he said, existed as an issue long before Carter took office, although he was first to address it as an administrative priority.

During a brief question and answer session, Palmer said he thought it unlikely the treaty would be ratified during the present session in Congress. Chances for ratification would be only slightly better during the next session, he said, and could possibly take up to three years to ratify.

Alumni 'Skills Bank' gives advice on work

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Focusing on the plight of Arts and Sciences seniors who face graduation and possible unemployment in June, Kenneth Somers, administrative assistant to the director of student services, has created and developed the first Alumni Skills Bank Program for 1977. In cooperation with the Alumni Advisory Council and the Placement Office in Hampshire House, Somers will be hosting the first of three Fall sessions designed to advise students on interviews, resumes, personal presentation and the working achievement.

The program begins tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Campus Center Room 171 with a panel discussion between interested students, faculty, and five alumni. A moderator will also be present to direct topics of discussion and questions.

The proposed format "evisions three distinct but related sessions," according to recommendations made to the Alumni Advisory Council by Dan Fitzpatrick of the Placement Office staff in a June memorandum. The first session will comprise alumni representing business, industrial and community service professions to expose "undirected" students to a variety of career opportunities.

The second session scheduled for Oct. 27 and 28, will host alumni who have made their careers in business and industry for the benefit of "the business major". The third session to be held on November 10 and 11 will provide information for students concerned with futures in service areas.

More than 40 Alumni responded to a letter requesting participation in the Alumni Skills Bank Program. Alumni were signed up for the three sessions according to the flexibility of their scheduling and alumni have been advised by the Placement Office to cover issues relating to their own situations and experiences.

Alumni participants will answer questions such as "What is it like to go to work?", "What has my career path been like", and "What kinds of training programs, if any, do firms in your industry offer?"

Persons involved in the program are optimistic about the success of providing students with relevent and useful information about what is often referred to as "the real world".

Glass smashed at garage

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

Vandals broke into the service station garage at Tillson Farm Sunday night and smashed $2,000 worth of glass, campus police reported.

Fifty-three windows panes on the north side of the garage, and the windshields of nine state vehicles were shattered, police said. It is only one of several weekend incidents involving vandalism.

Late Saturday night someone hurled a rock at the plate glass window next to the Campus Center Music Library, leaving a 10-foot crack across its surface. Repairmen have taped-up the damage, estimated at $500, police said.

In another incident, someone drove their automobile around a wet open field between the football stadium and lot 22 Sunday, digging up dirt and grass at a cost of $150, campus police reported.

More windows were smashed Sunday night in the storage shed on the North Village Access Road, one-half mile from the Tillson Farm garage, police said. No connection has been made between the two incidents.

Safety topic of fire week

By JOAN ARBETTER
Collegian Staff

Last year at UMass there were 69 fires which caused over $30,000 in campus wide damages. The United States has the highest death rate by fire in the world. Nationwide, 7400 fires at colleges caused $27 million in damages. During National Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 9-15, the department of Environmental Health and Safety will focus on the need for active fire prevention and safety.

Last year, according to Fire and Safety Officer Keith Hoyle, there were fires in Cance and Washington that each cost $5000. Other fires were in Hasbrook Lab, JQA, and Hamlin.

The fires are frequently caused by candles, flammable storage articles, frayed electric chords and in the case of Washington there were cardboard boxes too close to a clothes drying unit.

Other fire hazards are combustibles dorm rooms, improper disposal of cigarette ends and — against University regulations — cooking in student rooms, hotplates and burning candles without a glass protective covering.

Fire safety orientation sessions for all secretaries and custodians will be conducted today. Contact Keith Hoyle for information at 5-2682.

UM Bakke debate— forum for discussion

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

While many students may still wonder what all the furor over some Californian named Allan Bakke is all about, those who attended Tuesday night's debate in Mahar Auditorium have a much clearer idea. While the debate provided a good forum for discussing the facts of the case, it also pointed out more vividly the possible implications of the case — and just how strongly many people feel about it.

News Analysis

In his opening remarks, Moderator Brian DeLima termed the debate an "educational forum" designed to educate the community about the case. For those who came to hear a highly structured, fact-filled exchange of two opposing viewpoints with a clear-cut victory, the proceedings must have been a disappointment. Although the participants appeared well briefed, the debate frequently turned into an emotion-filled, verbal slugfest that went so far as to include personal attacks on opposing debaters.

Most guilty was Plaisel Benjamin, former UMass Afro-American Studies professor, whose factual content and forceful delivery was impressive, but whose attacks on pro-Bakke speaker Allan Kort tarnished his presentation.

Benjamin claimed Kort had a "profound lack of understanding of American history," and suggested Kort stick to Russian history, in which he holds a doctorate. While Benjamin himself showed a profound understanding of American history, his hostile attack played on the emotions of a crowd that had sat quietly through the statements of two constitutional lawyers and was ready to react strongly to anything.

That such attacks were made and continued to be made to a lesser degree from both sides, reveals the explosiveness of the case.

One student, upon leaving the Auditorium, called it "the most subjective debate I've ever seen," and complained the participants did not stick to the case.

It became clear, however, that the exact facts of University of California vs. Allan Bakke are hard to come by. Stan Kinard, organizer of the debate, said Monday that the debate was organized because "we are concerned that the facts have not been properly put fourth by the news media."

That the national press has been less than thorough in investigating the case is certainly a point open to discussion, but the debaters themselves proved just how difficult it is to find the absolute facts.

When Prof. Denise Carty Benia, an articulate law professor from Northeastern University, said that the UCal-Davis Medical School program is not designed exclusively for minority students, the pro-Bakke side retorted that only minority students had been accepted through the program.

Benjamin asserted that if minority students got 16 of the 100 seats available at the medical school, then that left 84 seats for whites. Green countered by saying "this is simply not true," and pointed out that minority students were allowed to apply for the other seats.

But it was not the specifics of the Bakke case which were of greatest concern to either team. The two major issues that surfaced were the methods used to implement affirmative action and the effect the Bakke decision will have on its future.

The pro-Bakke team asserted that the UCal-Davis affirmative action program uses a quota system based on race. They claimed this is both discriminatory and unconstitutional, and in violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment. It conceded that there was an "atrocious lack of minority doctors in this country," but that there were better, alternative methods of integrating minorities into professional schools, such as recruitment programs and better educational opportunities.

"UCal-Davis has conceded that less qualified students have been admitted," said Greene, asserting that quota systems are not the proper way to approach affirmative action.

Meanwhile, the anti-Bakke side argued that admissions procedures are subjective processes.

"Affirmative Action is designed to make sure that the people in power do not overlook minorities like they have for the past 250 years," said Benia.

Asian-American student John Yong, a member of the anti-Bakke team, asked if Affirmative Action could be guaranteed without quotas, and cited various figures which indicated it could not.

Perhaps the most intriguing and perceptive argument of the night was in Benjamin's closing statement, when he pointed out that in every case of black advancement in American history there has been a medical, legal and social backlash from whites. Now, after the civil rights progress of the sixties, Benjamin said, Allan Bakke is just repeating history.

While the debate was educational, its intensity served to show us just how explosive the Bakke decision could be when the Supreme Court hands down its decision some months from now.

Greeks debate benefit $

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

The Greek Area Council last night was the scene of heated discussion on who should benefit from the $1000 raised at a tropical plant sale held earlier in the semester. Several proposals were heard by the council, but the final decision was put off until the next meeting.

Kathy Moore, one of the organizers of the plant sale, proposed the money be given to the American Epilepsy Foundation, arguing the funds would assist many young people in their struggle against discrimination due to their physical disability.

According to Moore, when the council decided to hold the plant sale it was decided that the money would go to charity, and she proposed giving it to the epilepsy fund, but the council has been putting off the discussion since then.

Other members of the council recently proposed that $500 be given to a Greek area scholarship fund, for two students active in the Greek area. Opponents of the scholarship proposal argued that it is illegal. Student Senate Treasurer Priscilla West said any RSO money which goes to scholarships must go through the University Financial Aid office, which will allot it based on scholarship and need, rather than on activity in the community.

A supporter of the scholarship proposal said, "We did this in 1972. I don't see why we can't do it again." Another supporter asked if the money could be removed from RSO and deposited in a local bank, so as to be readily available. John Foley replied that RSO money can never leave the RSO system.

Other proposals were to give $500 to the Greek area Christmas party, which has already been budgeted $1,000, or to give it to other charities.

After a lengthy debate in which nothing was resolved, the issue was postponed to the next meeting.

After the meeting, Kathy Moore commented, "In the past the Greek area has been a service-minded community, and I wish it would continue that way, rather than becoming more self-serving."

She said she will continue to advocate giving the money to the epilepsy fund. "We have given away thousands of dollars in the past to things like cancer research and never batted an eyelash," she said.

Men drivers dominate bus service

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Men outnumber women at UMass bus drivers by a 10-1 margin for a simple reason — more men seek the job.

A Title IX survey conducted by the UMass Department of Facility Planning and Operations last spring indicated Student Transit Service hiring is conducted "under a very fair system". Hiring practices in the system are evaluated every semester.

Of the 127 UMass bus drivers only 11 are women. But only 18 per cent of last years applicants were females. The transit service administration says this is the main reason for the low percentage of women drivers. This semester, however, there was an increase in the number of female applicants.

Women are beginning to show more interest in bus driving, historically a male-dominated job. Susan Campbell, one of the survey conductors, says the high proportion of males "will take time to change."

Any UMass student in a degree program of at least six credits can apply to become a bus driver. For persons with a Class 2 drivers license and at least three remaining semesters training, programs are available every semester.

Mass. House revives legislation to ban homosexuals from jobs

BOSTON [AP] — In an after bitter debate — which threatened at times to get out of hand — the Massachusetts House revived legislation yesterday aimed at banning discrimination against homosexuals in most public jobs.

The measure had been rejected Tuesday, 120-101, but was reconsidered, 116-107, after a concerted lobbying effort by the Democratic leadership and prime supporters of the measure.

However, further action was postponed and it was not certain if planned compromises will affect the original results. Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, a prime supporter, said it was apparent that the House would not favor the bill, as it had been approved by the Senate. He asked for time to consider possible amendments.

Floor debate became personal and tempers were short. Rep. William G. Robinson, R-Melrose, who said someone in a rostrum conversation had used the "wrong word" said the House was "ready to explode" and needed time to cool off.

Some of the remarks that prompted heated exchanges were public and some others were not. Rep. Philip L. Shea, D-Lowell, an opponent of the bill was a central figure in several exchanges. Other members complained of private statements circulating on the floor.

Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, an avowed homosexual, said that Shea seemed to have a vendetta against her on this and said, "Oftentimes we accuse others of what we are guilty of ourselves."

Shea said he did not have any vendetta and was proud of the fact that he wasn't gay just as, he felt, Miss Noble was proud of the fact that she was.

Rep. John J. Murphy, D-Peabody, favored the bill and read the preamble to the state constitution, dealing with everyone's inalienable rights. "We have a duty to vote for it," Murphy said.

Rep. Thomas D. Lopes, D-New Bedford, said if this passes, Massachusetts will become the national headquarters for the gay liberation movement.

Another member said that this was the tip of the iceberg and said that there was a recent decision in San Francisco to require the teaching of a gay history course in the junior high schools.

Proponents countered repeatedly that the bill was limited to discrimination in public jobs and said it in no way indicates a legislative position on homosexuality.

people," he said. "It is precisely the opposite here. Here the number is chosen and the number is filled regardless of the standard."

Colvin said the university was indulging in "broad generalizations" when it set aside the 16 spots for minority students. It is not true, he said, that all members of a given race have the same economic and educational disadvantages.

Justice William Rehnquist inquired, "What if the university said 'We just want to increase the number of minority doctors'?"

"To the extent that the preference is based on race, we believe it is unconstitutional," Colvin replied.

Justice John Paul Stevens asked Colvin if he disagreed with the university that all 16 minority students were qualified to proceed with a medical education.

"We simply say there is nothing to say they were qualified," Colvin replied.

"Taking the university's own standard of a grade average of 2.5 or above they didn't measure up."

Bakke, a Vietnam veteran, trained in engineering, decided to become a medical doctor and applied to the University of California Davis campus in 1972.

Although scoring 468 on a total 500 in the admission "point system," Bakke was rejected.

He wrote to the school admission director, pleading for reconsideration. When that letter was unanswered in a month, he wrote again, bitterly saying he felt "compelled to pursue a different course of action" to get admitted, according to a letter quoted by the New York Times.

Men's Center provides info on changing male

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

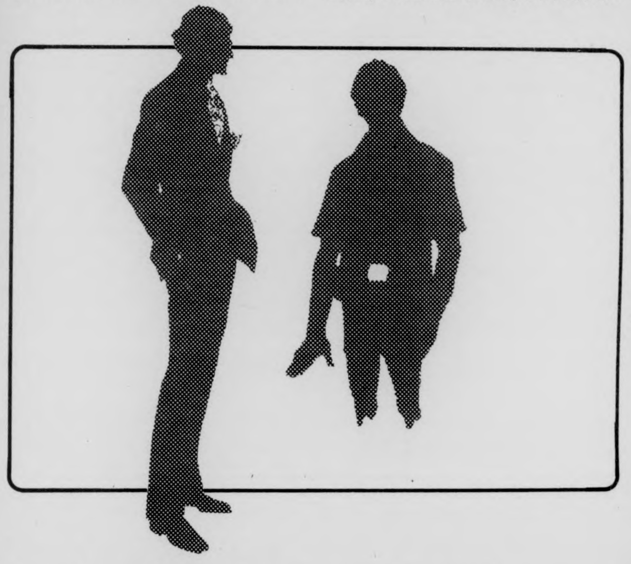
Where can a UMass male go to explore his feelings on masculinity? Where can he learn about the relationship between his individuality and today's changing role of men? The Orchard Hill Men's Center (OHMC), 112 Grayson dormitory, offers "an incredible range of things about men" and information "on actual male socialization — what it's like to grow up male in this society — financially, politically, emotionally, and health-wise," according to Ron Hadge, a second semester freshman and an OHMC founder.

The office of the Men's Center contains a small library and serves as a resource room for counselling, referrals, and discussion groups. The center this year is offering films, lectures, and workshops relevant to men's issues.

Asked how the recent wave of men's awareness movements have been affected by women's liberation Hadge said, "Women's lib has helped to speed up male awareness ... with more women working now, men have time to explore alternative options ... such as helping with the children, discovering personal interests, whatever." He adds, "it is very important for fathers to get to know their children." The Men's Center, he explains, allows members to learn about "alternative" situations, such as husbands and wives splitting household and financial responsibilities down the middle, bisexuality, or homosexuality.



The OHMC wants "to work in conjunction with other centers," such as Third World, Sexism, and Women's — since those centers also aim to combat stereotyping. The stereotype of the successful male — logical, strong, decisive, and prosperous — is "enforced by the media." Pat Brennan an OHMC member believes, Hadge adds, "the stereotype is being questioned, but the actual reality isn't here ... " He says there is "a correlation" between women questioning their role as emotional and men questioning their role as logical. logical.

Another major goal of the center is to "perpetuate a better atmosphere for men coming to this university, to make the freshman experience a more healthy and personal one ... this can be done by training freshman counsellors on men's issues — on things that need to be questioned" and also by educating newcomers on options as the Inquiry programs, and others, explained Hadge.

The Inquiry Program, which can run between three and five semesters, is "an alternative program to your freshman and sophomore year that is centered around individual growth," Hadge says.

Hadge and Brennan believe options such as it and others, help to make a freshman experience at UMass "more personalized," and first year males should explore programs offered by the Men's Center to further ease their adjustment. The OHMC is "another niche to get out of the role where they're put in with all the intro courses, and talk to people on a more personal level," Brennan says. "Alternative programs," he continued, "can stimulate ideas."

"People don't realize the importance of the Men's Center," Hadge says. College men are highly vulnerable to suicide, he explains, citing a survey last year in The Boston Globe which concluded the largest number of male suicides occur between the ages of 18 to 28 — out of alienation and loneliness, Hadge added.

The OHMC was established last spring, Hadge says. "A group of men got together to discuss issues of male oppression and male needs ... such as sexuality and health. We felt that a lot of these needs weren't being met and that a lot of consciences had to be raised," he said. Hadge says that the men's center is a "vehicle" in which to accomplish this. Southwest area already had a Men's Center located in Kennedy tower.

The idea of forming a men's center for the Orchard Hill area originally sprang from discussions on men's issues at a "Men's Liberation" colloquium at Dickinson dormitory. Another factor involved in the initial development was "a lot of resident advisers and head of residences were realizing it was just as important as Racism and Sexism centers," Hadge says.

One of the major functions of the Men's Center, Hadge explains, is to "sensitize" the resident advisers through workshops on men's issues, so the advisers can gain an awareness of the complexities involved in playing a male role in today's society, and perhaps teach colloquia on what they've learned.

Asked what initiates men today to question their roles? Hadge explains, "it was a teaching job that increased my curiosity about masculinity in our society. I worked with perceptionally handicapped children and saw the innocence in youth and I wondered about the anger in adolescence — where'd it all come from? ... I can remember guys in high school abusing their bodies with drugs and alcohol just to impress others ... There's more to life than that ... You can have a good time without it ... Driving too fast was another part of the macho image."

Brenner, who participated in the now defunct Global Survival Program his freshman year, explains that switching the two programs — "totally opposite extremes" — left him with a question: What direction did he want to put himself in? After discussing his feelings and assessing his role as an individual in Global Survival, he was thrust into the rigidity of Engineering requirements, which allow him "no time for social life," he said.

The men's center, Brennan explains, has helped him explore his feelings on his role as an individual in relation to his pragmatic career plans.

All the OHMC programs are open to the entire campus, although small-scale functions, such as films and workshops, are bound to attract students living near the dorm in which the events are held, Hadge says.

When well-known speakers or open social functions are on the agenda, a larger, more representative turnout will be expected. "So far we've gotten a fantastic response," Brennan said, referring to the recent showing at Butterfield dormitory of "Men's Lives — a

Smoking mothers risk miscarriage

BOSTON [UPI] Pregnant women who smoke cigarettes are almost twice as likely to suffer miscarriages as those who do not, an article in the current issue of The New England Journal of Medicine concludes.

"We conclude that smoking during pregnancy is a risk factor for spontaneous abortion," researchers said.

The article compared frequency of smoking during pregnancy among women aborting spontaneously with that among women with normal delivery at least 28 weeks after conception. The researchers said previous similar studies did not distinguish between spontaneous abortion and induced abortion.

The study considered 574 women who had spontaneous abortions in three New York City hospitals from April 1974 through August 1976. A control group was recruited from public prenatal clinics of the same hospitals.

"Women who had aborted spontaneously reported smoking during pregnancy more often than those with delivery after 28 weeks gestation: 41 per cent of cases and 28 per cent of controls smoked," the researchers reported.

"The odds ratio for the highly significant association with smoking was 1.8" — meaning the risk of miscarriage was almost double for smokers over non-smokers.

N.H. bars open later on weekends

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — From now until Jan. 15, New Hampshire bars and restaurants may stay open an extra hour on weekends to compete with Massachusetts and to recoup for increased state liquor license fees.

Costas Tentas, chairman of the state Liquor Commission, said yesterday the hours will be extended on Friday and Saturday from 12:45 a.m. to 1:45 a.m. Sunday hours will be moved from 11:45 p.m. to 12:45 a.m.

Monday-through-Thursday hours will end at the usual shutoff time of 12:45 a.m.

Tentas said the new hours will give bar and restaurant owners a chance to recoup a 40 per cent increase in license fees approved by the legislature.

Tentas added that another reason for the trial extension is the high cost of weekend entertainment and the fact that Massachusetts lounges stay open until 1:45 a.m.

Cancer researcher creates virgin birth

BAR HARBOR, Maine [AP] — Virgin birth may be possible in higher mammals, according to the findings of a Jackson Laboratory cancer researcher conducting experiments with laboratory mice.

In a research project by Dr. Leroy C. Stevens, a mouse was born of a "pseudo-pregnant" foster mother carrying a normal embryo which had been fused with an ovulated egg know as a parthenote, the genetics research center reported yesterday.

A parthenote is an ovulated egg that acts as though it were fertilized, developing in the uterus for a time as an embryo.

Stevens, a senior staff scientist at the laboratory, fused the embryos as a technique for studying the mysterious origins of parthenotes.

The virgin birth process, defined as parthenogenesis, is known to occur in lower forms of life. Stevens discovered in 1974 that the process might be possible among mammals when he found virgin mice pregnant with parthenogenetic embryos.

In his latest experiment, Stevens noted that the laboratory mouse has an unusual genealogy: it has three mothers and one father.

On one side of the family is a normal set of parents. On the other side is a foster mother and a parthenote from a virgin female.

Stevens explained that while the parthenote initially has all the genetic capacity for life, normal growth usually stops after about a week. A parthenote has never developed to full term in the female in which it originated.

In his study, Stevens determined that the parthenote can develop in another female. He reported removing a parthenote from its virgin mother, fusing it with a normal embryo at the same stage of development, then implanting the new embryo in a foster mother where it came to full term and was born.

Confidentiality given for psychologists

BOSTON [UPI] — Legal confidentiality with patients would be extended to psychologists under a bill approved yesterday by the Massachusetts Senate.

The bill was initially approved by the Senate on a 19-16 roll call.

"In the past we have extended this privilege of communications to very few people," said Senate Assistant Minority Leader David H. Locke, R-Wellesley.

He said the legal privilege of not disclosing information provided by an individual is now given to clergymen, lawyers, doctors and, recently, "highly trained psychiatrists."

Locke said, "I question the wisdom of extending the doctrine of privilege communications to psychologists ... We should not extend this doctrine to every group that comes knocking on our doors."

He said psychiatric social workers, social workers and marriage counselors could easily ask for the same privilege in future years.

Mass. stores to be open on Christmas

BOSTON [UPI] — Retail stores in the state would be permitted to do business on Sundays between Thanksgiving and Christmas under a bill given initial approval yesterday by the Massachusetts House.

The bill was presented as a pilot program aimed at gathering objective data on public attitudes toward the state's 300-year-old blue laws. Repeal of Sunday sales restrictions was approved in a referendum on the 1976 ballot.

Rep. Richard H. Demers, D-Chicopee, said, although the non-binding referendum was approved, there were still many people opposed to repeal of the laws, including labor unions, merchants' organizations and small businesses.

The bill was submitted following a retailers revolt last Christmas in which a number of department stores stayed open on Sundays despite state law.

Trans-Atlantic balloonists foiled

[UPI] — Two Colorado balloonists yesterday lost their gamble to be the first to fly the Atlantic and ditched their helium-filled "Eagle" about 50 miles southeast of Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Both pilots were reported uninjured.

Dewey Reinhard and Steve Stephenson, of Colorado Springs, Colo., were spotted floating in the water by a Canadian search and rescue aircraft crew who relayed the location to a ground tracking station near Washington, D.C. Two ships moved to pick up the men and their black and silver balloon.

"We did confirm that the Eagle has landed in the water off the coast of Halifax, Nova Scotia," said Don Witten of the Goddard Space Flight Center.

"Both pilots are okay." The gondola of the balloon was a catamaran that enabled the men to float in the high Atlantic waves.

The Coast Guard in New York said they had a plane circling overhead dropping smoke markers and that the men had splashed down at 3:30 p.m. EDT. A spokesman said they had put out a sea anchor and were riding comfortably.

The Canadian Coast Guard in Halifax said it had a ship in the area and were sending another as well as a helicopter to the scene.

Earlier, the two balloonists had "anchored" the balloon, using a unique system of buoys linked to a steel cable in an attempt to hold the balloon from drifting off course until a low pressure system passed.

Witten said the ground crew had not yet been advised why the men lost their $250,000 attempt to become the first balloonists to cross the Atlantic. Since 1873, 15 attempts have been made and five persons have died.

The longest distance traveled by a balloonist was last year when Ed Yost, a lifetime balloonist who holds several balloon patents, reached 200 miles east of the Azores.

Woman Lt. tops class

WASHINGTON [UPI] — One of the first six women to complete flight navigator training is being graduated at the top of her class, the Air Force announced Wednesday.

First Lt. Mary K. Higgins of Hometown, Ill., earned the highest grades in flying and academic subjects in the class of 18 men and women to receive navigator wings at Mather Air Force Base, Calif., yesterday, the Air Force said.

Lt. Higgins will be assigned duty aboard KC135 aerial tankers. Other women graduates will also serve on the tankers, transport planes or weather reconnaissance aircraft.

Dear Peoria...

or: the ugly American

By MARK WILDING

our man in paris

To the folks in Peoria,

Well sure enough, I've been all over Paris for the last week or so. I miss the farm terribly and I'm sorry I won't be there for the harvest but like I told you before I figured I'm twenty-eight and I've never been out of Peoria so I'd go see what life was like on the other side of the world.

My diet hasn't been the best. I've been living on steak and french fries at every meal 'cause it's all I know how to order (un steak avec pomme frites garcon). Garcon means please. The waiters are all very nice 'cept as they have this strange custom over here of adding the date to the rest of the bill. If I'd known that I would have come over here at the beginning of the month.

I hope you got the picture postcards I sent you of the Eiffel Tower. I never got to go up it cause they closed it the day I wanted to go on account of the fact that the poor wretch who was to be my tour guide jumped off. I'd hired him through the American Embassy and thought I was getting along fine with him. The only thing I noticed slightly screwy about him was that whenever I mentioned the Midwest, the left side of his face would start twitching like a rabbit in one of Luke's traps and he'd mumble some frog gibberish to himself. So I was left on my own to discover the sights of Paris.

Naturally I went to the Louvre first and saw the Venus de Milo and I'm sorry to say that they even have their vandals in Paris. One of her arms was broken off and her face was all chipped and beat up. I think it's a crying shame that there's that element among all populations that doesn't know how to appreciate another man's efforts 'cept as to try and destroy 'em. I also saw the Mona Lisa and a number of other famous works, the names of which escape me right now. Tell Luke that Notre Dame was a bit of a disappointment. It's no longer the cradle of college football that ND is back home. All that's left is a fair-sized chapel with statues of what I imagine to be former ND gridiron greats on the ledges.

Course I didn't just come here to enjoy the sights, I also wanted to learn some French history. Just about every other building here is named after a guy called Charles DeGaulle. I figured he must have been a "VIP" around these parts so I asked the hotel concierge who he was and he told me he couldn't be sure but that he might be the patron saint of pork butchery.

Tell Mom not to worry herself anymore about the Reds staging a coup de tart and taking over while I'm still visiting, and don't worry about me getting sick from drinking the water because my hotel room has no running water whatsoever. Apparently not having running water is the in thing in Paris these days. At least that's what the concierge told me. Well so long for now. I'll be writing you next from Belfast as the concierge urged me to go there at all costs.

Your devoted son

Point of no return

"Hey pal, What's your point?"
"Ah, is there supposed to be one?"
"Pal, don't you know you're supposed to make a point in an editorial?!"

steve dubin

Okay, so I looked up this word "point" that seems to be such an important ingredient in an editorial. A definition offered by the "American College Dictionary" states, "(point) n. 1. a sharp or tapering end, as of a dagger." Oh, I see. I'm supposed to stab the reader to death with a sharp opinion.

Point, point, point. What is the editorial writer? Is he a potbound poinsetta? Is he the hunter's best friend, the pointer, searching out his prey? Is he a dotted location on a map? Is he a cadet at West Point? Is he Rosy Grier with needle point in lap?

I'm told, "Be more specific — an ocean off the Particular Coast." I think every topic has a sea of factors, not an isolated puddle with one shrivelled worm. There are tidal waves, not faint ripples.

My point is there are too many points. With all those points someone is going to get stuck. Yes, there are the "right" and the "left" to issues, but maybe the answers are "ambidextrous." Why are there thousands of religions and hundreds of political parties? Maybe no one has "the answer" because nobody is quite sure of "the question."

Score that point. What is this, the extra try after the touchdown? Are articles won and lost by that one, single tally?

This is the "Unenchanted Forest" where few things are pointed. All right, so there are some cactuses, but did you have to "point" that out?

Anyway, I was always told, "It's not polite to point, especially with that finger!"

Sports and the urban experience

jerry rogers

We have reached a critical point in this country's treatment of the urban blight affecting our metropolitan centers and running rampant in the larger megalopoli — the world series is upon us. And football is in full swing with hockey and basketball soon to follow.

Just as the government and political organizations in this country focus much of their attention on the urban areas and the urban experience, so do the residents of those areas focus much of their attention on the professional sports teams competing in their collective name.

The teams, and more specifically the front offices of those teams, most certainly play up the association between the residents of a city and the local team — you know, "root, root, root for the home team." And, in turn, the fans heap their accolades on the stars and, uniting people of diverse political backgrounds and ethnicity, vehemently defend the integrity and sense of purpose of their heroes.

The relationship between "the fans" and "the home team" also goes much farther than the service producer — consumer level. To say someone is a New Yorker (or New Yawker) is to say he or she is affected by many things associated with that city, a few of which are the Knicks, Cosmos, Giants, Yankees, etc.

Residents of cities are not just residents. They do not just live in their cities, they experience them. The home team contributes to the urban experience and consequently to the urban culture of its area. Fans identify with the athletes on their teams and, as a group, often affect the tempo of the city. Cities and urban areas take pride in having a home team — for many people are not fortunate enough to have one — and in turn expect the team to play well enough to be worthy of that pride. Cities and regions compete naturally in the economic, political and cultural spheres, and sports teams only add to the fire.

> The intense rivalries that exist between sports teams are not limited to the playing fields — the fans participate just as actively as the players do.

The intense rivalries that exist between sports teams are not limited to the playing fields — the fans participate just as actively as the players do. Fans do not just pick a group of athletes to root for. The team means much more to them, it is a part of their dreams and daily lives. And the team is expected to know this and give their fans the consequent attention. The Kansas City Kings a few years ago tried to become one of the first teams to consolidate fans from two different cities — Kansas City and Omaha. A radical concept; fans just could not get into rooting for a team as a collective, it cut down on the competitive cultural edge Kansas City had over Omaha. Sports enthusiasts, on the social evolutionary scale, are closer to gang warriors than purveyors of art.

The fall is when many of the rivalries become most intense. The football season has firmly taken hold, and football fans, having only fourteen games to their season, must fill out their weeks with following practices and making assessments. Bragging and arguments fill out the season and are inherent in any football campaign. This fan-oriented component of strategy has led football to the point where it has the most dependable group of fans of any professional sport.

Basketball and hockey are soon to be among us, the fans have already sounded their coming and are actively prepping for their seasons. And the World Series is in progress — the championship of America's pastime promotes rivalries nationwide as fans decide whether league, geographic or personal ties will decide their series team choice.

In any event, from now until the spring, or at least until after the Super Bowl, the fans rule their cities and will affect residents more than any mayor.

Recognizing the importance of autonomy

To the Editor:

The past few years have seen the appearance of a new phenomenon, that of student struggle becoming a regular occurrence. Significant numbers of students have now been forced into conflict and ferment as we find ourselves in growing contradiction with the system itself and the educational system in particular. But as Pad O'Donnell notes in a recent editorial, a qualification is that students are relatively new to and inexperienced in struggle. Further, we enter with many disadvantages and weaknesses — which of course has never been an argument not to fight, only to give more consideration and thought to it.

Our education, far from being a privilege or luxury bestowed upon a lucky few, is essential both to the society as a whole and to the capitalist class who depend on it for the extraction of maximum profit. The ruling class would like to see this notion of "privilege" remain intact, for it has been their strategy towards the developing struggle to malign students as living off the tax-paying public. They want us students in isolation and are preparing for cutbacks and the running down of the most indispensible parts of education. The "privileged student" idea must be liquidated as the hindrance to struggle that it is. Ultimately it becomes a handy rationale for inactivity, a useful excuse for not getting involved with political work.

It has always been recognized as absolutely vital by any trade unionist that unions should be independent and under the total and democratic control of their memberships. The history of trade unionism is studded with attempts by the state to remove or control this freedom. To say that a union is unnecessary because "it clogs an already clogged system" and that we should leave administering to the administration is tantamount to saying capitalism is an over-clogged system which doesn't need working class organizations to carry on the economic struggle, that the working class should rely on the very class which exploits and oppresses it to organize its economic demands.

Autonomy reflects the level of political consciousness and organization of a union, which are necessary to carry out struggles in day-to-day issues. Autonomy means total independence from all external controls. This should apply to student unions as well. It is clear that this can only be achieved with mass support. But organization furthers struggle. The winning of autonomy implies the determination to fight harder on other fronts, while the struggles on the other issues show up the importance of autonomy. Each affects the other and an advance in one is also an advance in the other.

Sexism: a two-way street

To the Editor:

After the first printing, I was rather saddened, but after the second appearance of James Lewis' article on "Female Expression", I was incredibly dismayed. The point of this article appears to me to suggest that women are the only ones responsible for the sexism that exists in this society, and that at any moment of our choosing, we can express ourselves and rid the world of sexist attitudes. This opinion of Mr. Lewis smacks of the usual white male sexist and racist propaganda that women, blacks, and other oppressed groups can do anything, be anything they want and it is a mystery to all why they continue to complain about their oppression.

I am 25-years-old and I am already rather weary of expressing my feelings, goals, and desire for an equal opportunity in this country to every bastion of male supremacy that I encounter. If you talk to some of the women professors on campus, or some of the women I am involved with in the Title IX Self-Study Committee on sex discrimination at UMass, you will find women who are even more weary of constantly fighting and expressing their anger and frustration in merely trying to be treated as human beings instead of second-class citizens or lower forms of life. Perhaps you do know some women, Mr. Lewis, that have "feminine egos" that prevent them from expressing their desires for respect from men. But to accuse all women of an inherent defect that allows them to be continually treated in a sexist manner is highly insulting. I could just as well accuse blacks of having a "black ego" that is the cause of all racist behavior in this world, but that sounds rather absurd, doesn't it?

I agree with a lot of the sentiment that Mr. Lewis expressed about male-female communication, but realistically, this type of communication can only succeed in alleviating the sexism problem if there is some male response to the female attempt to express herself. I doubt if Mr. Lewis has had the experience of a male professor making insinuations about "husband hunting" when he was trying to discuss a career and graduate school. I could go on with countless other examples, as I'm sure a lot of other women could.

The fight against sexism and racism is a two-way street and involves both men and women, whites and blacks. To put the onus on only one side, as Mr. Lewis has done, is a concept that I can never agree with.

Rosanna Falabella

To the Editor:

This letter is in reference to the twice published article "Female Expression" by James W. Lewis.

I was quite astounded that you, Mr. Lewis, feel that an oppressive power structure created by men can be thrown off by women alone, requiring no raising of the universal male conscience. You seem to put the entire burden of bringing about sexual equality upon women, while totally excluding the participation of men. And you have the audacity to demand this so that YOU can be free!

Perhaps someday, Mr. Lewis, you will indeed be free. But if people with obviously sexist attitudes like yours refuse to raise their own consciousness, then the continuation of the male dominated society, of which you appear to be an exultant member, is assured.

Light-up for liberty

To the Editor:

In a free society, does an individual have the right to make his own choice on matters concerning his own welfare, or does the government have the right to legislate morality for the population? Think about it. Then, light up a joint.

Last year, in Massachusetts alone, over 5,000 people were arrested for possessing marijuana. Now, there is something you can do about it.

This August, ten registered voters from Amherst started an initiative petition to decriminalize marijuana. This will appear on the 1978 ballot as a referendum question — provided it gets 58,000 signatures by the end of November.

Also this August, a group of ten registered voters from Hingham and Weymouth started an initiative petition for an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, giving to individuals "the right to plant, grow, harvest and possess marijuana." This would appear as a referendum question in 1980 — provided it gets 58,000 signatures by the end of November.

We have the chance to change marijuana laws — if we act NOW. But we need your help. There will be a meeting Thursday night, October 13, at 9:15 p.m. in Campus Center 909, to discuss the signature drives for both petitions. Or, if you can't make the meeting, call 545-2129 for more information on the decriminalization petition, or 546-5230 for more information on the legalization petition.

Students demand results from SGA

To the Editor:

The Non-Unionist Students is an organization consisting of over 40 members who are seriously concerned with a possible decline in the quality of education as a direct result of student politics here at the University of Massachusetts. Before we delve into our opposition to unionization of the students let us examine the root of the problem. Why has the Student Senate stalled out and the issue of unionization ever worked its way out of the comics and into the headlines?

It is the common belief of the Non-Unionist Students that the quality of the senators as a whole is indicative of the quality of the Student Senate; and all will agree that the Senate contains defects which prevent it from tackling any problems.

Why has the Senate been laden with ineffective leadership of the students? Possibly because the leaders are not addressing themselves to the real concerns of the students. How often has your senator asked you what your concerns are? How often does your senator seek out your opinion on any issues? The senators have failed to muster grassroot support because they have insulated themselves from the public. The Senate has alienated the common student with their formal procedures that must be followed in order to propose and pass a piece of legislation. Let's open the Senate up to the public. Let the students know they can make a difference.

A recent critic of the Non-Unionist Students expounded ad nauseam concerning the election of a "pro-union slate of senators". Out of a reasonable context this may seem impressive. However, when one returns to reality and sees that many candidates ran unopposed and that even in the hotly contested elections some won the elections with barely more than ten total votes their shiny credentials become tarnished.

In addition to the farce labeled as the elections, the elected senators mysteriously vanish from sight, as if they were seen before the election. Once again, as in the past, these elected senators are nameless, unaccessible, and most unfortunately, unaccountable for their actions and votes in the Senate.

Yet, we are led to believe that once these same highly motivated political dynamos lead us in unionization: We can see it now, low tuitions, unlimited budgets, and check cashing in every dining commons, dorm, and lounge.

The unionists can deliver nothing they promise and certainly no more than a well organized and competently staffed Senate.

Furthermore, the unionists have been trying for four years to organize and still a vast majority of the student body knows no more about it than the pot of gold at the end of the union rainbow. The Senate leaders are simply attempting to lead us blindly into unionizing while claiming it will be a panacea. Do they feel they have superior political knowledge? I hope not, who understands your concerns better than yourself, certainly not these vanishing, unsympathetic senators.

We call for all students to stand up and demand real input in and results from our Student Government. Only with this course of action will the Senate remove itself from its present state of stagnation and begin to address itself to the real issues concerning the students.

'Armband day' termed a success

To the Editor:

We'd like to take this time to apologize, and congratulate UMass students.

Yesterday's National Student Armband Day was a big success. We had made up 1000 armbands thinking that would be enough. Well they were gone in two hours and we had to go and buy more material for armbands. The support for the struggle to move the gym is much greater here than we expected. We apologize for not having enough armbands.

The 1500-2000 that wore armbands and the other students that made their own, combined with the thousands of students from campuses across the country, show that the students at Kent are not alone and the coverup of the murders has not gone unnoticed. Opposed to all of us stand a few administrators, trustees and Gov. Rhodes of Ohio.

We are winning. Very little construction has gone on since the Sept. 24 demonstration of 3000 people. The fence surrounding the site still lays on the ground. And they have been unable to find a company to insure the gym building. The upcoming demonstration on October 22 may bring the final victory.

All interested students are invited to a spaghetti dinner-fundraiser [$2 donation] Friday night, 6:30 p.m. in the Pierpont dorm, Southwest. There will be food, drink and a film on the September 24 demonstration at Kent State. This will also be the time to sign up to go to the October 22 demonstration.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Carter and Torrijos to meet on discrepancy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter has invited Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos to meet with him Friday for a discussion of the canal treaties and the "public debate" about them, the White House announced yesterday.

The announcement said Torrijos "will be passing through Washington en route to Panama after a three-week trip through the Middle East and Europe."

It said the Carter-Torrijos meeting would take place at the White House and "will focus on the Panama Canal treaties... and the public debate regarding such treaties that have taken place both in Panama and the United States."

The announcement said Carter also would talk with Torrijos about the canal discussions he had with European and Israeli leaders during his trip.

Torrijos visited the Vatican and the heads of state of England, Finland, France, Israel, Italy, Spain, Sweden and West Germany.

One issue likely to come up in Carter's talks with Torrijos is the controversy over whether the new treaties give America a permanent right to keep the canal open, using military force if necessary.

American officials say the treaty insures that right and also guarantees U.S. ships priority passage in wartime, but Panama's leaders have disputed that view, especially use of the word "intervention".

★ Male role explored

film that "raises questions about men's roles" — where 40 students, out of a possible 120 saw the movie.

Presently, a group of 15-30 men convene for weekly OHMC organizational meetings, where they are now reviewing applications for three unfilled men's center coordinator positions. The managerial job includes overseeing the communication between Orchard Hill and Central, coordinating the hours of the men's center, and maintaining the library. The other two jobs involve developing workshops for resident advisers and students, bringing in films, and facilitating discussions. "We're looking for someone who's had experiences with this kind of thing or is very well-read on men's issues ... interviews are important," Hadge says.

"But we need money to do all these things," Hadge says. Funds are also needed, Brennan adds, to keep the office, resource room, and library well-supplied, and to successfully sponsor social events, lectures, films, and trips to men's conferences.

The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) last year allocated $200 for the OHCM "to get started," Hadge says, and the money was used to facilitate the office of the men's center. The OHCM then presented a $1,575 proposed budget to OHAG, who last year declined to allocate the fund, but is presently reconsidering the expenditure.

The OHMC Tuesday night asked the Central Area Council (CAC) to double the money they hope to receive from OHAG, so the Men's Center could incorporate the Central Area into its project. In a 6-5 vote, the CAC decided to allocate $500 to the men's center. David Brenner, a spokesperson for the OHMC, said the center will know "in about two weeks" whether or not they will accept the CAC money, and whether the Central Area will be as actively involved in the men's center as the Orchard Hill Area now is.

How many people are involved in the men's center? "It's hard to judge the size of the group," says Brennan. "We're trying to get membership up."

The size and the success of the OHMC, admits Hadge, depends on the amount of money it receives. The center's $1,575 proposed budget channels into five major spending areas: office supplies — $225; educational material, such as books, magazines, and xeroxed hand-outs — $400; social events; such as coffee houses and an open house — $400; honoraria, which includes speakers, workshops, and colloquia — $300; and travel, i.e., participation in men's conferences — $250.

News in Brief

Air bags in cars law says, by 1984

WASHINGTON [UPI] — After hearing arguments that airbags will "keep a lot of people out of hospitals and out of the morgue," Congress yesterday upheld an administration order requiring passive restraints in all new cars by 1984.

The action came on a 65-31 Senate vote killing a resolution that would have overturned Transportation Secretary Brock Adams' June 30 order. It requires automatic crash protection devices in big cars by the 1982 model year, in medium size and compacts by 1983 and in subcompacts by 1984.

To block the order, both houses of Congress would have to vote against it by Friday. Just hours before the Senate action, the House Commerce Committee voted 16-14 to keep the measure from getting to the House floor for a vote.

"This is a victory for us, but even more for our children, because highway accidents are the single greatest killer of American youth," Adams said after the vote.

FDA wants to cut amphetamine usage

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration said yesterday it wants to ban the use of amphetamines — pep pills — as a diet aid for fat persons, a move that would further reduce the availability of the drugs.

At the moment, the FDA said, amphetamines are approved only for short term obesity control and 88 per cent of the legitimate medical use of the drugs is for that purpose.

Even though increased government control during the past decade has reduced the amount of amphetamines that legally can be manufactured by about 75 per cent, "abuse of these drugs continues," the FDA said. The agency has contended the drugs are of only "trivial" use in weight control.

It added other "equally effective but less abused drugs are available."

The agency said it would hold a hearing in December on the proposed ban on use of the drugs for weight control. The ban in turn would allow federal drug enforcement officials to cut down the amount of the drugs which can be manufactured.

NASA Enterprise flight successful

BASE, Calif. [UPI] — The space shuttle Enterprise, America's hope for future manned spaceflight, performed its fourth free flight so "superbly" yesterday enthusiastic NASA officials announced only one more test will be needed.

"The flight today went better than most of us expected," said former astronaut David "Deke" Slayton, project manager of the approach and landing tests. "In my opinion it was the most important flight. It was a superb flight and I'm glad to have it behind us."

At a news conference after the 75-ton Enterprise touched down on a dry lake bed on its free fall flight from more than 20,000 feet, Slayton announced that the program has been so successful, the shuttle will make only one more free flight instead of the previously scheduled three.

That flight is scheduled for Oct. 26, and instead of using the vast dry lake landing strip, the Enterprise will glide to a landing for the first time on a regular concrete runway at this desert base.

National standard for right turn on red

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Transportation Department yesterday announced a national standard for right turns at red traffic lights and urged local authorities to put it into effect wherever possible to save energy and improve traffic flow.

A department spokesman noted that 48 states and Puerto Rico have adopted right-turn-on-red legislation, although the laws will not take effect in Maine and Maryland until mid-1978.

The department said the exceptions are Connecticut and Massachusetts, where right turns at red lights are legal only when authorized by signs, and the District of Columbia, which bars right turns at all red signals. It said New York state allows such turns, although they are banned in New York City.

Government units responsible for traffic control are "all encouraged to use the new standards to the maximum practical extent as a means of energy conservation and improved traffic engineering," the spokesman said.

Evel Kneivel tried for beating exec.

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Evel Knievel tried to plead guilty or no contest Wednesday to charges that he beat a television executive with a baseball bat, but objections by his attorney persuaded the judge to postpone the plea for one day.

The daredevil stuntman, who remained free on $1,000 bail, said he wanted to admit the charge of assault with a deadly weapon and "put myself at the mercy of the court."

When attorney Paul Caruso complained that Knievel was not aware of other alternatives available to him, Judge Frances Rothschild decided to review law on the issue and hold a hearing Thursday on whether Knievel could plead against his attorney's advice.

"There's no use consulting a court of law," Knievel told reporters after the short hearing. "I'm not saying I'm wrong. If you did something, you should say you did it. All people in this country should."

Knievel, 38, is accused of attacking Sheldon Saltman, vice president of 20th Century-Fox's Telecommunications Division, outside the studio commissary last month.

Saltman, 46, was hospitalized after the fracas with a broken arm and wrist and cuts and bruises.

Knievel's agent issued a statement claiming that the stuntman was angered by a book Saltman wrote last year. He called the book "a filthy lie" and said it insulted Knievel, and his mother, grandmother, wife, and children.

Government expands search for possible Medicaid abusers

WASHINGTON [UPI] —A government project to find the worst 500 Medicaid abusers among doctors and druggists was expanded when computers turned up 47,000 suspicious cases, HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. told Congress yesterday.

Califano said the government has decided to investigate the 2,500 most suspicious cases, 50 in each state. The number includes 1,400 doctors and 1,100 druggists who submitted health care bills in 1976.

Indictments are expected to begin this fall, he said.

The search for violators was halted at 2,500, according to one knowledgeable source at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, because of the limited number of state and federal investigators.

"It's a matter of how many you can prosecute," he said. The HEW program, originally called Project 500, became Project Integrity and its computers screened 250 million bills submitted to Medicaid reimbursement during 1976 by some 230,000 doctors and 44,000 pharmacists.

The name was changed, officials said, because HEW believed the 500 might be viewed as setting a quota. Additionally there was some doubt the project would turn up that many suspected cheaters.

Phone service relays five college area events

Area students can now find out "what's happening" in the Valley by taking advantage of the phone service recently established by the Five College Student Coordinating Board.

The Five College Student Activities Calendar phone can be reached by dialing 545-FIVE (545-3483). The pre-recorded message is updated every day.

The phone is especially for student activities, as opposed to academic and cultural information. It will only announce events; it will not advertise.

Any group wishing to use this service to publicize a dance, mixer, outing, play or whatever, should use the following format and mail the release 48 hours in advance to Student Activities Mailroom, FCSCB-WMUA Studios, 42 Marston Hall, UMass, Amherst, MA, 01003.

Type — answer these questions in order; be concise:

1. What is the date of the event?
2. At what time will the event take place?
3. At what school will the event take place?
4. What kind of event is it?
5. How much does it cost?
6. Phone number for more information?

Lesbians plan meeting this Monday in CC

A meeting for UMass lesbians will be held Oct. 17 at 3:30 p.m. in 923 Campus Center.

The purpose of the meeting is to provide a chance for lesbians on campus — students, employes and faculty — to talk about their experiences and plan activities to end their isolation from one another here.

"It's difficult to survive as a lesbian in a situation like UMass, where many of us are forced by straight people's hostility to remain in the closet, and we would like to have lesbians come together to share ideas about changing this," said one meeting organizer.

Some of the activities to be discussed at the meeting include forming coming-out workshops and lesbian support groups, having the office of Lesbian Union be open as a drop-in center for women on campus, setting up social activities such as coffee hours and dances, and divising a network of communication and support among lesbians on campus.

For further information contact Lesbian Union, 5-3438, or Everywoman's Center 5-0883.

Drill team makes historic debut

By SUE SCANLON
Collegian Staff

If you've never heard of the UMass equestrian drill team before, then after this weekend you surely will.

The drill team will be making its international debut this weekend at the Ledyard Farms International Three-Day Event. The three-day equestrian spectacular will feature some of the world's top riders, with nine countries in all competing.

The UMass equestrian drill team is an extra-curricular activity in the Veterinary and Animal Science Department. The team is comprised of 10 full-time undergraduates, chosen from yearly tryouts, and 10 Registered Morgan horses, bred and raised at the University. Riders on the team are chosen for their riding skills and their ability to ride precise patterns with other team members.

The drill performance is composed of a series of ridden movements synchronized to classical music. The precision and accuracy of the drill, plus the brilliance of the horses, combine to make it an exciting performance to watch.

Members of this year's equestrian drill team are Whitney Buttrick, Linda-Jo Camire, Judy Cobb, Rebecca Godfrey, Ann Van Heerden, Sandy Most, Cindy Nickerson, Linda Roberts, Sue Scanlon, Robin Zieglar, and Lee Leonard. Coach of the drill team is Sarah Carlson, Director of Riding at UMass.

In the past, the drill team has performed at Eastern States Exhibition and the Syracuse Morgan Horse Show. This year it was invited to perform at Ledyard, one of the most prominent of international events.

As a result of this invitation, the team has spent many hours of practice, trying to polish each movement to perfection. New Ledyard is only a few days away, and just a few finishing touches are necessary for the performance. A campus performance will take place today at 4:30 at Tillson Farm.

The performance will provide the drill team with a dress rehearsal and will also give the students a chance to see one of the few UMass teams which will ever perform at an international competition.

The UMass equestrian team will be competing in a three-day international event this weekend.

Women booters slam MHC for fourth win

By GARY ADINOLFI
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — It would appear that the UMass women's soccer team is exactly six goals better than Mount Holyoke.

The Minutewomen defeated the Lyons at Mount Holyoke yesterday afternoon for the second time this season by the indentical score as the first confrontation, 6-0. The win lifted UMass' record to 4-0, and goalie Diane Buckhout recorded her fourth straight shutout.

The first half was a carbon copy of the first meeting between the two teams with UMass dominating play. Mount Holyoke failed to muster any offense at all and consequently found itself trailing, 4-0, at the half. With a few more breaks UMass could have been leading 7 or 8-0.

After two glittering UMass opportunities were turned back by the Lyon goalkeeper, Jenny Dauten scored her first of two to give the Minutewomen a 1-0 lead. Moments later a mishandled ball by the Mount Holyoke netminder resulted in Dautens' second goal and a two-goal UMass lead.

Kelly Tuller scored the third UMass goal on an excellent rush and a well-placed shot into the far corner. Only some good goaltending and good defense kept UMass from running up the score in the first half.

Elaine Contant gave UMass a four-goal lead when she took a pass from Tuller in front of the Lyon goal and directed into the corner. The first half ended with Mount Holyoke not posing any threat or anyone expecting the Lyons to pose one in the second half.

The second half saw a different Mount Holyoke team. The action was not restricted as much to the Lyon end of the field as was the case in the first half. Although never severely testing Buckout in the UMass net, Mount Holyoke managed numerous shots on goal and some good offensive threats. But they never managed to put the ball past a very steady UMass defense and break the Minutewomen's shutout string.

The Lyons played UMass even for most of the second half but late in the second half the Minutewomen added two quick goals to make the final 6-0. The first was scored by Sally Hay to give UMass a five-goal budge off an indirect kick by Sandy Doo. Lindsey Babine added the icing with time running out on a pass from Contant and the Minutewomen went home with a six-goal thumping.

Coach Luis Macedo had much praise for his goaltender, Buckhout, following the game.

"If everyone could have the attitude that Diane has it would just be great," Macedo said.

The Minutewomen will try to stretch their winning streak to five games when they travel to Dartmouth for a game against the Big Green on Friday afternoon.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13 — Born today, you enjoy people and are extremely easy in your relationships with them, not finding it difficult to establish a friendship or to sustain one.

There are many lines of work to which you are by nature suited, but your desire to be with people in an invigorating way makes it necessary that you choose a career that brings you in constant association with others. Social work would grant you the kind of give-and-take activity with others necessary to your happiness, but this does not mean that's the only kind of work for you. You must not think in terms of "one" or "only." You will have many opportunities for happiness.

You should be able to establish a calm and uncomplicated home life – even though your relationships with loved ones are intense. Whether man or woman, you know how to make the home an attractive haven for the rest of the family. You are certain to create the image of a contented homebody; you are just as certain to sustain some internal revolt against that image from time to time. When this happens, you will not demonstrate your discontent overtly; rather, you suffer your hurts in silence until they disappear.

You are a relatively careful person. You do not make rash promises or deals. You do not become involved in financial speculations. You try to travel the safest path to your goal, even thought that may also be the dullest path. You enjoy surprises but because you do not appear to do so, other people are generally careful not to surprise you. You need to feel free in your personal relationships, even though you do not force changes in your associations with others even when freedom is relatively absent.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An improvement in a relationship important to your happiness on the home front makes life a great deal easier for you now.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Hazards of being involved in a situation essentially dangerous are to be avoided if possible. Become aware of your immediate options.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Revisions in your plan for the future are necessary if that plan is to be realistic. Take advice at evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Relax and let new problems define themselves in terms of time and possible solutions before you attempt to deal with them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Accept responsibilities that are your own, but don't give in to a temptation to take on the duties of others too. Attend a lecture at evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Family and friends bring best wishes today – and with them a material gift to make your life simpler, more rewarding.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — There is more to an invitation than meets the eye. Accept it if you wish – but be on your guard against an invasion of privacy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A personal matter from years past may crop up again today. Don't be surprised to find secrets being aired.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Rest on your laurels if you like, but don't expect to make the kind of gains possible for you on this day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Combine matters having to do with your career with affairs of a more romantic nature. You can gain in both areas of endeavor.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Nerves may be at the breaking point. You can help yourself and those with whom you associate if you will make an effort to remain calm.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take the lead in a community effort today. Primary emotions may be touched off when and if you issue your initial order.

An experience for all to share

By GARY ADINOLFI
Collegian Staff

The physical education department will sponsor a physical education day all day today in the North Physical Education Building.

The event, which is entitled "The PEP Experience" as opposed to last year's "Any Way to Play Day," is open to everybody but all physical education majors are encouraged to participate.

For the physical education major, it will provide an opportunity to make new friends and become more acquainted with the faculty, among other things. For everyone else it will be a time to meet new people, learn a little about the physical education field, and have a good time.

It should be an excellent opportunity for freshmen and sophomores who have yet to decide on a major to look into the field of physical education, especially if they are at all interested in Phys. Ed.

The day will run from 9:00 a.m. until 10:00 p.m. and will consist of five sessions, two before lunch and three before dinner, with a three-hour period for your enjoyment following dinner.

The enjoyment period will be held from 7:00 p.m. until 10:00 p.m. and will consist of an activity entitled "Fun in the Woods" with Tunner Brosky, from 7:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m., square dancing from 8:00 p.m. until 9:00 p.m. and finally capped off with volleyball, basketball and free swim from 9:00 p.m. until 10:00 p.m.

The time period from 9:00 a.m. until 4:20 p.m. will be comprised of a variety of demonstrations, seminars, and some sessions of games and activities. These sessions should prove interesting as well as educational.

The seminars will be particularly helpful to physical education majors or those students toying with the possibility of becoming a physical education major. There will be talks on the various job opportunities in physical education as well as talks on job placement by the University. The demonstrations will afford a chance to become more knowledgable about some activities such as fencing, martial arts and naiads, to name just a few.

Programs will be available in the main office of NOPE to tell when and where the activities, seminars and demonstrations will be held. Everyone is encouraged to participate and it promises to be a great time.

Poloers triumph big

Notching its second win in as many nights, the UMass water polo club easily defeated a young, inexperienced Mt. Hermon Academy team, 13-1, in a non-league exhibition game last night at Boyden Pool.

The Minutemen, playing with a lineup of JV players and non-eligibles, had a shutout going until Mt. Hermon tallied with only 15 seconds left in the contest. UMass goalie Bill Tharian played inspired goal, turning back a dozen shots.

The Minutemen completely dominated the game in both ends of the pool. The poloers ran up an early 3-0 lead and never looked back enroute to their 13-1 rout.

Leading the way for the Minutemen were Tom McGinn and Duncan Lomas, who netted four goals apiece. Former UMass swimming star Joe Hebert notched two goals, as did JV player Bill Thompson, who impressed coach Bob Corb with his fine performance. Corb rounded off the UMass scoring by netting his first goal of the season.

From here, the Minutemen host the Owls from Westfield State in another non-league contest tonight, before returning to league play Saturday when they host two tough teams in Harvard and RPI.

POLO-SHORTS — Russ Yarworth still wants to know why Don O'Malley didn't show up for his swim team physical ... the Poloers played before a throng of four people last night and showed their appreciation by running up the score.

Stickers tie Bulldogs

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

Julie McHugh's goal with five minutes remaining saved the Minutewomen from losing their first game of the season as UMass and Yale tied 1-1 yesterday in field hockey action behind NOPE.

Because penetration time was in UMass' favor, 9:10-6:04, the tournament committee awarded UMass the victory although its regular season win total remains the same. Their record, as the committee sees it is 7-0-0 while their actual record is 5-0-2.

UMass coach Judith Davidson summed up her team's performance: "I thought we played our worst game of the season." Although the game ended a tie, she termed the game as a "moral defeat".

Yale took the lead 1-0 at 9:30 of the first period when Emily Montgomery scored on a low shot. Play in the first half was ragged for both teams.

In the second half, with the hustle of Ginger Bulman, the Minutewomen showed some life, which they seemed to display all season. They had good chances to score but still were unable to until McHugh's big goal. Lynsie and Jody Wickman drew assists on the score which came following a scramble in front of the net.

Moments before, Lynsie Wickman had a penalty stroke but Yale goalie Lorraine Pratte made the save. The shot seemed to typlify the play of the Minutewomen lately.

"We are better than the teams we are playing but we aren't playing that way," Minutewomen Kelley Salls said. "We are playing on their level which hurts us."

Davidson is concerned about the team's lackadaisical play. "We haven't been really aggressive and playing up to our potential for the past five games. Maybe we need a loss to snap us out of it."

The JV Minutewomen raised their record to an impressive 5-0-1 with a 1-0 win over Yale. Patty Bosscio's first period goal proved to be the game-winner.

Netwomen rout Southern Conn.

By ED POWERS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team yesterday routed Southern Connecticut 8-1, in a home match on chilly and windy NOPE courts. The Minutewomen swept six singles matches and won two out of three doubles matches to secure an easy victory. The win evens the women's season record at 4-4.

In singles, number one player Cathy Maher defeated Cathy Mayer of SCSC 6-2, 6-3; number two Lee Robb defeated Sue Leonard in a come-from-behind 4-6, 6-3, 6-4 win; number three Jennifer Ranz defeated Karen Vasile 6-2, 7-5; number four Carolyn Mooney defeated Lynn Levanthal 6-2, 6-3; number five Dawn Minaai defeated Diane Brown 6-1, 6-2; and number six Cathy Sullivan defeated Nancy Schmidt 6-1, 6-2.

In doubles, number one team Debby Helperin and Sue Boissevan of UMass were defeated by Mary Scheerer and Diane Leavitt of SCSC 1-6, 1-6; number two team Martha Awiszus and Sherrie Lurie defeated Mary Dambers in a hard-fought three-setter 6-4, 5-7, 6-4; and number three team for UMass, Chris and Jane Carson defeated Joy Rootkowski and Holly Schaefer 6-0, 6-4.

Coach Bill Yu was very pleased with the strong showing and was excited about the possibilities of a fine performance by the three UMass entries in this weekend's MAIAW tournament at Mount Holyoke. Yu was pleasantly surprised that his two singles players and one doubles team were so highly ranked for the tournament. Maher and Mooney are seeded number three and number six at their respective singles positions, and the doubles team of Minaai and Ranz is the top seed in doubles. The tournament will be played this Saturday and Sunday in South Hadley.

LA evens it up behind Hooton

NEW YORK [UPI] — Ron Cey, Steve Yeager and Reggie Smith shell-shocked Jim "Catfish" Hunter with rocket-like homers and the Los Angeles Dodgers evened the World Series at one game apiece by bombing the New York Yankees 6-1 last night behind the five-hit pitching of Burt Hooton.

The Dodgers, who led the National League in home runs this year with 191, got a two-run homer from Cey in the first inning, a solo shot from Yeager in the second and a two-run blast from Smith in the third to take a quick lead the Yankees were unable to overcome.

Steve Garvey added the Dodgers' sixth run when he led off the ninth with a home run off ace reliever Sparky Lyle.

The best-of-seven series, after a travel day today, resumes in Los Angeles tomorrow night, with Tommy John pitching for the Dodgers and Mike Torrez hurling for the Yankees.

While the Dodgers' booming was the catalyst, it was the strong pitching of Hooton which made Manager Tom Lasorda smile the most.

Hooton had been a major disappointment in the recently-concluded playoffs with Philadelphia when he lost his composure over an umpire's controversial call and had to be relieved in the second inning of the third game.

The Dodgers' right-hander said he learned his lesson from that episode — and he showed it last night, striking out eight and twice pitching out of ticklish situations.

Using his knuckle curve to perfection and showing a good fastball which kept the Yankee hitters off stride, Hooton did not allow an extra base hit and walked only one batter.

Yankees' Manager Billy Martin took a big risk in starting Hunter, who had not pitched since Sept. 10 because of an injury. But with his pitching staff depleted after a wearying playoff against Kansas City, Martin had no choice and was hoping for at least "five or six innings" from his former meal ticket.

But from the opening inning, it was apparent that the crowd was not going to see the "Catfish" pitch one of the classics that had characterized his past World Series' performances at Oakland.

Instead of seeing "Catfish," they saw "Shellfish."

Smith started Hunter's downfall by creaming a two-out double to right center in the first inning and Cey followed with a 400-foot homer into the left field bullpen.

With two out in the second inning, Yeager unloaded another bomb about 400 feet into the left field stands to make it 3-0.

Hunter's stint ended an inning later when Bill Russell looped a one-out single in front of a diving Lou Piniella in left and Smith crashed a titanic 420-foot homer into the right-center field bleachers for a 5-0 lead.

Following Smith's homer, Martin took pity on Hunter and the five-time 20-game winner left to a chorus of boos and catcalls from the hometown fans. Dick Tidrow came in and stopped the Dodgers before leaving for a pinch hitter in the fifth.

Women harriers trample Big Green of Dartmouth

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team found out yesterday just how much fun running can be, as it had little else to keep it occupied in its easy 16-47 win at Dartmouth College, raising its record to 5-0.

"The 880 was never like this," must've been on Sue Muiligan's mind as she nears the three mile mark at Brandeis. She finished a fine eighth yesterday. (Staff photo by Dave Rodman)

Everyone managed to stay comfortable, with the biggest problems being an untied shoe and regrouping, the latter resulting from the Minutewomen's strategy of treating the meet as a hard workout, splitting the team into two groups to work on pacing each other.

"The team ran very relaxed, and I think this made them run better," said coach Charlotte Lettis. "What made this race even more impressive was our women were running six minutes a mile pace, which is a hard run. Being relaxed must be the key."

Jane Welzwel, Tina Francario and Priscilla Wilson, after debating whether to wait for Barb Callanan, tied for first in 16:44.

"The course was supposed to be three miles, but I think it was only 2.8," said Lettis.

Callanan was only three seconds back in fourth, after negotiating the Big Green's hilly, rugged course.

Dartmouth managed to slip one runner into the top five, Lisa Howell, who just nipped Linda Welzel. Welzel was the third freshman to crack the Minutewomen top five, showing that the "youngsters" are already acclimating themselves to front running.

Following her were Jo Chapman, who is rapidly rounding into shape; Sue Mulligan, a track half-miler getting some distance background; Beth Collins (happy birthday), fully recovered from an ankle sprain; Debbie Farmer, resting a bit after a good race Sunday; and Eileen Everett, another fine freshman.

Kathy Kirkham and Cathy Dooley rounded out UMass' runners in 13th and 18th, respectively.

The Minutewomen now face an 11 day break before the New England Championship, which will be held on their home course, the reknowned apple orchard loop.

"We'll be able to get some hard workouts in, which should round us into shape for the New England's," said Lettis. "This kind of a break is ideal for everyone to recover."

Just remember to tie 'em in double knots, Tina.

Yanks—NY's last hope

NEW YORK — The New York Yankees are the last hope for sports fans in this city.

Within recent times this sporting capital has been hit with some devastating blows that would make even the loyalest of fans want to give up spectator sports and begin bird watching.

First the Giants informed the city that it no longer would play its games in Yankee Stadium, but was moving to the suburbs in the Meadowlands, N.J.

Then the Jets announced this summer that they were going to let their savior and leader Joe Namath escape to the sunny skies of Los Angeles and the Rams.

Next the Mets shocked their fans with the trade of Tom Seaver to the Cincinnati Reds. Now "Tom Terrific" wearing his Sear's suits may seem like a chump to you, but to millions of New Yaarkers he was an idol.

Early this fall news came out of the Rangers' training camp that Rod Gilbert, the Rangers' veteran winger, wanted no more of John Ferguson and for that matter the New York Rangers. This was a setback to all those Ranger fans who have been waiting for years (or is it centuries?) for their team to win a Stanley Cup.

The final blow was struck last week when the Knicks dealt "Mr. Basketball," Walt Frazier, to Cleveland. These events are just too much culture shock for the inhabitants of this fine city and state to absorb.

That is why on Tuesday night I sat in Yankee Stadium and rooted for the Yankees to win the World Series. That and the fact that a man was holding a knife to my back and monitoring every word I said about 'his' team.

But seriously, these fighting, over-priced, and over-publicized Yankees are these people's last resort. They are to New York what the Red Sox were to Boston during the busing crisis of 1975. These people are frustrated and they need the Yankees.

That is why they were willing to do anything at any cost to get inside the Stadium the other night. That is why scalpers were asking and receiving $225 for a pair of sox seats. And that is why it seems everybody in the city is talking about these Yankees.

The Yankees are the only good thing in town. George Steinbrenner hasn't sold out, instead he has gone out and bought a team that is worthy of the fans' attention. But these fans are wary of the Yankees' success. Already the talk of trades in the off-season are being mentioned in the press.

Mickey Rivers says he wants out. Thurman Munson is reportedly interested in being traded to the Cleveland Indians in order to be closer to his family. At least that's the excuse he's offering as his reason for wanting to leave the team. The rumor being circulated is that he might be traded for Dennis Eckersley, Rick Manning and Fred Kendall.

Billy Martin is ticked off at Steinbrenner for supposedly having given his family inferior seats at the playoffs in Kansas City. Now even retired players are getting into the act. Joe DiMaggio is upset at the Yankees because he wasn't treated properly when he came to pick up his Series tickets. And so it goes on. But these fans will not be discouraged.

Ask about the expected trade of Munson and you get a grunt or response that it's just garbage from the press. These fans want the Yankees to win and nobody, not even the Jets, Giants, Mets, Rangers or Knicks, are going to spoil their fun. And that is why I want to see the Yankees win. Otherwise the Brooklyn Bridge may become the high diving capital of the world.

----------

At the game:

It seems strange, but it appears the most popular man on the Yankees, judging by the applause of the fans during the introduction of the team, is the manager, Billy Martin.

The new stadium is a nice place to view a ballgame, but the Yankees have to do something about their organist. The playing of the organ during the game is bush, and so is the sign on the message board telling people when to clap.

The biggest play of the first game may have been Reggie Smith being thrown out in the first inning. Don Gullett was struggling, and another run may have forced his early departure.

Best banner award for originality from the always gracious New York fans: GARVEY IS GAY.

THE HOBO AMERICAN

America's Most Oppressed Minority

The most oppressed minority in America today is the one we hear least about - the Hobo-American. Those who make up the Hobo-American community are totaly ostracized from society; they find it impossible to get work and are usually relegated to riding railroad boxcars and living in the squalor of the most wretched city slums. They are called "bums" and "tramps." They are ruthlessly oppressed by the so-called "loitering" and "vagrancy" laws which prohibit them from sleeping in subway, train, and bus stations and city parks, their few places of refuge from a society that believes that one should pay for a place to sleep. They are driven to drink by the cruel conditions of modern society; many of them find their only true solace in alcohol. Rising liquor prices are but another sign of society's contempt for the Hobo-American lifestyle. This lifestyle has contributed a great deal to American culture, yet it has been rewarded with dirty looks, higher prices for cheap wine, and refusal to even acknowledge their modest solicitations for a small bit of change. Where would America be without the Hobo-American? Who would sleep at the Salvation Army centers across this land? Who would inabit the Bowery? Who would buy most of the clothes at the Goodwill Stores? Who else would buy some of the liquor they consume? Would beans be as popular a food as it now if were it not for its widespread use among hobos acrosss railroad yards all over the country? Or hitchhiking! Who were the first hitch-hikers? Hobo-Americans, that's who.

The history of our time has been one of everyone against the "hobo." Bussinessman and student, housewife and public servant, pimp and hooker have all waged war against the hoboisie, refusing them money, staring at what they consider "dirty" clothes and "unkempt" appearance, laughing derisively at the cultural expressions of the Hobo-Americans as they sing their songs of woe or intoxicated joy. "Look at the crazy bum!" they chortle unabashedly.

The Hobo-American is almost always looked upon as useless to society, perhaps they are useless to this society; a society that has not accepted their cultural tradition though it has taken much from it.

What can be done to alleviate this terrible problem of oppression of America's forgotten minority group? Next week, Below the Salt will begin a series of articles on the plight of the Hobo-American in our society and will seek to deal with the many problems of this most oppressed minority. We will also sponsor a convention in the near future that will present films and emminent Hobo-American speakers, sponsor workshops in Hobo-American liberation, and even hold a fund-raising dinner with Hobo-Amercan cuisine. Our goal is to raise the consciousness of the Valley community so that we may aid the Hobo-American community in getting its fair share of the pie - and the booze - in American society.

Histrionics In the Valley

RING BEFORE ENTERING
A History of the World

I am a pre-history student who wants to go to historian school. Go ahead, laugh. It's a sad world we live in. So laugh. It doesn't matter. It doesn't alter a thing.

I could have chosen an easier field, like geology or English. Yet, I've decided to stick my neck out into the cutthroat world of history and historians.

I have no reason to expect sympathy. There are thousands of would-be historians, applying to history schools, studying months for the HCAT's, stealing lecture notes, and destroying term papers. I know one student whose thesis on Robespierre was stolen and burned. And all so that someone can "help mankind". He's out for the money.

OK, so I'm not Mr. Altruism either. I know there are big bucks in history, too. But that's not why I care about the Battle of Tours or the Diet of Worms. I want to be a country historian, not like the others.

If I wanted to, I could open up a fancy office in Great Neck, New York. There! Plush carpets, wood panels, leather seats, copies of Utrillo paintings. Sure, I could make a fast fortune and live on easy street. But that's not my cup of tea. Let some other so-called historian specialize in Twentieth Century American History. Let him identify the causes of World War II. I want dignity, solitude, and truth.

As a country historian I would help people. Mrs. Bullock enters my office. It's a quiet, dusty room, above the rebuilt barn, beside a grove of shade trees. There's an old desk and two chairs upon a polished floor of wooden planks. Mrs. Bullock sits down. She complains about being upset about late Medieval Catholicism, that she never really knew why it seemed so conservative. Why, Mrs. Bullock, I say, it all relates to the Babylonian Captivity and Henry IV. We discuss this and she leaves a happy woman. Could a historian in Great Neck solve her plaint? Not likely.

TALKING HEADS
Talking Heads: 77
(Sire)

Talking Heads' debut album is an excellent one. The group's members are: Martina Weymouth, bass, Jerry Harrison, guitar, keyboard and second singer, Chris Frantz, drums, and David Byrne, guitar and lead singer. Featuring a tight ensemble approach with buoyant melodies, incisive rhythmic motifs and hightly committed singing, Talking Head's music is striking in it's originality and in it's effective complementing of their lyrics.

Originally artists, the members of Talking Heads eventually decided to concentrate on using rock music as a means of expression. A fixture on the New York punk rock circuit, their music should not be typecast as "characteristic" punk rock with its fast tempos, gritty and squealing guitar solos and angry lyrics. Their music is not a return to the spirit of the early Who or whatever...

This is music which despite it's immediate appeal is a vehicle for communicating the complexities behind some of our emotions. This is music which while remarkably fresh sounding takes time to penetrate. Such seeming contradictions are a result of the band's different approach. On the back cover of the album there is a group photo. It isn't one of those typical poses. They look out at you intensely with expressions grim and yet assertive of their vitality. This is a group which seeks to communicate and which has well-founded confidence that they have much to say.

The lyrics are principally written by David Byrne and they are very good. In general, they work out well in the context of the music except in a few songs where their excessive repetition lessens their impact. David Byrne's voice has a constrained, thin tonal quality about it which together with his exceptional use of verbal accentuations, and his unusual intensity, contribute to the considerable impact of his singing. Sire has given them fine production. Instrumental balance and detail are excellent and the lyrics are thoughtfully printed on the record jacket. (Highly Recommended)

Nektar

NEKTAR
Magic Is A Child
(Polydor)

Progressive rock buffs should be spending the next few months in musical heaven. With Gentle Giant and Yes having delivered the goods in grand fashion, a new Caravan in the import bins and Van der Graaf on the way, a new ELP in the works and the live Genesis due to be unveiled shortly, we'll have more than enough good music to last us through the winter. And now, it's time to reacquaint ourselves with some old friends: after a year and a half's absence, Nektar has returned. Roye Albrighton, the guitarist and vocalist from the original Nektar has gone his own way, but his replacement, Dave Nelson, is thoroughly capable and the band is back in full strength. The new album marks a noticable alteration of style, which shouldn't be surprising since each of Nektar's albums has been a departure from the previous one. Their previous American output has included an excursion into heady space-rock (Remember the Future), a set of lighter, rockier songs with a circus concept (Down to Earth) and a full-scale synthesized epic (Recycled). And now, with Magic Is A Child, Nektar is expanding the use of vocals in their music. All four of the band members sing and the harmonies are more fully developed than ever before. As a result, this is Nektar's most song-orientated album and although there is a loosely-knit concept (concerning growth and experience), this is their first album in which each song can be taken out of context and stand on its own. Like Supertramp, Nektar is now aiming in a more melodic direction, and the album has its share of ear-catching tunes.

Otherwise, it's the familiar Nektar sound—each song abounds with those little musical themes that interact well with the vocal lines and keep catching the attention. The instrumentation also incorporates such additional touches as a string quartet on the title track and Larry (Synergy) Fast's synthesizers thoughout. The vocals are used most effectively on "Listen", the most dramatic of these songs. Other highlights are the rocking "Spread Your Wings" and "Love to Share", which has an exuberant vocal and a chorus which advises us to "Keep you worries behind you/So you can see what's before you".

On this album, Nektar's music is full grown, and as magical as ever.

CONCERTS:

Captured Live

Iggy Pop and the Ramones
Live at the Waterbury, Ct. Palace
October 4, 1977

Some random notes on the show:

Between late 1973 and early 1977 Iggy Pop did not release one piece of recorded material and played less than a half-dozen live shows. In 1977 he has already released two entire albums (both very good, but not up to the boy's earlier works of genius) and embarked on as many national tours.

His band for the early '77 tour (The Idiot tour) was a rather stiff and mechanical unit, one which never seemed as if it was interested in doing much more than playing by numbers. His band for the late '77 tour (Lust For Life tour) is an exciting combo, one whose energy and sense of fun quite approximated my images of the Stooges (Iggy's first band), whom I never had the raw pleasure of seeing. But the personnel for both bands was nearly identical, with only an anonymous keyboardist this time around replacing the thrust-in-the-background Ziggy Bowie of The Idiot tour and Bowie's guitarist Carlos Alomar added to the current lineup to round out the sound. The key to the upgrade in performance lay with the Sales brothers (Soupy's kids), whose rapport with the rest of the band and with the Ig himself seemed to generate the energy in Waterbury that was missing when I saw them in Boston in March of this year. And the brothers' collective sense of cool is exceeded only by that of the Asheton brothers of the original Stooges.

Iggy is very fond of performing with sibling rhythm sections.

Iggy himself was infinitely looser now than he was in March. The show from The Idiot tour that I attended was his first American concert in over two years, and he had a right to be nervous. But at times he seemed downright petrified, with virtually none of his infamous audience rapport. This time out he was great, calling Waterbury something like "a hot shit town," telling one spectator (me) to shut up after calling out rather loudly for a song which he (surprisingly) played later anyway, wearing a thick horse tail for the first song, doing a great Marlene Dietrich imitation, wearing two strange lines painted onto each side of his face and a very short and frightening haircut, singing half of one tune in German (Iggy currently resides in Berlin), breaking a chair on stage, allowing his drummer to play bass and his guitarist to play drums for one very long song, wearing a German WWII helmet for one number, climbing high atop the PA system at one time, and going through his standard Iggy gyrations with an utter vengeance. In other words, no diving onto broken bottles but otherwise up to his old tricks.

On The Idiot tour he performed a rather even mixture of songs from the three classic Stooges albums and from his (at that time only) solo album, plus one song which later turned up on Lust For Life. On the Lust For Life tour he played six on nine songs from that record, one song from The Idiot (half of which he did in German), one Stooges song and one song which was recorded with the Stooges in '73 but not released until this year.

I thought the Ramones were great and were the perfect warm-up act for Iggy but the rest of the audience couldn't have cared less.

GEILS IN CONCERT
Springfield Civic Center
October 7

Boston boogie was the order of the night last Friday as the J. Geils Bannd (or, as they like to be called now, Giels) and James Montgomery preformed in front of a well-packed Springfield Civic Center. Both groups, particularly Geils, were successful in captivating and winning the boisterous crowd over.

The Montgomery Band, a staple in area clubs, opened the evening's proceedings with a spirited, but brief, set consisting of seven songs, including encore (a ten-minute version of "The Train"). Their R&B style was noteworthy for setting the already anxious audience furthur on the edges of theur seats in anticipation of the night's headliners. In summation, Montgomery and cohorts were only mediocre. Their act is better set among the smaller clubs, not the big sports arenas. Still, the youthful crowd appreciated them.

After a lengthy intermission break of nearly an hour, Geils hit the stage with all the energy of a speeeding locomotive. Opening their set with "Detroit Breakdown," the sextet chose to stick to their better-known numbers, with heavy emphisis on good tight rock n' roll. One of the few times the band varied from this crowd-pleasing style was when they performed the title track from their current Atlantic album, Monkey Island. Featuring renowned Pittsfield harpist Magic Dick on trumpet, the tune creatively blended jazz with rock and a touch of the blues in a way which has seldom been heard from the predominantly R&B group. Curiously enough, the band only performed a couple of other tunes from Monkey Island, preferring to titilate the throng with older numbers.

Rendering such standards as "Southside Shuffle," "Looking For A Love," "Where Did Our Love Go," "Whammer Jammer," and "House Party," the group won hearty approval. The sound level was good (not too loud) and, as usual, manic vocalist Peter Wolf was the center of attraction as he leaped and frolicked across the stage in much the same manner as a hyperactive jackrabbit. Exercising such stage presence, Wolf is obviously one of rock's most flamboyant and colorful front men. He knows how to work cohesively with the rest of the boys in the band and does so exceedingly well.

After a frantic encore of "Love-Itis" and "First I Look At The Purse," I had the opportunity to talk with Wolf. It was during this brief but informative chat that the evening's one negative aspect was uncovered. Due to some sort of ludicrious Springfield curfew, Geils had to limit their set to "only" ninety minutes. While this length of time was sufficient to please the vast majority of Springfield patrons, (who have no doubt become accostumed to being treated by their city as second-class citizens), I was nearly irate. I wished that I would have been fortunate enough to have caught Geils somewhere else, such as in Providence, where Wolf said the band was going to perform for two or three hours the following night.

So, in closing, I give Geils a mark of A+ for the music they played. And for the music they didn't play, I give Springfield a big fatF. Get with it Springfield! We're not all a bunch of juvenile delinquents, are we?

THE STORY OF DAY AND NIGHT

There happened to be a clash between two vibes at the crack between two worlds: Day and Night. Day was in a happy mood, he had some beneficial sun rays, and ate some cookies and ice-cream; toklate was unavailable today. But anyway the twilight was inspiring, especailly with Night's attendance. Night, on the other hand, exercised some phobias. She could not reconcile herself to Day, because she was selfish and wanted to possess Day. Failure to do so added more misery, frustration and self-criticism. Day's lightness was as smooth as the dawn when it slips from the night. Day promised Night that he would not distract her majestic presence by his lit atoms.

What follows is a dialogue between Day and Night. The setting is somewhat romantic and melancholic. The sun is diving in the Mediterranean. The road is adjacent to the ocean; the hips are resting afar and level with the horizon. Sharp glowing clouds hang above, wavering a farewell to the sun. The tide is roaring; it splashes on the rocks scattered here and there on the shore, as if it tries to play a special tune for the stars. The road is empty, no people in sight; few wild trees spread in the distant fields. The sky is so clear and some stars begin to appear. A flock of seagulls dance in the air and hold their sat-sang ritual before the God of Love.

Day is playing his flute on top of one of the rocks. Night is dressed in a black garment which covers her whole body except for her face. It was an old dress she inherited from her grandma. She loved her dress and was very proud of her elegance in it. It also is an interesting fact that Night did not know her grandma, as she was born after her ancestor's death. Here she comes strolling by, enjoying her solitude. Day notices her, and reacts as if an electromagnetic field penetrates his whole being. You know this feeling, when all your body becomes numb and then a pleasant warm sensation envelopes your being. Day could not help jumping from a three-foot high rock in order to meet Night. He screams!!! AHH, WOW, OHOHOHOH, OUM, OUM, OUM, AH, HEY! WOW, AHH!...............

Night runs. Day is laying on his side unable to stand up because he hurt his ankle. His murmur is vaguely heard, due to the distraction in sound that the ocean offers. Night's eyes are wide open. Her blue-green pupils are radiating some sort of ray which science has not yet discovered. She twists her head: left-right; right-left; in an alert manner. The sobbing sound was coming, she finally decided, from there, pointing with her sharp eyes to a set of two high rocky mountains connected from above and making an upside down "V" shape. Inside one of the mountains, there was a hollow cave which was easy to reach. Day decided to play his flute there due to the echo that place offered. Meanwhile, with a surprise, Night runs courageously and compassionately. Day's cries grow more painful, his worries spread all over the place. "How am I getting home? Why did this happen? Oh God, there is no way out of here.....NO, NO, NOOOO WAY....." His pitch shifted to C Major scale and he started cusring the god that caused his pain. "You son of a gun, don't you see what you did to me?"

Silence..... The roar of the ocean continued rhythmically, and their heartbeats accelerated their motion: tik tok tik-tok- tik-tok tik-tok tik-tok.... Night bent with relief over Day's face, caressing with her warm hands his pale cheeks. Day gazed with wonder at chance. His lips started shivering, he tried to get some words out of his injured state, but he couldn't help bursting into tears. A gleaming thread of colorless liquid kissed Night's forefingers, and with hands full of tenderness, Night managed to help Day sit on a nearby rock.

A goldern multicolored horizon accompanied their peaceful souls. The touch of the breeze was mixed with the incense of Love, and the fragrance of beauty.

Night: "Come, my beloved, let's follow the footprints of summer to my old people's place, it is not far from here, we can walk."

Night: "Come, my beloved, let's follow the footprints of summer to my old people's place, it is not far from here, we can walk."

With Day's right arm laying on Night's shoulders, he tried his best to jump on his left foot until they reached the backyard of her house. Night signals with worry: "SHHHH!!!!" She was scared of her father, because he was a drunkard, and he used to beat her and her mother constantly. The backyard was crowded with apple trees, and some lettuce and tomatoes were on the side. Her father, Mercury, was sipping his Scotch under the branches of a pregnant apple tree. Mercury was fifty-five years old, and despised his existence. He worked his way out of pain by establishing a strong bond with liquor. On the other hand, his wife, Moon, was a pious woman who accepted thankfully life's suffering. Her prayers did not help much her miserable circumstances. Night was the only child they had.

Night and Day sneaked in the front door and up to Night's bedroom.

FREE FLOATING

The free floating figures danced softly
softly upon the wind
Beckoning and calling all to enter into
A spontaneous delight lasting through the night...
I followed with hesitant steps until soon I too, could float
Onward we moved
To distant patterns of sound
Weaving their way, passing to, into and through me
Like waves of air bubbles continuous turning me out of me—I was on the ground
But I was resting on a cloud
Only for a moment then moving quicker and loud
the voices loud into a passioned frenzy forceful than the biteing winds turning round and round
Then losing gravity and myself
Falling to the ground
The free floating figures danced softly upon the wind
There wasn't a sound.

Atlantic Avenue Fire

His old bible buried in its rightful cove near his gin and fire-escape. Knowing a moment given only for counting the Italian angels suckling their prayers, six-hundred masses cheaply sold. Fire to purge can only come to him flirting with kisses, scathing clean away the leprous wounds he had licked all his life, there not being enough minted grass in all the sacred sanctuaries to help him heal.
He walked all the stone landscapes. The moon had watched and known him more whiskey running down its craters, chasing behind the lonely wolves devouring wholesome dreams and babies fit for labor. He was too old to run, entwined for a life with a steel lover wearing new coats of oil to win fashion prizes and put plain housewives to shame. No blood stained the printouts. In the smoke form flying up to take him, he saw his signal, a spectral caress, and he took his dive into the silenced lips of the sleeping slaves below who gritted their teeth and waited to be sold.

REQUIEM IN THE SUN

Even by the mouth of the great river
I have seen you.
You teaching our children false gods of fear,
and giving them tarnished brass halos freezing in the sun.

Through ancestral gates of sufferage, we gawked from behind tattered altars and closed doors.
The sea had vomited us embryos naked upon the sanguinary shores of west hell.
A single cry have we cried.
Many voices in the hollow deeps of placid hearts.
Your white eyes gazing upon us, beneath the fury of your twisted hands.
Your hands feeding us poison
bowls of lies.
That you may bleed us in the sun.

Our wide eyes falling open the horizons of sugar cane and lynching, of cotton and castration,
of heroin and contraceptives.
The calloused faces of children, calling moaning fathers
from their asphalt graves.
Calling from the mouth of a tired river.
But the tarnished brass halos are choking their cries.
Tarnished brass halos choking their freedom cry!
The long river and twilight
slitting this rotten land, this place.
A place where the sweet wind has not come.
A place in the wilderness.
Where the sweet wind has not blown.
A place in ther violent silence
of west hell.
A place called America.

What is involved in knowledge?

My mind's eye strains,
Gazing back through vague memories,
Obscured by the need to forget
And long overdue tears.
Those bitter days
Of frustrated anger
Hopeless, numbed, half-alive
A trap without walls
A prison without keys and
No one to call on visitors day.
You would give to me,
And when my guard was down,
Take twice as much away.
Starving,
I would go to you for sustenance,
And come away more hungry than before.
Such tender, sweet deception:
Behind that lovely, loving face,
Does malice dwell?
Cloaked by gentleness, innocence,
Is there cruelty and hatred?
I cannot tell.
I only feel
Used up, Alone, and Lost.

BOOKS:

Beauty In Death

Secret Doctrines of the Tibetan Book of the Dead
Detlaf Ingo Lauf

Metaphor is the prime tool of the arts in creative communication. Poets have always expressd ideas and defined concepts through intense symbolism. Visual arts may present emotions/intangible insights through metaphor of color and angle, juxtaposition of form. What appears to be, in any creative effort, is not neccessarily the point.

Tibetan Buddhism teaches us that reality works on the same principles. What appears to be is but a creative metaphor for the underlying, hidden and true meaning. The creator of our world is our own awareness of self, our personal identity. In a sense, our life is a complex grid of metaphor. Our perceptions, our projections, all subjective experience is in symbols that relate directly to an underlying base of pure idea. This translation of idea works in a complex and subtle way. Our outer world is a transmuted reflection of the world of the sub- or supra-concious. This underlying and also self-created world is filled with the thought-symbols/archetypes that are common to the experience of all men. The Tibetan Book of the Dead deals with these archetypes in a subtle ceremonial way in order to portray a comprehensive psychology of existance.

Secret Doctrines of the Tibetan Book of the Dead by Detlaf Ingo Lauf approaches the esoteric document directly on this symbolic level, attempting to delineate and clarify what seems to be an incomprehensible jumble of images. Dieties and attendants, corresponding colors and sounds, all are carefully ordered and labeled by name and attribute. The corresponding human qualities connected with each are explained in their psychological sense.

The Bardo Thodol, or Tibetan book of the Dead is written as a manual of guidance for those undergoing the experience of physical death. The initiation is meant to start during life, by a careful study and comprehension of the books. After death attending priests recite the passages to the soul, reminding the awareness of the true subjective nature of the experience and helping the mind to take best opportunity of the journey.

The state of death, the transitory period between earthlives is explained as lasting (symbolically) 7 times 7 days and is divided into three seperate states, or Bardos. The first Bardo is entered into at the moment of death and is the high point of the transition. This is the point of the perception of the "clear light", a state of complete ego-loss. The period is one of ecstatic awareness devoid of any mental or conceptual activity. As the ego gradually regains control of conciousness the subject is exposed to visions of the peaceful deities, sublime beings who clarify certain facets of the conditions of psychic and karmic life. Lauf explains that these deities "are not be understood as outmoded or mythical figures, but rather as symbolic primordial images of definite teachings...They are transcendant and come from the heavenly inner sphere of ones pure awareness...projections of the immeasurable space of inner awareness into the cosmic spheres of a visionary, heavenly place..." He goes on to list the separate deities by name and explain their accompanying symbols and attributes as they apply to the different areas of the human psyche.

These visions are the start of the descent toward progressively stronger illusions generated by karma and finally rebirth and the onset again of ego-control. Through the succeeding steps Secret Doctrines follows the intricate detail of the origianl text and provides explanation, as well as wealths of historical background, related Buddhist and Tibetan cultural information, and the significance of the text in Tibetan art.

The second Bardo is the state of the wrathful deities, terrifying and threatening creatures that represent the cloudier sides of human existence. Lauf states that the very act of rejection of these self-invented beings is in itself a strong negative thought-influence and can only increase the power and horror of these deities. Timothy Leary supports this statement in his highly interpretive docmmentary of the same subject. He states, "The key is inaction; passive integration with all that occurs around you. If you try to impose your will, use your mind, rationalize, seek explanations, you will get caught in hallucinatory whirlpools." The priests attending the journey of the deceased person will recite, at this point, texts encouraging the soul or awareness-body to realize the self-created illusary nature of the visions.

In the third Bardo objective control is, for all purposes, lost. The awareness is bufeted about by increasingly personal visions built on past karma, and is finally driven into rebirth. Lauf basically ignores this passage, instead going on to draw parallels between the Tibetan text and the books of the dead of the Bon religion, the traditional Tibetan religion before Buddhism came in from India in the 11th century.

The ultimate purpose of the Bardo Thodol, is not merely as a map of these different stages, but as a guide to remind the awareness-body in this ego-less state of the illusary level of the experience. With this realization liberation may be obtained and one may become free of returning through the cycle of rebirth. Some have postulated that the Tibetan Book of the dead is clothed with the purpose of the after death ritual but is actually a highly esoteric document and manual of liberating the conciousness of the live person. It could be a guide to approaching the illuminating experiences described by saints and mystics through history.

Lauf explains that the concept of ego-loss liberation is not confined to Buddhist psychology in a chapter dealing with comparitive literature. He draws a statement from Plato, "For the body provides us with innumerable distractions...interrupting and disturbing and confusing us so that we are unable to see the truth." And on the concept of karma, St. Thomas Aquinas; " Since these faculties (human psychic) are parts of the soul or of the totality of soul and body, therefore, after the demise of the body those faculties....remain only by the virtue of their effects."

However Secret Doctrines provides one mostly with the framework of the text. The scholarship and careful order of so complex a subject is superb. Yet the spark, the transmission of meaning is to a large part absent, and one comes away from this book feeling unsatisfied, full of facts but lacking substance and understanding of the Bardo Thodul. This book could be well used with several other texts.

Tim Leary states, in The Psychedelic Experience ;a manual based on the Tibetan Book of the Dead,"...it is a book of the living and how to live,...the manual is a detailed account of how to lose the ego, how to break out of personality into new realms of conciousness; and how to avoid the involuntary limiting processes of the ego; how to make the (mystical) conciousness expansion experience endure..." While Leary's book is explaining the Tibetan's book's esoteric implications to the LSD experience, it still provides much insight into the psychological idea of self thought created reality.

And for the "western oriented" mind perhaps the most comprehensive commentary on the book of the dead was written by the eminent psychoanalyst Carl Jung, who states in his perceptive forward to a translation of the document, "For it is a book that will only open itself up to spiritual understanding, and this is a capacity which no man is born with, but which he can acquire through special training and specail experience...(these books) are meant for those...who no longer set much store by the uses, aims and meanings of present-day "civilization".

Damned, Beautiful

THE DAMNED and THE BEAUTIFUL
by Paula S. Fass
Oxford Press,415 pages $15

Ample proof of the cyclical nature of history is to be found in The Damned and The Beautiful, a sociological foray into American college life in the twenties. The similarities of that decade to the 60's are striking.

Here are some permutations of the day: a new, "permissive" sexuality was decried by adults; the sensuous rhythmns of a new kind of music were denounced; various gurus sprang up, proclaiming that the new youth was the harbinger of a better, more progressive, day; the underpinnings of a sort of feminism could be seen in the increased use of birth control by young women; the language changed, as new attitudes gave birth to new slang;certain books became de rigeur reading; the il[illegible]ality of an intoxicant bred contempt for [illegible] law; and youthful concern with [illegible]dom of expression was paramount.

While reading Fass, one notices the extreme self-conciousness of the age. Her method is to extract sociololgical marrow from collegiate writing in the twenties, particularly from editorials in student news papers. The editors apparently spent much time reflecting on the significance of their contemporaries, for page after page is filled with insight, explanation, and hubris, for those young spokesmen for the age.

Another 20's spokesman, Scott Fitzgerald, is discussed by Fass. He titillated the masses, she says, by telling them everything they publicly denounced but were secretly burning to hear, about the young generation. One is left with the impression that Fitzgerld, while recognizing in the antics of the young fertile ground for his writing, had many reservations about his "wild children". Indeed, he may have privately agreed with the traditionalists who were busy lamenting the fall of civilization.

The Damned and The Beautiful is an illuminating study of the social realities of a very important time, and good reading, but it's a bit heavy on the jargon. This reader could easily do without such phrases as "out-group status", "behavioral norms", "multi-dimensional social transformation", "network of peer relations", etc., which clutter the book and the mind.

Though the students of the twenties were considered rebelious, they were very much their parents' children. They were politically apathetic, getting stired up only at attempts to censor their own actions. They engaged in tiny rebellions, seemingly innocuous things such as "petting", danceing, listening to jazz, and drinking bootleg liquor, and any iconoclasm soon withered into group conformity. However, youth and it's hobbies was considered dangerous by the elders, and this may explain the retreat into monochromatic sameness which became the hallmark of the decade. The young needed to present a united front against attacks, and this unity demanded strict conformity and the immediate crushing of any deviation from the new standards. Not surpriseingly, this movement was spearheaded by the fraternities, who enthusiastically enforced the adoption of "norms" in speech, dress, dance, study and dating habits. They may have choked the life out of a mising generation.

In any case, youth had an enormous influence over the styles of the rest of the nation in the twenties (a situation which continues to this day). It was a narrow, elitist time in American education, full of bigotry and pettiness. An almost canine devotion to "the group" was required. Personality was smothered. The university was the universe. Corporate enterprise and business mores were worshipped, and the prevailing ethos was one of consumption.

All this was relatively new, and it contributed to the shaping of America in the first half of the twentieth century. It was a crucial decade, and Paula Fass writes of it with wit and understanding. She concentrates on the majority, as she must in a study of this kind. Still,it is unfortunate that she gives such short shrift to the outlaws and oddballs of the twenties. Then, as now, they were probably the only ones worth listening to.

Clearing The Era

CLEARING THE AIR
by Daniel Schorr
Houghton Miflin Company
1977
$11.95 333 pages

People often times use air freshener prior to exiting the bathroom in order to deodorize the air and render the aroma bearable. More often that not the result smells like a shit under the pines. Daniel Schorr's new book doesn't clear the air, it deodorizes it. Like the shit in the woods, Clearing the Air helps provide a "sweet, aromatic fragrance to acrid political crimes.

Sure, some people score Schorr with a moral victory over CBS; he burdened his cross before a sympathetic American public being flayed by a House investigation committee, a circumstance tantamount to national stardom. Some people have even made him a cult idol, the pinnacle of moral pulchritude and the example of journalistic ethic. Why he waited so long to act responsibly is never questioned.

With the recent revelations in Rolling Stone about CIA involvement in the mass media, one cannot help but wonder if Schorr himself was not an influenced agent-witting or unwitting-in his disclosure of the Pike report. He has been privvy to many sensitive issues. He was an original hatchet man, a cold-war liberal, getting his start slandering socialism, national liberation, and anything to the left of reformist capitalism. In other words, Daniel Schorr was really no different than any other American newsman gainfully maintaining employment.

Like anyone, who, overnight, "defects" to the peoples' side- be it Ellsberg. a Marchetti, or an Agee, Schorr's motive, as well as his function and direction must be examined. Clearly, Schorr is now a man without a network. But, as evidenced by this book, he is not without a sponsor.

Let's face it, Daniel Schorr, however honorable his intentions, is no and was no George Seldes or I.F. Stone whose journalistic responsibllity was a day to day proposition. Unlike the unheralded muckrackers of yesteryear braving the wrath of business and government alike, often at their own expense, Schorr plodded along aimlessly, responsible first to his wife and family and then to the American public.

Clearing the Air is a compendium of interviews, documents, testimony, and reflections by one of the central figures in the post-Watergate clean-up mess, written in a highly entertaining manner. Schorr's histronic rhetoric reflects his years in show biz, giving his book a modest theatrical flair. Great assistance was provided by William Safire, still one of Nixon's staunchest supporters, in preparing this volume. This indicates that this particular "air freshener" must be an "aromatic blend."

Is Daniel Schorr the last leak? I don't know. One thing is for sure, Clearing the Air is good political deodorant for those stinking bureaucratic bathrooms. One schpritz and you're good for the whole era.

Of the many abuses of the scientific method the world has witnessed in the last half-century, few are more disturbing than the experiments in thought reform that were carried out in the service of perfecting Chinese in doctrination techniques. They involved systematically breaking down an individual's belief system and replacing it by an arbitrarily imposed set of values, and the knowledge that the techniques were practiced upon Americans in the prison camps of North Korea during the war aroused a predictable public furor in this country. Over the years the excitement abated, but the curious work "brain-washing" remained - a metaphorical description of a process that's still little understood.

The word's come up again recently in con nection with the recruiting methods of several unorthodox religious groups, or "cults." The devotees of these cults (Children of God, Krishnas, "Moonies," etc.) are mostly middle-class Americans between the ages of 18 and 25. They're characterized by a willingness to live under unusual and often severely restrictive conditions, which nearly always involve estrangement from their families. In the past year or two, more and more parents have taken steps to "rescue" their children by hiring the services of an otusider who specializes in "de-programming."

Because the process usually requires holding a cult member against his will, deprogramming has received a lot of publicity; yet the actual procedure is simply a question-and-answer period in which the de-programmer exposes the devotee to information about the cult which was never presented to him, or purposely kept hidden. This simple exposure can reverse the effects of cult indoctrination dramatically, sometimes in the space of a few hours. Professional de-pro grammers see their task as getting the cult member to "think for himself again"; they're credited with performing everything from browbeating to exorcism.

Ted Patrick, the most famous of the deprogrammers, has published a book about his experiences which seems to aim at once at providing both information and self-justification. Let Our Children Go, written in collaboration with novelist Tom Dulack, appeals primarily to the emotions of its readers (hear the ringing imperative in its title?) After reading the first chapter (a heavy-handed description of a deprogramming in the language of the worst suspense fiction), I put the book down, discouraged. Another example of a second-rate imagination working overtime to reduce a potentially fascinating subject to junk. Fortunately, it gets better.

It's better because Patrick begins to tell his own story, and he's essentially a decent, responsible guy. One with whom one wants to sympathize. A former civil servant from California, he's sacrificed both professional and personal committments to what amounts to a life mission as a deprogrammer. He's candid enough to acknowledge that most of the energy for this mission is fueled by resentment. He describes his own religious background as "abnormal, even morbid"; he knows what it's like to be programmed, he says, and "how miserable and stunted that kind of life can be."

Unfortunately, Patrick is evasive about whatever combination of insight, skill, or intuition constitutes his talent as a deprogrammer. That's what's special about the man, and what only he can tell us about, presumably. A good part of the action of the book instead describes "snatches"-- the actual moment of abduction--the part of the de-programming procedure Patrick admits he likes best. Exciting reading, but I wonder whether the abducted and their families find it equally entertaining.

Another problem is that the book's "message"rests upon simplistic, sentimental assumptions: that adolescents have been lured from the bosoms of loving families, led astray by evil teachers, and have only to return home again for everything to be all right. It's true that parents and children, estranged for years in some cases, experience moving reunions during the de-programming process. Parrick, as outsider, witnesses only these moments, and his book seems to base too much of its argument upon their immediate emotional appeal. Day-to-day family life can be charged with well-nigh intolerable tensions, especially for adolescents. What are they to do after the "high" wears off?

All Gods Children treats the subject of the cults far more compre hensively. Authors Parke and Stoner set out to "tell the whole story," and do so, in good measure. They open with a nine-point definition of a "cult," then devote a chapter to the biographical backgrounds of the gurus and messiahs with the largest followings. The rest of the book provides transcripts of interviews with former cult members, descriptions of life in the communes, summaries of previous studies of thought reform techniques (including a good bibliography), and a lot of practical advice. For the advice alone, the book should be required reading for any family with a child in a cult.

On the basis of their extensive research with individuals, Stoner and Parke have considerable respect for the delicacy of the situation in which cult members and thier families find themselves. They emphasize caution. Taking rash action may be worse than doing nothing at all. Not every deprogrammer knows what he's doing. There are descriptions in All Gods Children of bungled de-programmings that are as awkward and gruesomely comic as anything in the fiction of Flannery O'Connor

The soundest counsel generally inspires us to re-examine ourselves. The authors of this book identify the cults as "frightening manifestations of deficiencies in our culture, whether we like it or not." Parents need to prepare themselves, above all, if they want their children back; they need to learn about cult beliefs and practices, and to re-examine their own value systems. A former cult member (almost by definition an idealist) has little chance of readjusting happily to a home in which the emphasis is primarily upon material success, and other values are confused and chaotic.

Since at least the time of St. Augustine, youth have joined extremist religious sects which they've later renounced. There's something mysterious about the shift and alteration of convictions the human mind is capable of in the course of a lifetime, whether those convictions are prompted "from within" in the search for truth, or manufactured by fanatical leaders and imposed upon a willing group of followers. If Ted Patrick knows something "intuitively" about the intricacies of the mental process, he doesn't like to talk about it. And All Gods Children resorts to the convenient explanation that adolescence is a time during which "values are up for grabs." Neither book examines the question of the fundamental source of belief. Nor do they claim to, admittedly.

What they do claim is their intention to educate the public. Each book gives space to the legal tangles surrounding deprogramming ("low-grade kidnapp ing," one observer called it). All Gods Children devotes an entire chapter to the sinister political overtones in the ideology of the Reverend Moon, strongly hinting at his connection with the South Korean government.

Both books advocate action. If one alarms unduly, the other leaves the reader no less concerned. All Gods Childrenis simply clearer about alternative actions to take.

A GUIDE TO PREGNANCY
& PARENTHOOD FOR WOMEN
ON THEIR OWN
by Patricia Ashdown-Sharp
Vintage Books
1977.
$3.95 200 pages

A Guide to Pregnancy and Parenthood For Women On Their Own is, for once, a specific and helpful guide for single, first-time pregnant women. The book provides a brief overview on womens' cyclical changes, up-to-date diagnostic procedures, and gives aid in making a variety of decisions, concerning the futures of both mother and child.

This short and concise book is very useful as it gives plenty of referrals and references not confining itself to one particular geographical area. It also cites resources, familiar by now to most women, on problems outside the scope of this slim volume.

If you are pregnant or raising a child without a husband, or know someone who is, here is all the information you need to choose from among all the options.

JAGUAR
(RCA)

Groundhog Day: time to check out if the climate has improved any in the above-ground world of American major-label new artists. (It's a foregone conclusion that all their old ones are washed-up old farts.) Picked at randon as a barometer out of any number of total unknowns: Jaguar, on RCA.

Weather report: the conglomerate gods are still giving me the chills. The perfect UMass record, actually: no-heat CSN imitations, lame country-boogie that leaves me cold, and the typical white-boy funk snowjobs.

Conclusion: though many hot groups have recently signed contracts, right now it's still inhospitable to any human warmth in the cool, calculated mainstream of "the land of the bland." Until the new wave really catches fire later this year, I'm going back underground.

GARLAND JEFFREYS
Ghost Writer
A&M

"Ghost Writer" is the second album released by this punky,reggae, rocking New Yorker (the first was an unknown 1973 release.) Garland Jeffries uses an interesting synthesis of various, current musical trends and seems to be very comfortable shifting from sounds that resemble pop rock, to reggae, to almost "New Wave." This constant juggling of musical influence comes off an honest, effective expression of his lyrics rather than the all to common hollow application of form.

Jeffreys is a composer and lyricist with critical social insight. Most of the lyrics on "Ghost Writer" are about people and their social relations rather than individual internal struggle fenced off from the rest of the world. For example: "Why-O" is a reggae tune about children and bussing; "Spanish Town" is an angry cry for the preservation of Latin American culture faced with U.S. influence and absorption; "Wild in the Streets" is a New-Wave type song expressing some of the anger and reactions that young people in the inner-city are having now. The music and lyrics of these and the other songs are entertaining as well as educating, so even the most uninterested listener may eventually find him/herself listening to what this man has to express.

Garland Jeffreys is certainly a progressive force in the American pop-musical wasteland and is worth listening to. Let's face it, anyone who can get James Taylor, Dr. John, The Brecker Brothers, and Dave Spinoza to play on a somewhat socially responsible album in 1977 deserves some praise, if not a bit of media play.

JETHRO TULL
A Sackful Of Trousersnakes
(Rodan Records) (bootleg)

For any and all fans of Jethro Tull is this live two-record bootleg. Recorded during this year's spring Songs From the Woodtour (to be exact, April 6 in the Anaheim Convention Center, A Sackful of Trousersnakes offers virtually the entire concert, minus only "My God" and the "To Cry You A Song/A New Day Yesterday" medley (as performed during the group's Boston appearance). Every thing else is presented here in proper concert order, including leader Ian Anderson's many snide comments directed at other band members; all in the spirit of true ribald humor.

New material performed from Songs From The Wood include, in addition to the title track, "Jack In the Green," "Velvet Green" and "Hunting Girl." Older material presented runs the gamut from "Thick As A Brick" to "Aqualung" to "Too Old To Rock 'n' Roll: Too Young To Die." Also, side three opens up with some fine ensemble play of excerpts from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, highlighted by the classical keyboard style of Tull's newest member, David Palmer. Side four encompasses both of the sextet's encores. It originates with tasty heavy-metal riffing courtesy of guitarist Martin Barre, then successively whirls through dynamic medleys of "Wind Up," "Back-Door Angels" and "Locomotive Breath." Truly, this is a side of incredible musicianship, as Anderson and mates really let it hang out.

As far as the typical bootleg goes, sound quality on Trousersnakes is only fair. It could be better, but it certainly is adequate. The band's playing is, as usual, extremely tight and professional. Anyone who has ever witnessed a Tull concert should indeed consider themselves fortunate to have an opportunity such as this to acquire a recording of one of the group's live concerts, since it appears doubtful that Anderson will ever consent to releasing an official live album. With no major drawbacks to speak of, I rate Trousersnakes a "catch these guys in Springfield on November 19" A.

DANCE:

A Faculty For Dancing

UMASS FACULTY DANCE CONCERT

by Sharon True

The UMass Dance Faculty, along with the University Dancers, presented an interesting sampler of the choreographic styles of each faculty member in its first concert of the season, held Oct. 6 at Bowker Auditorium.

The concert opened with a dance choreographed by Marilyn Patton entitled "This One's for Fun", which had potential as a bright energetic spoof of the Charlie Chaplan, Charleston and Swing days, set to a peppy score by Scott Joplin and performed by the University Brass Quintet; however, at this particular performance there was an uneven distribution of gaiety--some of the dancers "had it" and some didn't. There were a few dancers who appeared to be genuinely enjoying themselves as they hopped through the Charleston, penguin-walked Charlie Chaplan style and kicked in a chorus line, along with other happy-go-funky dance steps, but the rest just didn't have their heart in the movement and this put a damper on the joking, frivolous mood intended.

Ms. Patton's second piece, an almost acrobatic duet danced by John Kujawski and herself, was sheer pleasure to watch. The dance expressed perfectly the image suggested by the title, "Mobiles...Two into One", their bodies effortlessly tangling and untangling, lifting and sinking, dipping and swaying at a steady, unrushed rate of speed, with strinkingly beautiful, abstract shapes occurring at pauses.

A ballet parody ("My Moose Flies Forward"), a tender, young, lyrical dance with an impish hop and forearm-swinging wiggle interjected here and there for contrast ("Virginia Song") and a soft, breezy, frolicking-in-the-park work ("Sonata") were the dances which Andrea Watkins contributed to the choreographic sampler.

Perhaps the most memorable of the three was "My Moose Flies Forward" with its conceited, tempermental ballerinas, bumbled leaps, lifts and catches, and with Ms. Watkins' fluttering head and hands (yes, a head can flutter!) and tacky red tinsel crown.

Daniel Peterson announced that his (and dancers Patti Bradshaw, Karen Niedish, Karyn Norton) work would consist of three improvisations to be based on the Greek myth which explains the changing of the seasons;that is, the story fo Demeter, goddessof the Earth and of the Harvest and her daughter, Persephone, whom Hades, god of the underworld has abducted and married.

Demeter begs Zeus for justice, and eventually an arrangement is made that Persephone may return to her mother a few mmonths each year, and at that time all the world blooms with Demeter's joy, but when she must return to Hades, the world becomes dead and gloomy in her sorrow.

Although the improvisations (or dances which are created "on the spot" during the performance) were not intended to simply act out the drama, some relationshops between the theme, the characters and the movement needed to be established. And indeed, at the beginning, the characters and their relationships to one another could be easily distinguished by their facial expression, movement and encounters with one another;yet as the dance progressed, the characters, the drama and the movement all began to melt into ambiguity--the relationships between the characters became confusing and the movement became repetitive, redundant, expressing nothing.

The dance was interesting despite the anti-climatic ending in that the dancers related well to each other on stage--they were supportive and sensitively aware of each others' bodies and energies.

"Family Portrait", a dance choreographed by Richard Jones and performed by Robin MacRostie (Grandmother), Peggy Atkinson (Mother) and Kathleen Jennings (Daughter) proved to be the concert's most exceptional dramatic work.

The dance seemed to be about an anguished, grieving mother attempting to protect her carefree, innocent daughter from some awful truth, with the grandmother's wisdom, strength and gentle, guiding touch giving her sustenence, helping both of them to cope with whatever it is that has happened.

These dancers performed with such powerful intensity that they charged the very air about them with emotion--the daughter's joy-turned-horror, the mother's despair and the grandmother's empathetic gestures never becoming trite or melodramatic.

Other works by Richard Jones were "Metamorphosis", a harddriving African dance emphatically accompanied by the UMass Percussion Ensemble (one durmmer unfortunately obstructed the view of the stage), and "Turn On to Mangione", a brillant jazz piece to a first slow, then fast work by Chuck Mangione.

Thus ends the Dance Departments's first concert of the season, a lively, colorful sampler of choreography, with something to suit every taste.

ART:

Bohnen Exhibit

Blyth Bohnen
Herter Gallery
thru Oct. 14

A collection of works by Blyth Bohnen is currently on display at the Herter Art Gallery thru October 14. Ms. Bohnen an alumni of Smith College, is returning to the Pioneer Valley for the first time from New York where she now lives and works. Blyth graduated with a degree in art history but did not become involved in the studio aspect of art until sometime later. This strong background in art history leads to a connection which is appparent even in her earliest works.

An example of this influence are the biomorphic forms which come about as a result of using one, two or three individual motions while using acrylic paint and a brush on canvas. These forms are placed equi-distant from each other on the canvas and reflect a kind of animated, dance-like quality reminescent of the work of Gorky or Joan Miro. The forms work togehter creating a kind of vocabulary exemplifying the relationship between accident and intention of brushstrokes on canvas, and the variety of forms which result in this relationship; all forms become significant as they demonstrate a range of expressive values. Through these biomorphic forms, Bohnen is able to relate three-D forms without using realistic or renaissance ideas.

In 1973 Ms. Bohnen changed from the use of acrylic paint to graphite in an attempt to create forms in a different medium while using the same basic vocabulary. Long bars of graphite were used for these later works which take on seemingly infinite combinations of possibilities. Abstract elements such as arcs, lines, rectangles or parallellograms are created through the use of pressure and direction as it is applied to the graphite. Pivotal motions are used in working with the graphite bars, with the slightest effort yielding tremendous visual possibilities to the viewer.

The titles of these pieces are important as they record the action which has taken place. "Two adjacent diagonal motions left, one right of central points overlapped by one horizontal motion to the right" is an example of a title which becomes necessary to the viewer if any sense is to be made of the unemotional, rather mechanical vocabulary of forms which has been created by and for the artist.

Ms. Bohnen workd only in monochromatic color and to some her drawings may appear as unfinished studies. Bohnen justifies her reasons for working in black and white by again referring to the preiods in art history before Impressionistic painting where artists were concerned with the relationship of form and color as two separate steps, rather than the one step painting of the Impressionists. Ms. Bohnen believes that there is once again an interest in form and color as separate entities as far as twentieth century artists are concerned, and for this artist form has been given priority over color.

As is true of most art of the twentieth century, the question of its validity and contribution to the art world has been raised in regard to Ms. Bohnen's works. To that Blyth replies "...my work may be didactic, perhaps it exists more as a copy book than as art, but time changes allowing art that once wasn't considered to be to become art." The Herter Art Gallery is open Monday, Wednesday, and Friday from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., and Tuesday and Thursday from 11:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Here it doesn't hurt football to have two girls and three or four dogs playing. The trees are burning yellow to crimson in the longer shadows of fall after noon. A large white husky approaches in the early darkening, lets me bury in fistfuls of cool fluffy hair, the snow dog curls beside me knowing soom I am his. The long sun angles its rays just so, choosing a red barn on the hill, a maple among the pines, makes building look warm and strong. Each brick holds its hot red tight against the next, the sun sharpens each edge, against the crisp metallic song.

Amherst

The squirrels here are well bred, their tails hold decorum throughout the smooth hops, diligently storing nuts in the bank, trim grey suits always pressed, never breaking stride but when the rude lanky dog takes too close an interest in their affairs. The trees are well bred too, dropping their leaves neatly in the appropiate spots. All the paths smile when they cross, and silently circle the older statues, carefully noting how the green washes down aging bronze.

UMass

The beer cans stack neatly in the win dows, yelling their brands late into the night. Morning, the rain over, down elevators and hills, eyes pass eyes over muddy paths; buildings and the status quo sometimes easier to go through than around.

Of Note

Peter Boynton a 1977 graduate of the University of Massachusetts will return to the Amherst campus tonight as a professional actor with the National Touring company for their presentation of CABARET at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Peter holds a B.A. in Music Theory and Composition from the University.

Last year, Peter played the lead role in the production of Journey where he was "discovered" by a Fine Arts Center administrator who arranged an audition for the aspiring actor with a major New York producer. The rest is history in the making.

He recently completed an engagement in Newport, Rhode Island where he performed his own cabaret review, featuring excerpts from the various works of Gershwin, Porter, Sondheim, and Weill.

Peter is featured through the presentation of Cabaret as Clifford Bradshaw. His solo song in the performance is "Why Should I Wake Up."

Cabaret is sold out there are no tickets remaining for this evenings performance, part of the Broadway series at the Fine Arts Center.

Dance

A Video-Dance Workshop, open to all Five-College Students, begins Oct. 14, 15, 16, (Fri., Sat., Sun.) This major endeavor of the Five College Dance department is intended to be an integrated learning experience combining aspects of dance, video, and choreography for video. Guest artists who will teach the workshop are video-dance specialist Richard Lorber, and dancer Blondell Cummings. Registration forms can be picked up in the dance department offices at any one of the Five Colleges. At UMass forms are available at N.O.P.E. Rm. 11 and at the Five-College Dance Dept., Cottage C. Registration is limited to sixty five. The cost for Five College Students: $8.00, all Others: $20.00

George Benson

There are still plenty of seats available for the George Benson Concert, this Thursday evening (October 13th) 8pm in the Curry Hicks Cage. George Benson has been in the music industry for over twenty years. In the past year, he has won both national and internationsl acclaim for his prize winning album, "Breezin", and his smash hit single, "Masquerade." On this tour he will be featuring his latest hits from his new album, "In Flight".

The University of Massachusetts Union Program Council is proud to present the extraordinary talents of this Jazz recording artist. He will be appearing in the Curry Hicks Cage, which will be marking an all important turning point with the reopening of the Cage for this concert and possible others. Benson is sure to get a capacity crowd, so buy your tickets NOW at TIX , on the main level of the U.Mass Student Union Building, (across from the post office). They will also be available in Amherst, at Faces of Earth, Sun Music, Backroom Records, and the Sound Room in Northampton. Prices are $5.00 with a valid U. Mass I.D., and $6.50 for the general public.

Faculty airs views on DNA work

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

Four UMass professors presented their views concerning recombinant DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) research to a crowd of 800 last night at Bowker Auditorium.

Speakers included Albey Reiner of the department of microbiology, Bruce Levin of the department of zoology, Donald Cox of the department of microbiology and Marvin Kalkstein, a coordinator for the University Without Walls.

Reiner explained the scientific methods of breaking down a DNA molecule through enzyme action and recombining the plasmits, a small piece of DNA, in another source.

It has long been the dream of geneticists to take a gene from one source and put it into another," he said.

Levin commented on the benefits of DNA research, including learning more about chromosomes and gene action and being able to open up new avenues of research by cloning DNA.

"The real utility of recombinant DNA comes from the potential to produce insulin which could then be injected in a deficient source, to introduce artifical nitrogen sources to corn and wheat crops and to develop a bacteria that could eat away oil spills," Levin said.

"I think the scientific benefits clearly make this a good technique to answer some really important questions," he said. "I think the research is reasonable if carried out in a prudent manner."

Calling the research a "two-edged sword," Levin pointed out some of the adverse effects.

"For example, bacterium treated with insulin could get into the human intestine or an oil-eating bacterium could work its way into your gas tank," Levin said.

Cox said, "I am greatly impressed by the potential usefulness of DNA research, yet there are potential and theoretical hazards. There is no such thing as zero risk in any kind of research. Where would we have been if the infectious research of years past had been interfered with?" he added.

"We must protect the freedom of scientific inquiry but not at the risk of society. The risks in this case are not proven except at a hypothetical level. I have no qualms about DNA research in the community. I see no need for additional restrictive action. We must not stifle free inquiry into this potentially beneficial process, but we must proceed with caution and reason, abiding by federal guidelines," Cox said.

Levin said, "The risks are not sufficiently grave for there to be a moratorium, but a biohazards committee is needed to review, case by case, the processes and procedures."

Kalkstein quoted the motion to go before the Amherst Town Meeting, Oct. 17:

"The town should establish a recombinant DNA research committee of nine persons to report findings and recommendations to selectmen no later than March 1, 1978," the motion stated.

"Their job (the committee's) would be to collect information, insure open discussions, examine social and ethical issues and discuss inherent dangers of recombinant DNA research," he added.

Kalkstein said, "We feel that scientists have not been able to solve all safety issues of social and ethical concern. Scientists have enough political wisdom to say that they invented a level called 'minimum safety'. They have trivialized some of the concerns of effects and dangers of recombinant DNA research."

"We want the time to make this decision carefully. It is one we should all be involved in rather than leaving it left entirely to the scientists," he added.

Reiner said, "As the warrant was read, I support it. My feeling stems from a great respect for nature. I think science is wonderful, but the questions science addresses are sometimes limited ones."

Cross-burning occurs during Bluewall disco

By ANGELA THOMAS
and BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Students at a disco attended predominantly by Third World members late Wednesday night, reported yesterday a "cross" burning outside the function.

The "cross," viewed by students through the large display window at the Bluewall, was actually a metal t-frame similar to those used by Campus Center vendors, according to UMass student Earl Brown, who attended the disco.

Most campus administrators called by the Collegian yesterday said they knew little about the incident.

There were charred bits of newspaper wrapped around the metal arms of the T-frame, according to another student, Paul Campbell, who later went out to inspect the structure with Brown.

There was masking tape wrapped where the metal poles of the frame intersected, Campbell said, and there was a charred tree branch lying on the two-foot-square base of the structure, which he said apparently had been taped to the top.

"It was flaming enough for me to see it visibly," said Terrell Evans, a student who was on the dance floor at the time.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, told the Collegian in a telephone interview late last night that he had not been aware of the incident, but "Like everybody says, we're a microcosm of the world out there." Bromery also said that he hoped people at an institute of higher learning would recognize the symbolism of such an act and would learn from it.

Prof. John Bracey, chairperson of the UMass Afro-Am department, said he learned about the incident yesterday morning, and that he had been approached by students during the day who were concerned with "increasing conservatism in the Valley."

"It's just regrettable that UMass was the site of such atavistic behavior," he said.

A cross burning outside a Third World party at Hampshire College was reported last month.

The Bluewall was crowded Wednesday night from 11 p.m. until closing, although it wasn't until between midnight and 12:30 a.m. when students first noticed the flames, Brown said.

"I was standing in the middle of the dance floor when Terrell tapped me on the shoulder and said 'there's a cross burning outside,' " said Campbell.

Terrell Evans said after he saw the burning structure outside, he told other students at the disco, including Earl Brown, who then alerted disc jockey Kirk Williams.

"I was stunned," Williams said, although he said he didn't see the structure. He said he announced the incident over the microphone and told people to "relax."

Students contacted by the Collegian last night who were at the disco said either they did not hear the announcement or heard something but could not distinguish the words because of the music being played.

Apparently, students had not notified campus police Wednesday night. Police reports list only that a Collegian reporter had asked a Campus Center security guard about the incident after the disco had ended.

Brown and Campbell had gone to the Collegian office about 45 minutes after the incident and brought two Collegian staff members to the site of the T-frame, about 25 feet south of the Bluewall display window.

Dean of Students William F. Field said in a telephone interview last night that he knows "almost nothing" about the incident, and on calling his staff, found they knew nothing.

Inside today...

—The Graduate Student Senate is currently challenging the University to reexamine its rapport with UMass grad students. See details on page 3.

Coming next week...

—The DNA research issue will go before Amherst town meeting Monday night. Townspeople, students, and faculty will have a chance to publicly voice their opinions on the issue, both pro and con.

—The Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors will hold elections on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 17 and 18. A complete list of polling places and times will be published in Monday's Collegian.

Reminder...

Saturday, Oct. 15 is the final day to get an orange inspection sticker attached to your car.

Hadley

Gazette not given list of taxpayers

The Hadley Board of Selectmen Tuesday night formally opposed the Daily Hampshire Gazette's request for a list of the town's delinquent taxpayers.

Chairman of the board John F. Koloski said the selectmen favor publication of the list, but are awaiting the results of a court trial later this month involving a similar type of controversy in the city of Lynn, Ma. Koloski said the case in Lynn will decide whether or not tax records can be disclosed to the public in this state.

"If the courts dictate that this is possible, we may just do it," Koloski said.

There is an all out effort by the town of Hadley to collect overdue real estate, sewer-use, and water taxes, according to Koloski. Hadley businesses that have not paid their bills have been notified by letter to either pay or risk nonrenewal of various town licenses renewed next January.

Hadley selectmen, as part of the same effort, have decided to cut off water supply from those Hadley consumers who have not paid their water tax. Board member Julian Fil indicates this move showed "we really mean business."

Koloski said the action taken against the tax delinquents has proven effective so far, although there are a "number" who still have not paid.

Benson well-received at Cage

By BOB ARMSTRONG
Below the Salt

Guitarist George Benson played a very well-received set of about 90 minutes last night in the Curry Hicks Cage before a crowd of 4,500.

Aided by his ensemble of a drummer, a basist, and two keyboard players, Benson pleased the crowd with his particular style of what is often called jazz-rock, with renditions of "The World Is A Ghetto" and "On Broadway" among the compositions performed.

For the most part, Benson led his band through in a breezy manner, singing and playing fluid, sharp truncated guitar lines over the rather simple, contented rhythms of his associates. Benson is surely one of the very best guitarists playing today, and he demonstrated this to those in attendance, though the style in which he played for most of the night was one which would not reveal his full talents.

Although he did open up and play some more extented lyrical lines of great lucidity on a couple of compositions, he stuck for the better part to the type of music that has made him an artist of great acclaim in the past couple of years; light, merry tunes with a minimum of rhythmic sophistication and the emphasis on short and simple melodic statements.

Not surprisingly, Benson closed the set with "This Masquerade", his very popular rendition of the Leon Russell song, the same one which brought him to fame when it was released on the Album "Breezin' " about a year and-a-half ago. The crowd responded with an immediate standing ovation, to which Benson answered by performing a spirited encore. The crowd, which, according to estimates, was close to 5,000 persons, showered Benson with the accoloades of a torrent of applause and yells as he made his way off the stage after taking several bows.

Benson did not go onstage until approximately 9 p.m., though the concert was scheduled for 8 p.m. He was preceded by a comedian of some sort who was booed off stage after about fifteen minutes of uttering what some in the audience considered to be offensive remarks.

CC fee may be reduced

By BRUCE KAYTON
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-President Jon Hite last night spoke at the Northeast Area Government (NEAG) meeting about the possibility of a reduction in the Campus Center fee.

Students currently pay $79 per year to the Campus Center, $56 of which goes toward the payment of a $20 million bond. The SGA wants the state to pay $15 or $16 million of this, with the rest being paid by the students. This would, Hite said, result in a reduction of the Campus Center fee.

The subject of how much money will be allocated to each dorm by NEAG was also discussed. Last year, each dorm received $150 per semester, and this year $125 per semester was suggested as a preliminary amount. Altogether, NEAG has been allocated $11,505 by the SGA, or $160 less than last year. NEAG expenses for the week were $94.90.

Bob Dion, chairman of the SGA rents and fees committee, asked for volunteers to join the Food Services Governing Board and the Residential Life Board. These boards, and the committee in general, oversee all the money which students pay for UMass services and activities.

Another speaker, Mike Fager, representing the recycling project, asked for volunteers from each dorm to oversee the recycling process. Paper, glass, and aluminum are to be picked up at various locations once a week for recycling. Fager asked for money to run the project, but was told the issue will be brought up in future meetings.

NEAG voted to pay $15 per week to each of the co-presidents, Dianne Lauricello and David Goodhue. In previous years, $20 was paid to a single president, but now $30 will be paid to the co-presidents as a weekly salary.

Second trustee resigns; protests Dukakis' role

By GALE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

For the second time in six months a University Board of Trustee member has resigned in protest of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' increasing role in the board.

Trustee Carolyn C. Rowlands of Boston yesterday in a telephone interview, told the Collegian that the "politicalization" of the board under Dukakis has "taken away some of the independence of the board.

"This decision is not easy. I've spent 12-and-one half years doing my best on the board, I care about the students," she said. Dukakis acknowledged her resignation Tuesday.

Trustee Bruce Carlton, who had chaired the board's Budget and Finance Committee, resigned this summer stating reasons similar to Rowlands'. Haskell Kassler, from Dukakis' hometown of Brookline, was appointed by Dukakis to replace Carlson.

A Dukakis aide said the governor "has taken stands on some issues but he hasn't tried to assert undue influence over the board.

It's crazy," the aide said of allegations that the governor was trying to control the board. Dukakis could not be reached for comment last night.

In a letter addressed to Board Chairman Joseph P. Healy and distributed to all board members, Rowland said the "independence (of the board) has been erroded" and "the drive to excellence has been aborted," Rowland said she doesn't know how to stop," this process and so, is resigning.

UMass President Robert C. Wood last night told the Collegian "The governor must be held accountable for the boards actions," now that the majority are his appointees.

Wood said that there is division among board members.

"If you run down the minutes of the votes, especially on such subjects as tuitions wavers and tenure, you will see the vote goes between the old and the new."

Wood said "it is up to the faculty and students now to watch Dukakis and the board "they (the student and faculty) are the best check," he said. Wood also said he favors a restraining committee to review Dukakis' appointees.

Rowland's successor to the board will give the Dukakis-appointed trustees a majority.

Rowland said she resigned because the board is "already a majority."

In her resignation letter, Rowland also critized Dukakis for not re-appointing trustee members and breaking a long standing policy of the board that governors are not present at board meetings.

Dukakis' aide Alan Raymond said "times have changed since earlier board members were appointed. They were appointed at a time when there was no limit to University expansion but there has been a change of resources available in the state.

"It's not unnatural for a governor to appoint his own choices" he said, "or board members who share his views on important issues." Raymond said Dukakis had re-appointed several members, citing Chairman Healy as an example.

Trustee Fran McNulty of Amherst who is a Dukakis appointee, said the allegation that she votes for political reasons is "an insult to my intelligence." But she said she could "see why the earlier board members would feel threatened" by the change.

A replacement for Rowland has not yet been chosen. According to Richard Ames, of the Massachusetts Office of Educational Affairs, a new member will be selected soon. "We think we should have strong and independent Board to select a new president." President Wood resigned last June also with the feeling that Dukakis has undue influence over the Board.

Rowland was appointed as a trustee in 1965. She was a member of the Executive and Finance committees and Chairperson of Student Activities.

She is married to George R. Rowland and has one son.

WMUA show

Beginning Sunday at 6 p.m., WMUA FM 91.9 will present Under the Sun, a one hour news show dealing with regional, national and international energy news. ## Univ. band kicks off Homecoming weekend

By GARDE M. WELLS
Collegian Staff

The University Band will kick off the Homecoming weekend with a parade through Amherst at 7:15 p.m. followed by a free concert in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium featuring seven different bands.

The parade will begin at the Fine Arts Center, and march up Lincoln Ave. toward Amherst. The parade will then return along North Pleasant St.

The Concert, which is scheduled to begin at 8:30 p.m., will feature the UMass Jazz Ensemble playing tunes by Dizzy Gillespie, Johnny Green, and Thelonius Monk.

John A. Jenkins, University band director, said the concert will be "tightly-planned and fast-paced, like a Vaudeville show."

The show will include dance, choreographed by Richard Jones, live music, and a grand finale featuring soundtrack music from Rocky, Mahogany, and Star Wars.

Diane Luciani, UMass marching band twirler for three years, will be mistress of ceremonies tonight.

GS encourages univ./student rapport study

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to institute "more productive and positive relationships" with the UMass administration, the Graduate Student Senate this year will be encouraging the university re-examine the quality of its rapport with graduate students.

According to graduate senate Vice President A. Robert Phillips, the University has traditionally viewed graduate students as "users rather than contributors of services which the University can provide."

"We are encouraging the University to see graduate students as having a high potential to contribute to the day to day success of the University," Phillips said.

Phillips said the University faces a budget freeze next year which will result in a shortage of funds such that junior and new faculty positions will be "played off" against graduate students.

"Next year, funds will be held at their present level. This is enough to support only new and junior faculty positions or a 1973 level of graduate research assistants and teaching assistants," Phillips said.

"We don't want to be subject to the squeeze like adjunct professors," he said.

At last week's meeting, the graduate senate also voted to establish a nine-member Collective Bargaining Advisory Board.

The board will act as advisor to the graduate student who will sit in on the collective bargaining negotiations between faculty and the administration.

According to Phillips, matters to be discussed during the negotiations include salary rates for graduate students, as well as research assistant and associateship appointments.

Negotiations will also include a study of faculty evaluation procedures at UMass.

"We feel we should have direct input into the perimeters of evaluations which faculty might undergo," Phillips said.

Phillips said the graduate senate has taken a position neither against the faculty, nor against the administration.

"The Graduate Senate should advocate a position such that the posture of graduate students will be articulated," Phillips said.

Concerning student unionization, Phillips said, "Undergraduates moves toward unionization would not necessarily determine whether or not graduate students would unionize."

"But, in no way would the graduate student senate avoid accepting any of the postulates of the undergraduate community. The graduate students represent a different population. We really can't say that if they do (unionize), we should, or if we do, they should. The students should do whatever 'fits,' Phillips said.

University store

Shoplifters arraigned

By ELIZABETH KENT
Collegian Staff

Fourteen persons are being arraigned today at Hampshire County District Court while another 13 await arraignment in connection with shoplifting offenses in the University Store.

A total of 70 persons have been caught shoplifting at the University Store since the beginning of the semester. The figure is slightly less than the number caught last year at this time.

According to security personnel at the store, fewer cosmetics are being taken and more school supplies are being stolen.

"A lot of freshmen have been stopped," said the security guard.

Winthrop L. Cummings, general manager at the store, said yesterday, "The store is in the process of getting complaints against persons who make no attempt for restituion of bad checks. The store plans to continue with the policy of prosecuting in the District Court those persons who defraud by check."

Some of the persons caught shoplifting at the store are referred to the Student Attorney General's office instead of being taken to court. The University Store is now checking back on its records to make sure that those students did go to the Attorney General's office. Those students who have not reported to the attorney general's office are being referred to Whitmore for academic withdrawal.

Legal Service Office represented students at Hampshire County District Court last year but due to the limited case load, LSO will no longer be able to represent students at court for shoplifting.

Mary I. Muirhead, office manager said yesterday that LSO will not be able to handle criminal cases because they are understaffed. She said, "As of early September, the LSO governing board limited the individual case on an advice-only basis and giving referals to local attorneys."

LSO is currently in the process of hiring two new staff attorneys. Muirhead said that consumer action complaints and family law cases are also limited. The only family law cases that LSO can handle at present is uncontested divorces, she said.

It is expected that after LSO has a full staff complement, the LSO governing board will re-evaluate the situation and those services which have been limited will again be handled. There is presently a two-week wait for appointments except for emergencies.

Amherst's newest bum attracts some attention his first day out on North Pleasant.

'Foiling' is Sean Conley's match

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

"Foiled again".

To the average UMass student this phrase could signify defeat by a pinball machine; but to Sean Conley it means losing a match. What kind of match? Why fencing of course.

Conley is currently a fencing instructor here teaching both novice, and for the first time at UMass, an advanced fencing class. He is also in the process of organizing an intercollegiate fencing team, although he has encountered one big problem: lack of funds.

"The main thing is money," he said. "You can't have money 'til you're a team, and you can't have a team though 'til you have money." He has about 20 students interested in team competition.

When Conley arrived last year as a freshman at UMass and discovered there was no fencing program, he commented, "I was amazed that there were 20,000 students and no fencing team." His enthusiasm for the sport spurred because of a lack of interest in other sports his high school offered like wrestling, basketball, and others of the like. In lieu of the choices, he opted for fencing, and has been an avid fencer ever since.

As for fencing itself, Conley declared, "It is definitely a sport." To emphasize his point, he relayed a story of how the New York Times printed an article on fencing in the fall of 1976, and ran it not in the sports section, but in the leisure section.

Although he admits, "To me it's physical chess," and, "It doesn't take pure strength or stamina," he did stress that "the key to fencing is mobility."

The age old adage, "Practice makes perfect," is applicable to fencing, as the best way of getting in shape for fencing is fencing. This is supplemented by drills, constant review of moves, and as Conley points out, "Being in good shape is critical." He expressed his thoughts on the benefits of the sport by saying, "It's definitely a sport, more than most as it makes you agile and sharpens your mind by making you think on your feet."

Conley's sole advanced fencing class is the core for the team. He has been contacted by various clubs in the New England area for fencing matches, but can't make any definite plans until he gets some money to put the team together. It takes $120 to outfit one fencer and that's not including the electric equipment for competition and practice.

Because of the quickness of the movements, electric equipment must be used to register whether a movement is executed within the correct range of the opponent. UMass has scoring machines, but does not have the accessories such as the needed body chords or vests.

There are two major competitions for fencing: one is intercollegiate, and the other is Amateur Fencing League of America (AFLA). In addition to these is the Olympic Competition. Actually, fencing was played in the first Olympics held in 1896.

As in other individual sports, there are three different classes: A, B, and C. Class A is international, Class B is intermediate—excellent, and Class C is novice—advanced. It takes lots of practice just to be able to compete to get into Class C. Conley is going for his C class rating at Dartmouth College in the near future.

The concept behind fencing concerning scoring and basic organization is fairly simple. In a match, the scoring is straightforward, the first person to touch the opponent five times wins.

There are three weapons used in a match: a foil, epee, and saber. For each weapon, there are different sections of the body as targets. In foil competition the torso is target, this does not include face, arms, or legs. You may hit with the point only.

The epee user can have the entire body as the target. The saber does not make contact with the point, instead of a jabbing motion, the user slashes at the opponent, the makes for a faster of the three. The target is everything from the waist up.

In competition, there are the three weapons with three people on each weapon. The team here will consist of 15 men, and six women. Women were allowed to use only foils in competition until two years ago, because some people thought they might "hurt themselves." Now they can compete using all three weapons.

There is talent at UMass, as Conley said, "We have a lot of individuals, hopefully we'll have a team, but it's the money." Starting a team is the easy part compared to some of the competition that the team could encounter. For example, the Yale team has a Russian coach. Needless to say, UMass would compete against their junior varsity. Hampshire College's instructor is on the Olympic Team.

Conley spends over 12 hours a week giving instruction and practicing. He is combining Industrial Engineering with Operations Research which is quite a load as one major.

When asked if fencing interfered with his schoolwork Conley replied, "Schoolwork takes away from my fencing."

Bakke decision to reverse Civil rights laws

BOSTON [UPI] — NAACP general counsel Nathaniel Jones Wednesday said if the U.S. Supreme Court upholds a recent California high court decision in the Bakke reverse discrimination case, it will effectively reverse the basis for all civil rights decisions.

The nation's highest court Wednesday heard arguments in the case of Allan Bakke, a twice-rejected white candidate for the University of California's Medical School at Davis.

Bakke, 37, contends the university violated the Constitution in denying him admission to its medical school, discriminating against him because he is white. The school set aside 16 of 100 admissions slots for minorities.

The California Supreme Court ruled "race should not be a factor" in professional school admissions.

Jones, who addressed 300 persons at Boston University, was one of several attorneys Wednesday to deliver briefs to the Supreme Court on the closely-watched "reverse discrimination case."

Jones, who has twice argued discrimination cases for the NAACP before the high court, called the Bakke case "the tip of the iceberg" in a series of "race conscious cases."

The federal government argued professional schools must not be blind to race if the nation is to remedy past discrimination.

Jones filed the brief on behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which supports the school's minority admissions policy.

He said if the Supreme Court upholds the California court's ruling, its own landmark civil rights decision — the 1954 Brown vs. Board of Education case — "would be effectively reserved and civil rights statutes repealed."

Jones said it would be erroneous not to use race as a criteria in setting admission policies.

"The courts and Congress have explicitly approved and mandated race as a basis in their decision. You can't desegregate a school without taking race into account," the 50-year-old lawyer said.

Anti-Bakke demonstration today

University of Massachusetts at Amherst students will demonstrate against the Bakke decision this Friday, Oct. 14, at 11:00 a.m. in front of the Student Union building.

The Bakke decision is a recent California Supreme Court ruling which threatens to eliminate special admissions, Affirmative Action, and other related programs on the campus, communities, and work places across the country.

Alan Bakke charged he was the victim of "reverse discrimination" when supposedly "less qualified" Third World students were accepted to the UC Davis medical school. Bakke had been denied admission twice.

Demonstration organizers claim that "reverse discrimination" is meaningless in the context of a society which has historically institutionalized racism. They predict the Bakke decision will reverse the civil rights gains of the '60s.

Carter seeks help from Nigeria

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter urged Nigeria's chief of state to use his influence to hold down any increase in world oil prices, the White House said recently.

National Security Council spokesman Jerry Schechter said during the final talks between Carter and Lt. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, "The President urged that Nigeria help in holding down further oil price increases."

Schechter said Carter asked the leader of the oil-rich African nation to "consider the worldwide impact that an oil price increase would have" and Obasanjo replied "he would take it under consideration."

The first day of the two-day visit had been devoted largely to discussions of white minority rule in southern Africa.

Although the extensive discussions lasted twice as long as scheduled, no communique or joint statement was issued at the end of the official talks.

But Carter, speaking to reporters after he escorted Obasanjo to a limousine following their second White House meeting, said, "We made a great stride forward."

"I think recognition of Nigeria as an enlightened and important country has been a long time coming in our country," the President said.

"I'm very grateful the exchange took place," said Carter. "A few years ago, we had nothing but animosity between our governments. Now we have nothing but friendship."

At a White House working dinner hosted by Carter Tuesday night, Obasanjo said peaceful eradication of the policy of racial separatism in southern Africa would take too long. He said an armed liberation struggle by oppressed blacks there "is justifiable and will succeed."

Obasanjo denounced South African Prime Minister John Vorster and Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith by name.

He was scheduled to fly to New York yesterday morning to address the U.N. General Assembly.

The Real Third World Stand

Jose Trejo

Because Third World comes from the increasing necessity of non-aligned countries to seek other political and economic philosophies outside the scope of Capitalism-Communism, Third World means to pursue better and more comprehensive concepts and principles of freedom for all our people; is to work towards a clean development without waste and pollution as legacy for future generations; is to apply our technology in using more ecological and reliable non-fossil sources of energy i.e., solar, wind, tide, hydraulic, thermowave, or geothermal (geysers).

And thus, to acquire more and new social improvements while preventing from the sociological ills of Capitalism-Communism, such as; welfare, workfare, poorness, ghettoes, drug abuse, alcoholism, unemployment, pornography, prostitution, organized crime, illegal business, political corruption, discrimination, racism, sexism, deportations, child perversion, suicides, cancer, blackmail, redtape, consumer over exploitation, oppression, torture and incarceration, executions, wars, accidents, ecological disorder, and so forth.

But mainly, to live in peace with all humanity and nature, respecting each others' rights, and without polarizing the political beliefs of the world, as now aligned countries have established through military equilibrium poles, charged with horrendous weapons of destruction.

Third World also means the political and economic freedom from inaccessible foreign debts, unavoidable inflation, currency devaluations, multi-national corporations, economic trade blocks, foreign intervention, dictatorships, military coups, bribed governments, wealth and power manipulations, armed invasions, terrorism, CIA, KGB, and SOB that are undermining and draining our development and growth, and in addition having as a result, larger numbers of people homeless, hungry, oppressed, and exploited. In summary, Third World is the political belief of non-aligned countries in the right for self-determination in order to achieve an authentic freedom and peace for all our people that neither Capitalism nor Communism have succeeded to provide.

The legal system vs. Third World

October's organizing strategy has focused on the Legal System vs. the Third World community. Each month the New Africa House Steering Committee determines an educational theme. The organizational representatives then coordinate political and cultural events to meet the Committee's collective goals and objectives.

Several issues regarding the legal system have been highlighted in recent weeks. One is the controversy over the Bakke Decision and how it will affect Affirmative Action, special admissions programs and equal opportunity in housing. On Tuesday of this week a panel debate was held on campus. Today at 11:30 at the Student Union building the Anti-Bakke Coalition will rally and demonstrate in solidarity with the nationwide effort to reverse the Bakke decision. Unless we mobilize around this issue the reactionary cry of "reverse discrimination" threatens to become the law of the land.

Two weeks ago Craeman Gethers visited the campus on his first furlough since his imprisonment in 1975, Craeman (along with Earl Brown) was unjustly convicted of armed robbery and received a sentence of 8-12 years in Norfolk State prison. At the time of his conviction Craeman was a UMass student, he has spent the past two years of his life struggling to prove himself innocent of a crime he did not commit. Craeman will be visiting the campus on Oct. 25, again soliciting support for his defense. It is every student's responsibility to donate some time and money towards the goal of Craeman's freedom. He is trapped in a vicious, racist legal system that at one time or another will threaten us all.

A new member of the UMass Third World student community is Kenny Chin, one of two defendants in the Hirohito case. In Oct. 1975 he and co-defendant Liz Young were falsely accused of planning an assassination plot against the royal Japanese couple. Liz and Kenny have battled this case for two years. Although they received suspended sentences and were placed on three years probation, they are requesting a Supreme Court review in their last efforts to win justice.

Right here at UMass and across the country Third World people clearly recognize the brutality of the legal system. As students we must educate ourselves; by reading, by asking questions, by attending meetings and rallies, by contributing our time and money to the defense of political prisoners.

Brown's med school needs Affirmative Action

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — A top administrator says Brown University's four-year-old medical school needs an affirmative action program to improve its poor minority enrollment record.

"It is a must that Brown get an affirmative action program for the medical school," Levi Adams, the medical school's assistant vice president for external affairs, said Wednesday.

Four of Brown's 178 medical school graduates since 1974 have been from minority groups and only one of 60 students in the current graduating class fits federal definitions for a minority member.

Adams, a black, was asked by WJAR-TV if Brown's minority admissions for the medical school was a "deplorable record."

"Yes, it is," he said. "I think we can do better and we should."

Adams' comments followed arguments of the Allan Bakke civil rights case before the U.S. Supreme Court.

The white Californian claims he was denied admittance to the University of California Medical School because of "reverse discrimination."

Adams said a minorities recruitment program has been informally discussed but not yet implemented because of the school's relative newness. It opened in 1973.

He said the Ivy League school has been concentrating on admitting more Rhode Island natives into its medical program to counter fears of legislators that the program primarily is educating doctors who will go back to other states.

Ideally, minority admissions should fill 20 per cent of each Brown medical school class and Rhode Island natives should fill 25-33 per cent, Adams said.

Call for National Black Students' Congress

ACROSS the United States there is an all-out attack on the education of Black people. We find that cutbacks in government funds to education are making it difficult, if not impossible, for Black students to get needed scholarships and grants. Black colleges and universities are under constant economic attack and in many cases are being closed or integrated out of existence. In white schools Black students must content with culturally biased entrance exams and standardized tests. High schools are graduating Black youth that don't know how to read — it seems as though all-out war has been declared on Black education. Black students must organize to counter this attack and fight for better education for our people.

The Southern Regional Coordinating Committee of NBSA is calling for a National Black Students' Congress to discuss strategy for dealing with the problems of Black education and to lay out our plans and programs for the next year. We intend to draw students from throughout the nation to participate in this important conference.

NBSA was formed at a National Black Student Solidarity Conference which was held at Tufts University in Massachusetts in February, 1976. The participants agreed that there was a need for them to initiate the building of a national Black students' organization. The purposes of NBSA are to:

a. establish a strong line of communications between Black students across the country;

b. establish better communications and better working relationship between Black students and the rest of the community; and

c. organize Black students across the country to do serious work around concrete programs and issues that will bring our people closer to Liberation.

NBSA is sponsoring a conference on November 4, 5, 6, 1977, at Atlanta University in Atlanta, Georgia. The purpose of the conference is to bring Black students from around the country together to discuss Affirmative Action cutbacks and other problems facing Black communities around the country. Come and bring ideas for positive action. For details about the conference contact: Brother Kojo Owusu — Southern Region; P.O. Box 92001; Atlanta, Georgia 30314; (404) 758-8469.

For more information on NBSA and the Congress contact: Northeastern Region; Brother Tony Vandermeer; 14 Harvard Avenue; Dorchester, Mass. 02121.

CCEBS

All CCEBS students with an interest in computer science or a related field should note that on Wednesday, October 26, CCEBS is sponsoring a field trip to the Digital Equipment Corporation in Maynard, Mass. All interested CCEBS students must sign up for this trip with Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House by Friday, October 21. All those taking the trip will meet at 8:00 a.m. on October 26th in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House.

CCEBS juniors and seniors interested in the areas of employee relations and personnel should contact Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House before Friday, October 21. A field trip for a personnel career day is being planned, and openings for this trip will be extremely limited.

CCEBS students interested in law and business should note that on Monday, October 17, a Case Western Reserve Law School recruiter will be coming to campus; and on Tuesday, October 18, a Northeastern University Business School Recruiter will be here. Both of these recruiters will speak with interested CCEBS students in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House on the dates mentioned. The time for these meetings is 3:30 p.m. All those interested must sign up for these visits with Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House by Friday, October 14.

Any students interested in being on the CCEBS Board of Directors, please stop into the CCEBS Business Office and fill out an application. The CCEBS Board of Directors consists of 18 faculty and staff members, two graduate students and five undergraduate students. Its primary function is to establish policies for the CCEBS program. Each year seven students are chosen to be on the Board.

Black Panther loses chance for appeal

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Lonnie McLucas, whose murder arrest with 13 other Black Panther workers became a liberal cause in the late 1960s, lost a last-ditch attempt yesterday to avoid reimprisonment.

The activist turned North Carolina farmer was denied bail yesterday in U.S. District Court, Hartford. His $20,000 state bail is scheduled to be revoked Friday because of the U.S. Supreme Court recent refusal to hear his appeal.

However, the state's attorney required that he surrender yesterday afternoon to resume serving his sentence.

He surrendered at 4:30 p.m. yesterday and was taken to the Somers police prison.

McLucas, 33, now of Wade, N.C., was arrested along with Bobby Seale, national Black Panther chairman, on charges of murdering and torturing a fellow Panther worker suspected of being a police informer.

The only one of the 14 to be tried and convicted, McLucas was sentenced in 1970 to 12½ to 15 years in prison for conspiring to murder Alex Rackley. He was an illiterate from New York City who became part of Panther organizing efforts in New Haven in 1969.

After serving more than four years in prison, McLucas was released on bail in 1974 while the conviction was appealed.

His lawyers claim the state's case against McLucas is unconstitutional for a number of reasons including the use of illegal wiretaps to get evidence and the refusal of FBI agents to testify in 1970 about their role in the investigation.

New Haven police have admitted to numerous telephone taps in the 1960s and early 1970s, including one on Black Panther headquarters in early 1971, while the state was preparing to try Seale and Ericka Huggins, another Panther organizer. McLucas and more than 70 other persons are suing local officials, claiming wire taps violated their rights.

U.S. District Court Judge T. Emmet Clarie refused yesterday to rule on McLucas' claims, saying the issue should go first to the state courts. But he added that the two issues were "substantial" claims for a state judge to decide.

House decides against bill to support gay rights

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts House yesterday, in the third consecutive day of increasingly bitter floor debate and intense lobbying efforts, killed a bill prohibiting discrimination against homosexuals in civil service jobs.

Opponents turned what appeared to be a rising tide in favor of the measure when Rep. Charles W. Long, R-Dover, offered an amendment which would have further restricted the number of state employees affected by the bill.

The measure, authored by Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, was rejected Tuesday but the House reversed itself Wednesday and voted to reconsider the bill when Ms. Noble said it would be modified to exclude police, firefighters and correctional officers.'

Long's amendment, passed on a 118-105 roll call, would also have excluded employees of the Department of Mental Health and Retardation and non-teaching jobs in elementary and secondary schools, a huge portion of the civil service jobs involved.

Ms. Noble said the Long amendment "destroys the bill" and House Speaker Thomas W. McGee then killed the amended version and called for debate on the original measure.

At that point Ms. Noble called for an immediate vote, saying "This House has been through an emotional time. The House has shown that there are some very compassionate people here and, on the other hand, there are those who have felt the brunt of the debate."

She said many of the members were still feeling the effects of a recent abortion debate and that may have affected their judgement.

"Thank you for giving me the sentiment of the House," she said.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, one of the prime supporters of the bill, said the previous votes of the day had shown the unamended bill would be defeated.

Debate fell along the same lines as the previous two days, with opponents claiming homosexuality is a dangerous deviation from the norm and supporters claiming gay people should be judged on their abilities to perform a job rather than their sexual preferences.

Carter may negotiate to aid steel industry

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter, calling sagging steel profits "a long-standing, chronic problem," said yesterday that he might negotiate with other nations to decrease their exports to the United States but added that such action alone will solve nothing and might hurt consumers.

Carter gave his assessment at a nationally televised news conference before meeting with members of Congress, steel executives, union leaders and representatives of environmental and consumer groups to discuss the industry's flagging sales and closing plants.

The closings have resulted in some 19,000 layoffs.

The steel industry is pleading for government protection against imports. But Carter and his top advisers, including special trade representative Robert S. Strauss and Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, are opposed to steel quotas.

News in Brief

Dayan releases peace document

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan in a surprise move yesterday released the text of the joint U.S.-Israeli "working paper" on a renewed Middle East peace conference in Geneva.

Dayan, speaking to the Knesset parliament on terms of the working paper, read the seven points of the document. They are:

"1. The Arab parties will be represented by a unified Arab delegation which will include Palestinian Arabs. After the opening session, the conference will split into working groups.

"2. The working groups for the negotiation and conclusion of peace treaties will be formed as follows:

"A. Egypt-Israel
"B. Jordan-Israel
"C. Syria-Israel
"D. Lebanon-Israel

"3. The West Bank and Gaza issues will be discussed in a working group to consist of Israel, Jordan, Egypt, and the Palestinian Arabs. All the parties agree that Lebanon may join the conference when it so requests.

"4. The solution of the problem of the Arab refugees and of the Jewish refugees will be discussed in accordance with terms to be agreed upon.

"5. The agreed basis for the negotiations at the Geneva peace conference on the Middle East are U.N. Security Council resolutions 224 and 338.

"6. All the initial terms of reference of the Geneva peace conference remain in force, except as may be agreed by the parties."

1 million dollars missing from vault

CHICAGO [UPI] — Exactly $1 million in cash disappeared from First National Bank of Chicago's main vault Columbus Day weekend, bank officials disclosed yesterday. The FBI said the bank may have been hit by a "sneak thief."

The money, apparently in several parcels, was taken from a four - by - seven - foot, dark green cart labeled T-12, First National Senior Vice President Homer J. Holland said.

The locked cart was locked in a steel cage which was inside the main vault two floors below ground level, he said.

There was no evidence of tampering with any of the locks or with the cart, he said.

He said the missing bills were in three denominations but declined to say what they were. He also would not say how the bank determined that exactly $1 million is missing.

Chimp's heart used for transplant

CAPE TOWN, South Africa [UPI] — Heart transplant surgeon Dr. Christiaan Barnard implanted the heart of a chimpanzee into a human yesterday. Groote Schuur Hospital said the patient apparently was recovering satisfactorily.

Barnard tried to implant a baboon heart into a chronic heart patient earlier this year, but the patient died within hours.

The hospital gave no details of the operation, but medical sources said it probably was similar to the "piggy back" operation Barnard pioneered four years ago, implanting a second donor heart beside the patient's own to assist respiration.

The four-hour operation ended at 8:30 p.m., 2:30 p.m. EDT.

6 ton elephant held for ransom

ATLANTA [AP] — An American firm whose 6-ton, 12-foot-tall elephant is being held by armed kidnapers for $1,500 ransom in the Burmese jungle said yesterday that police are closing in on the brutes.

Police in Burma and Thailand have already arrested three men in the case, including a Mr. Pong, who is thought to be the mastermind of the scheme, said a spokesman for Atlanta-based Munford, Inc.

The elephant was stolen Sept. 30 from a work camp in Thailand just a few miles from Burma by men using automatic rifles and hustled across the border. The company spokesman said he didn't know how many others are involved or exactly where they had managed to hide a 6-ton elephant.

Bakke—human potential and human denial

By DR. BOB DANIELS

Editor's note: Dr. Bob Daniels is Associate Dean of Students, and is teaching a course entitled "Interracial aperception and ideology."

Every humanistically-oriented American (white and non-white) recognizes the invidiousness of Allan Bakke's challenging the constitutionality of special admission programs designed to ameliorate the perennial effects of racism not only in the medical profession but in the American social order as well. Bakke's actions appeal to insecurities, emotions and intrigue. At best they have resulted in racial, sexual and educational confusion throughout the nation.

This article will discuss a historical perspective of the case, statement of the case, affirmative action, special admission programs and implications for the American social order.

Historical Perspective

As a manifestation of the "separate but equal" ideology which plagued our nation since the famous Plessy v. Ferguson case of 1896, Allan Bakke's rationale for demanding admission to the University of California Medical School at Davis reeks with the mentality that produced the "grandfather clause" which "admitted" blacks into the voting booths provided that their grandfathers had voted prior to the Emancipation Proclamation. The fact that racial classifications have had an odious impact throughout nation's history cannot be denied, especially in the medical profession. I grew up in the South where whites and non-whites received health care in segregated doctors' offices, hospitals and clinics. Ten months ago I accompanied a seriously ill friend to a doctor's office in McGhee, Arkansas. We sat on hard, pew-like furniture for approximately three and a half hours in a small segregated room because the doctor's policies were that only whites could make appointments.

Only a few decades ago Dr. Charles Drew, the brilliant black physician who invented the process of separating blood from plasma, was involved in an automobile accident. He was rushed to the nearest hospital emergency room. Upon his arrival he was told he was in the white emergency room and had to go around to the back to the colored emergency room. When he got there a doctor (member of the AMA and "believer" in the Hippocratic Oath) told Dr. Drew that the hospital didn't have any black blood and that he couldn't use any white blood. Ironically, Dr. Drew bled to death, because of the racial proscriptions of that hospital.

The American Medical Association employs one of the most powerful lobbys in the U.S. Congress. The National Medical Association is basically powerless, although it was founded because the AMA refused to admit black and other minorities into its membership. It should be no surprise that one of the most pressing medical problems in our society is the paucity of medical services available to residents in minority and poor white neighborhoods.

Statement of the Case

In 1973 and 1974 Bakke applied for medical school admission and was denied both times. He did not apply for consideration under the special admission program which had a total of 32 places out of 200 for the two-year period. Bakke had a higher grade point average and Medical College Aptitude Test scores than the 32 minorities and 34 white students who were accepted over him. The medical school maintains that its traditional admission criteria had let it become a nearly all-white, segregated institution. Consequently, it adopted the special admission program at issue in this case to overcome the exclusionary effect of its past policies. The school maintains that in view of the current needs of the medical profession and of society generally, the attainment of a racially desegregated student body made up of qualified students of all races is more important than the perpetuation of a segregated school composed of students with the highest objective academic credentials.

Independent studies by Dr. Jane Mercer and Dr. James Myeski have shown that all standardized tests are 20-30 per cent culturally biased in favor of the white middle-class environment. I should emphasize that my research revealed that Davis' special admission program did not sanction the admission of unqualified applicants simply because they were minorities. The program revealed an awareness of additional factors that should be considered in evaluating the acceptability of minority applicants, i.e., socio-economic, cultural, and potential.

After having read Bakke's charges of racial discrimination, it became abundantly clear that he had no problems with the school's having accepted 34 white students whose scores and grade point averages were lower than his. Also, at 36 years of age, Bakke could have challenged the school on the basis of age discrimination, since 36 is an atypical age for one to normally begin the study of medicine. I agree with the school's decision to deemphasize MCAT scores and grade point averages for minorities, because such a decision is invulnerable to constitutional challenge. Such academic credentials bear little, if any, significant correlation to a minority student's eventual achievement in the medical profession. Other nonacademic qualities (e.g. energy, compassion, empathy and dedication) correlate significantly in the delivery of health care services to minorities and the poor of the white race.

Affirmative Action

Affirmative action programs have often been referred to as "reverse discrimination." This is the charge that Bakke asserts in his appeal to a concept of fairness. Bakke's interpretation of the 14th Amendment has led him to question the role of affirmative action in protecting his constitutional rights as a white male. I maintain affirmative action programs are not "reverse discrimination" if properly formulated and implemented. All such programs that I have seen seem to be basically conservative efforts designed to enable minorities, women, handicapped and aged citizens to gain and maintain entrance into the economic, educational and social mainstream of our nation.

Any affirmative action program worth its salt has to deal with the obstacles that have prevented these groups of Americans from entering the mainstream, e.g., the network of kinship, friendship contacts, and de jure as well as de facto segregation. Although I find the terms "discrimination" and "reverse discrimination" undesirable concepts in human relations, I must admit that there are examples of bad faith and outright resistance and intimidation, disguised in the armor of affirmative action.

Special Admission Programs

During the summer of 1975 I lived for six weeks with a Mexican family in Guadalajara. Never before in my life had I been reminded

Hero worship—insight a necessity

kevin knobloch

True Heroes today are a rare commodity. As a result, we become reluctant to let go of our heroes, often in spite of our ideological changes.

I have been known to admit, even while among my educated friends, that John Wayne remained by childhood idol long after his performance in The Green Berets. His ridiculous efforts to "Combat Godless Communism by shooting gooks," however, were not lost on me in later years.

Aside from the factor of ideological change, problems develop when several individuals make a point to discuss their heroes. Heroes, it seems, differ from person to person, according to each individual's intellectual scope, media saturation and personal values.

For example, while everyone in the group might agree that fighting injustice is a common quality necessary to enter the hero class, their ideas of what injustice is will inevitably vary. Individual A might decide that Larry Flynt's crusade against censorship is combating injustice, while individual B sees Anita Bryant's anti-gay efforts as having redeeming social value.

Within a student community, however, it might be safely said that most of the heroes, despite the often extreme variance in their methods, all believe in the same basic human needs — the liberation of the oppressed and manipulated masses. A small group of misled unfortunates, however, will undoubtedly go as far as to picture the life and times of David Rockefeller and Ronald Reagan as potential hero material. The university should be so lucky.

My discussion of heroes brings me to a unique kind of white knight, one who exists within the establishment and seeks out social change through constitutionally approved methods.

My hero, in this respect, is Ralph Nader.

While hesitant to place anyone on a pedestal, I find Mr. Nader to be a person of keen insight and able leadership. His most attrative characteristic seems to be his strong belief that the citizenry of America is being royally screwed, and screwed bad.

Nader is similar to other anti-government and -big business crusaders, in that he readily points out and documents the various ways capitalist interests have made a profit at the expense of our health and welfare. My fascination with this man, however, is that he doesn't leave the young idealist with visions of doom, of all-powerful bankers, industrialists and Pentagon generals plotting to manipulate the masses. He insists that there is indeed hope and outlines several plans of action that my be taken to combat those who carelessly decide that individual human rights are expendable.

Nader's advice for consumers who pay the bill and they can call the tune if they organize. It's the taxpayers who pay the bill and they can call the tune if they organize," Nader told his audience here at the university last week.

Nader, through his low-key, confident appearance and lawyerly efficiency, represents a serious threat to the big money interests. Nader, and what he represents, also offers a different perspective of social change to those who tend to avoid being radical, but see the need for radical change within the system.

Heroes may be found in many facets of society, but for me, a hero must be an advocate of the human cause and have a total grasp of the problems that afflict today's masses. In the following quote, Nader illustrates these qualities to my satisfaction.

"Invisible changes are taking place every where. We feel them every minute of every day and they are having cataclysmic overtones as to how we operate this society. This is leading to a significant kind of tyranny. The key democratic principle of man's control over his life is being abused. Unless we do something about it, we're suddenly going to wake up a nation of slaves."

Lesbian Union to meet

To the Editor:

Monday, October 17th will be the first general meeting of the school year of the UMass Lesbian Union. The meeting will begin at 3:30 in 923 Campus Center. Hopefully, this meeting will give women a chance to meet with one another, drink tea, share ideas, get to know each other, etc.

The Lesbian Union exists to serve the needs of women-identified-women through such services as drop in, counseling, speakers bureau, referrals, library of women's books, and social activities. We are in need of more input, or else we won't be able to meet these needs. We hope that this meeting will initiate new activities and programs for ourselves and for the community. All interested women are welcome to attend. For more information, call the office at 545-3438. Thank you.

Cross-burning not reported

To the Editor:

Last Wednesday night was the first evening of disco at the Bluewall, which many Third World students attended. The fact of the cross-burning outside on the lawn went completely unnoticed by the Collegian on Thursday. We feel that by not informing the public immediately, the Collegian staff has not performed its duty to the University. People must be made aware of such racist acts so that these attitudes can be combatted. We denounce the Collegian for neglecting to report the cross burning, particularly since this is the second such incident to happen in Amherst this semester.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Separatism as a phenomenon

fifi ball

Separatism.

I'm not going to talk just about lesbian separatists or black separatists, but the phenomenon itself.

It occurs when movements for a certain type of social change — the extinction of some group's oppression — are young. We decide all men are sexist, all straights anti-gay, or all whites racist, and build our lives around that. It stems from the existence of what some see as an indelible socialization process. It comes from our mass acceptance of Freudian theory — that what we're taught when young will stay with us, in some form, for our entire lives.

But we're more flexible than that. Almost every one of us, black or white, was taught, sometimes in subtle ways, other times more blatantly, that blacks are inferior. Almost every one of us, female or male, learned that women are less than whole people. And almost every one of us learned that being gay is sick and unnatural. We even learned to believe our safety depended on massive weapon production, wars like Vietnam, and keeping abreast of the Russians. Some of us have obviously been able to overcome some of those ideas.

The process of changing one's mental picture of the world, after 20 years of sometimes radically different experiential indicators, is not easy. Often our associations foster those changes in attitude most rapidly and thoroughly.

Isn't it a good thing to try to relearn those patterns? The philosophy of separatism seems to exclude, at least temporarily, allowing for the very change to occur in the society which caused the need for separation.

No, straights are not all anti-gay. No, whites are not all abominably racist. And, no, men are not all intolerably sexist.

Viewing the scene practically, we all live together on a fairly small planet. Long-term separatist philosophies deny us the potential to solve our global problems.

Separatism inherently fosters distrust and antagonism. It enables us, as people who see the need for social change, to be divided, and therefore conquered, defeated. We need to deal with the problems collectively, and so derive our fullest strength.

A UMass bedtime story

bob melia

On my infrequent visits home, I occasionally baby-sit my godchild, a precocious eight-year-old who always demands a bedtime story. As I believe bed-time stories should be on a level of complexity equal to the child's intelligence, I often tell him tales about the UMass Student Senate. He liked my last tale so much that I'd like to share it with you.

"Long, long ago, in a state far, far away," I began, "there was a big pasture with 20,000 sheep in it. This pasture was fenced-off into lots of little fields and each field was home to several hundred sheep. Each little field elected a couple of sheep to represent their field at the weekly sheep meetings, and these special sheep were called Shepherds.

"All appeared to go well, but soon some problems developed. One of the biggest problems was wool-color. Most of the sheep had white wool, but a few had black, brown, red or yellow wool. Most of the sheep were brought into this pasture from far-away pastures, so they called themselves 'Third Pasture' sheep. These Third Pasture sheep argued that they were under-represented in the weekly sheep meetings because some white-wooled sheep didn't like them and wouldn't vote for them when they ran for Shepherd.

"To solve this problem the Shepherds created a special Third Pasture Caucus, but couldn't define just exactly what a Third Pasture sheep was and thus, in their infinite wisdom, decided to let anyone who declared themselves Third Pasture run on the special Third Pasture ballot. To no one's surprise (except the Shepherds') some white-wooled sheep ran on the Third Pasture ballot and won. This angered, embarrassed and bewildered the Shepherds, and made them seem even more ludicrous than usual.

"The white-wooled sheep who were elected on the Third Pasture ballot argued that Third Pasture was a state of mind and that because they were sincerely interested in the welfare of Third Pasture sheep they would make good Third Pasture Shepherds. But the non-white-wooled Shepherds demanded they resign because they insisted that Third Pasture was much more than just a state of mind.

"They said that the rules of the pasture were arranged so the white-wooled sheep got all the nice juicy grass and the Third Pasture sheep had to survive on crabgrass. Unless you had eaten crabgrass all your life, they continued, you couldn't really know what it was like to be Third Pasture and thus you couldn't represent Third Pasture sheep.

"Just then a white-wooled sheep, Jay Flynn, stood up and bleated at the Third Pasture Shepherds, 'If you can't stand the crabgrass, get out of the pasture.' This infuriated the Third Pasture sheep and their white-wooled supporters, and soon the two sides were calling each other woolists.

"As soon as this name-calling began it was obvious to all detached observers that no further progress would be made. Within the hour the brightest Shepherds also arrived at this conclusion and persuaded the Third Pasture Shepherds and the white-wooled sheep who wanted to represent Third Pasture sheep to step outside and settle the matter amoungst themselves.

"While all this was going on, some Shepherds who belonged to the Sheep Organizing Project (SOP) took the opportunity to argue for transforming the weekly sheep meetings into a Sheep Flock. They said that a representative form of government was unable to adequately protect sheep interests, especially when we couldn't even agree on which sheep should represent which other sheep. A decentralized, participatory Flock would eliminate this problem, they claimed, because we could all represent ourselves.

"They also insisted that only with a Flock would sheep be powerful enough to resist attacks by the wolves who lived on Mount Whitmore. This seemed to strike a responsive chord in the sheep, especially when they remembered that the wolves were extorting more and more tribute for fewer and fewer services.

"At this point the Third Pasture shepherds returned and announced that two of the three white-wooled shepherds had agreed to resign but the third shepherd could stay. This satisfied no one, thus making everyone happy.

"This manner of making decisions," I continued, "is not at all unusual. In fact it is the way in which the Shepherds usually decide matters. There appears to be no reason behind any of the decisions made at the weekly sheep meetings, and to this day no one has figured out how, why or for whom the Shepherds make decisions. The only clue to their method of operation is a book a Shepherd once inadvertently left behind. The title read, Wooling Through Intimidation."

I took a deep breath and was about to relate the further adventures of the woolly-headed Shepherds when I noticed my godchild was fast asleep.

Facts misrepresented concerning Mass PIRG reception

By ESSIE SCHWARTZ

It is unfortunate that in his column following Ralph Nader's speech at UMass on October 8th, Jim Paulin chose to misplace the emphasis of what was important in Nader's visit and in doing so misrepresented the facts of that which distressed him.

FACT: It is logistically and practically impossible on a campus as large as UMass to invite 20,000 plus people to a "personal" discussion with a prominent guest. Contrary to Paulin's assertions, receptions for distinguished guests are not always open to the public. When Dick Gregory recently visited UMass under DVP sponsorship there was no "open" reception. There are, however, dinners for the speakers and DVP members, paid for by Student Activities funds.

FACT: Not one cent of MassPIRG's monies contributed by students was spent on the speech or the reception. Independent TELCAG campaign funds paid over $1500 for the speech and expenses. The Student Senate contributed an additional $500. The reception itself was paid for by BDIC at a cost of $2 per person.

FACT: The "elitist clique of consumerist snobs" who were in attendance consisted of: students who had been out on the streets petitioning for the previous two weekends; students who were devoting 10-20 hours per week coordinating PIRG projects; students who had hung posters, served as ushers, spent hours transporting Nader to Amherst and assisted in numerous other ways in making the event happen; students representing organizations on campus also working on environmental and consumer issues; and student representatives of campus media — WMUA and three persons from the Collegian staff; all in an attempt to reach as broad a population representation as allowed by both budget constraints and physical layout. (We defy anyone to prove that room 903 can hold more than 35 people sitting or 50 people standing).

FACT: All MassPIRG events are open to the UMass community as well as other Five College PIRG schools. In particular, we extend a personal invitation to Paulin and everyone else to attend one of PIRG's organizing meetings, petitioning sessions, strategy planning meetings, issue discussions outreach sessions, lobbying workshops, etc., etc., etc., whether or not any prominent person happens to be there.

FACT: MassPIRG sincerely regrets that greater student participation in Nader's visit, via extensive audience questioning immediately following his speech was cut short due to transportation delays and prior commitments in other parts of the State.

Additionally, we regret the confusion caused by the mistaken announcement inviting the audience to the Campus Center.

However, to the hundreds of UMass students who regularly participate in MassPIRG activities, and the hundreds more who are not only welcome but encouraged to become involved, we invite you to stop by the MassPIRG office on campus (413C SU) or in town (Carriage Shops) and we'll give you a brand new initiative petition FREE.

★ Bakke case

so often (mostly inadvertently) that I was an American. The family was indeed kind and equally intelligent. They were able to separate me from the negative regard they held for our multi-national corporations which were exploiting their country, e.g., Pepsi Cola, Kentucky Fried Chicken, and McDonalds. They expressed disdain for the special admissions programs in their medical schools which at that time had enrolled approximately 4,000 American students. This family was representative of the views of many Mexicans. As a Third World developing country with an inordinately high percentage of poverty, disease, and death, it seems only logical that they would rather the doctors whom they train remain in the country and provide health care for its citizens. Conversely, once trained, the overwhelming majority of the Americans returned to the United States to eventually embark upon the practice of medicine within a more lucrative social and economic system.

Ellen Goodman of the Boston Globe maintains that universities have always had "affirmative action" programs which they called admissions policies. According to Goodman, these policies were of the socially accepted sort that filled the professional schools with socially accepted people, primarily white males. The following are examples of such socially acceptable admission policies:

Program PULL. Under this aegis, the offspring of old school-tied alumni, aristocrats, the well-endowed and the well-endowing are given more than a slight edge over the madding crowd. Goodman states that these students are recognizable chiefly because they move their lips while they read.

Program JOCK. Under this kindly umbrella, the admissions committee may overlook test scores, high school grades and all evidence of illiteracy if the candidate is swift of foot, keen of eye, and can memorize a T-shape formation before Thanksgiving.

Program SPREAD. This is a geographic distribution which enables a farm boy from Butte, Montana to win a slot at Yale over 17 straight "A" students from Bronx High School of Science. Goodman further asserts that there is an "INTEREST DISTRIBUTION" plan under which a university can give extra points for those who help build a "balanced class", i.e. one chess champion, two music buffs, four budding politicians and a partridge in a pear tree.

Although I cannot speak to the claims columnist Goodman makes, I can comment on the largest minority admissions program in New England, the CCEBS Program. Over a decade ago our university established the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students as an initial step in combating a legacy of racial discrimination — a legacy that had not produced a black Ph.D. through the entire history of our university. In addition to official state and federal funds invested in the program, many faculty members (white and non-white) made and continue to make weekly financial contributions to the program.

What we have observed here is that minority students and poor white students recently admitted to the university through the CCEBS Program are better prepared than many of their earlier predecessors who were admitted after this affirmative action program was instituted in the late sixties. Such a trend suggests that real opportunity improves motivation and commitment to academic development. This is due in part to the fact that secondary education no longer operates under the "separate but equal" mentality and consequently recent CCEBS students have had broader curricular experiences than earlier ones. Although minority students are still basically struggling with certain aspects of academic and social life, there are increasing numbers of members who out-perform some students admitted under traditional admissions criteria.

Implications

Without doubt the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in the Bakke case will have as much impact on the American social order as the Plessy v. Ferguson decision did in institutionalizing the "separate but equal" doctrine. In the latter case the decision in the area of transportation played a key role in maintaining segregated educational institutions. Whatever the court's opinion is in this educational test case it will surely impact all levels of human interaction in our society. Already we have witnessed a federal judge ordering the same medical school to admit Rita Clancy, a 22 year old Russian immigrant, who charged that the same minority admission program barred her admission.

Those of us who care about human rights and the quality of life that should exist in a free society need only look back to the Brown v. The Topeka Board of Education case and the historically humane decision the U.S. Supreme Court made then to recognize the crisis Bakke has created. We know what is at stake — the commitment and ability of this nation to again confront its most pernicious, perennial human problems, i.e., man's inhumanity to man.

Finally, those of us who recognize the importance of the present U.S. Supreme Court's making an affirmative decision in favor of the medical school know that more integration of the human spirit and mutual respect for those who are racially, sexually, chronologically and physically different from ourselves takes place in our educational institutions than in our isolated and insulated families and institutionalized religions. In fact, it has been the educational institutions that have enlightened and brought about much of the meaningful change in domestic and religious settings. One needs only to remember Vietnam to recognize how the integration of the human spirit forced an end to man's inhumanity to man in a distant land. Obviously, the human potential of the handicapped, females, and aged are inextricably bound to the race issue Bakke has raised, for they too are engaged in a similar human struggle.

There is hope for the Allan Bakkes of our land. They can rethink and reeducate themselves in a culturally diverse environment or have some vicissitude suddenly place them in a different socio-psychological reference group. They might experience an automobile accident as did Roy Campanella; survive it as a paraplegic. They can go to a physician who injects a dark dye into their veins and leave the doctor's office a black person as John Howard Griffin did. They can just grow old and increasingly conscious of how inadequately our society treats the aged and subsequently join the Gray Panthers. In any event, they will no longer appeal to insecurities, emotions, and intrigue; they will appeal to some national program designed to foster human potential, and ironically it just might be the one they are challenging today — affirmative action.

THORENS TD 165C

This fully manual belt drive transcription turntable has for many years been the machine by which all others are judged. Low mass arm, superb suspension and German precision are but a few of its fine features. Fitted with an Empire 4000D1 cartridge, this turntable not only carries a suggested retail of $249.90 but will outperform all but the most exotic turntables.

Sugg. Retail including Empire 4000 D1 $249.80

marantz® 2216

The marantz 2216® is an up to date version of an older but still excellent model (model 2215B) that one of our competitors still features in their antiquated systems. The main improvements have been phase lock loop FM, a cleaned up phono pre-amp section and a more durable power supply that allows you to keep the volume levels up, and trips to the shop (yes we have one in Amherst) down. At its advertised price of $249.95 the 2216 is an excellent buy,

DOONESBURY by Garry Trudeau

MR. TREVOR, WERE ALL YOUR REASONS FOR SEEKING SO LARGE A SETTLEMENT AS PRAGMATIC AS THE CHILD SUPPORT?
WELL, NO, I'LL HAVE TO ADMIT TO ONE SOMEWHAT MORE EMOTIONAL ONE..
AS YOU MAY HAVE READ, MRS. ONASSIS'S JOB AT VIKING PRESS IS VERY IMPORTANT TO HER! NO ONE TREATS HER DIFFERENTLY THERE, AND THAT MEANS A GREAT DEAL TO HER!
IN FACT, I WOULD VENTURE TO SAY THAT THAT LITTLE BOOK COMPANY PROBABLY MEANS MORE TO HER THAN ALL THE TEA IN GREECE!
GREECE?
SO ANYWAY, WE FELT SHE SHOULD BE IN A POSITION TO BUY IT!

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN HAVING ME TELL YOU SOMETHING FOR YOUR OWN GOOD?
I'M NOT SURE
WELL, IF IT WILL HELP YOU TO MAKE UP YOUR MIND...
I'D ENJOY IT, TOO!

WHAT NEXT? by Dick Janssen

NEWZ ITEM:
THE FIRST INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON ICEBERG UTILIZATION ENDED LAST WEEK.... THE SAUDI ARABIANS WANT TO TOW ANTARCTIC ICEBERGS TO THEIR HOMELAND TO BE USED FOR FRESH WATER...
100°
-20°
...THE PRIMARY PROBLEM HAS BEEN: HOW TO KEEP THE BERGS FROM MELTING TOO QUICKLY DURING THE TRIP...
THE MOST PROMISING SUGGESTION CAME FROM A LOCAL MALE STUDENT WHO SUGGESTED:
"HIRE SMITH WOMEN TO SIT ON THEM... THAT'LL KEEP 'EM COLD!!"

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14 — Born today, you possess a quick and eager mind, which is an asset in whatever you undertake. It is one thing to be good at what you do – which you are – but it is an outstanding thing to be both good and enthusiastic. Whatever is required of you to succeed at any project, you can manage to learn quickly. What cannot be learned, however, is the intensity of interest in the involvement – something you have by nature.

Your mental activity does not necessarily mirror your physical activity. It may be quite the opposite, for there are signs that you may be physically lazy. You are not quick to become involved in sports. You do not walk when you can ride. You would rather not participate at all if it requires physical effort beyond what it is your daily habit to put forth.

This does not mean that you are physically incapable of performing well and over long periods of time; it merely means you prefer not to. On the other hand, should you indulge yourself in laziness, you may become physically weak and, perhaps, even relatively incapable.

You are attractive to and attracted by members of the opposite sex and it may be difficult for you to settle on a single relationship that could lead to a permanent partnership. Marriage, therefore, may come to you late in life, if it comes at all. You will enjoy many years of "playing the field." In the end, you will look to marriage to cap your happiness and return the feelings of well being you had as a young man or woman.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The present situation on the home front may keep you from making the most of an opportunity to improve your own position.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov. 21) — Contemporaries look to you for advice and support.Don't pretend to know more than you do – but don't be overly modest either.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Guide young people along paths that can bring them to a better knowledge of themselves and the work they are capable of.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Keep your efforts close to home where socialmatters are concerned. Don't attempt to win over one who is disinterested in the process.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Morning is the time for family effort. Try to rouse sleepyheads early enough to take advantage of their know-how before noon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take care that a tendency to believe everything you hear does not lead you into an unnecessary period of panic.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Listen to gossip if you wish – but don't spread what you hear. This is a good time for considering your next move regarding your career.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Go about the business of meeting new people tactfully and you will surely make gains socially. Know your imbibing limitations.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Welcome any who demonstrate a willingness to help with the present at-home project. Direct your attention toward the young.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — It is impossible to be both mundane and special at the same time. Choose the niche you wish to fill and then fill it – and only it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Family need may necessitate your earning something extra at this time. You can win out against an old adversary at evening.
